They make ribbons of every conceivable color and variety, from six to ten yards in length, and dcapable of writing with copying or non-copying ink. Some ribbons are made which print in one color and show an entirely different color when the manuscript is copied by means of the letter press. For instance, a ribbon which writes black may copy blue or green, making the record much more legible on certain qualities of paper. The manager of a concern in New York, says the New York Sun, which turns out several hundred ribbons daily, said that, at a low estimate, 50 plants engaged in the manufacture of these ribbons have been established in the United States this year.

Each manufacturer has a secret process for making his particular style of ribbons, and the secret is guarded with the greatest possible care. One maker in this city has each box and jar containing powder or pigment for making the ink distinctly numbered, and even the employe who mixes it is obliged to follow his printed instructions mechanically, and remains entirely ignorant of the composition he is using. One may witness the whole process and go away as ignorant as before.

The best ribbons have selvaged edges, which prevent their ravelling and curling when in use. They are nearly uniform in thickness, though one ribbon is made of very thin texture, to be used when an extra large number of carbon copies are desired, and the imprint of the type must be as clear as possible and free from blurs. The greatest care must be taken in selecting the cloth from which the ribbons are made. If the texture is woven too closely it will not hold sufficient ink, and smirch the paper. Moreover, such a ribbon will fill the type of the machine and greatly annoy the operator. A prime difficulty encountered by manufacturers is how to prevent the evaporation of ink from the ribbon when it is in use and exposed to the air. This has been largely overcome in the last two or three years.

The man in charge of a large New York house which makes writing inks and typewriter ribbons, said recently that the most noticeable thing in his trade was the great decrease in the sale of ordinary copying ink. It is being almost entirely supplanted by the copying typewriter ribbon, which gives far better results. Despite the great number of ribbons in the market and the constant efforts of expert chemists everywhere to produce one that will satisfy everybody, those giving all-round satisfaction are not easy to find, and dealers in supplies of this nature often have extreme difficulty in furnishing what is wanted. This country furnishes practically all the typewriter ribbons in use both here and abroad.

THE change from the extremely delicate coloring of the past few years with such monotonous effects, to the stronger, richer colorings of to-day, is not so much a change in fashion as an improvement in taste. When a decorator was timid or inartistic, he avoided strong colors as a child avoids the fire. He had little or no conception of how to use them; hence he remained in the cold montony of whites and grays. If now and again he tentatively ventured in colors, the results were so awful that he would shrink in horror from another such attempt. Some bolder and more callous spirits made picturesque and kaleidoscopic effects which they urged upon innocent and amiable people as artistic; but that sunflower æstheticism did not last. It had the merit of garish effect or of artistic sensationalism only. It could not last. Good taste, like good sense, will always prevail. As a sort of protest against the sunflower sensationalism, the dainty period of creamy-white timidity came into vogue. Many decorators knew that oddities of form and color could not be used in marble halls and maidens' boudoirs, but they did not have the independence to risk an open defiance of the prevalent style. They found a sort of refuge under "A Milk White Flag" of nonentity. The wall-paper manufacturers assumed the risk of putting colors into their papers for this season. The results are beautiful in the products and profitable to the consumer. Strong, rich colors are precisely what the people were waiting for; employed judiciously, they are precisely what they should have. This is an era of strong colors. It is also an era of good taste. It is the period of the golden mean between the eccentricities of the sunflower sensationalism, of riotous vulgarity, and the dreary daintiness of whitey timidity. It is not only philosophic to use strong colors, but it is artistic, æsthetic, and delightful—the climax of all things true, good, and beautiful.

THE MANITOBAN MINORITY

The Province to Be Asked to Give Them Justice.

A DECISION AT OTTAWA TO-DAY

Synopsis of the Demand of the Manitoba Catholics—Collection of Duties on Postal Parcels Valued at Over $10—Canadian Grain Reimported Must Pay Duty—News From the Capital.

Ottawa, March 18.—A feverish anxiety seems to prevail all over the country as to the outcome of the present deliberations of the Cabinet. The Ministers sat for over three hours Saturday, but it was a preliminary canter, so to speak, on the Manitoba school question. Monday this knotty problem will be decided. Telegrams of enquiry have been pouring in for the last two days from all parts of the Dominion, but there is but one answer to give.

Three Ministers were absent from Saturday's meeting—Sir Frank Smith, from indisposition; Mr. Ouimet, who was attending a Liberal-Conservative convention in the new riding of Labelle (east half of Ottawa County, Quebec), and Mr. Ferguson. Mr. Ouimet will, of course, be at Monday's meeting, and Sir Frank Smith will also be present. During the course of last evening, a sub-committee of ministers had Sir Charles Tupper's report under discussion.

There was, of course, considerable disappointment Saturday night around the clubs and hotels when the report became current that no conclusion had been reached, but the wait will not be long. Speculation is rife as to the course the Government will take, and on this question your correspondent sees no reason to recede from his intimation of a week ago.

What is it that Catholics of Manitoba have asked? Their request is comprised in five paragraphs:

1. That the Governor-in-Council may entertain their appeal and consider the same, and may make such provisions and give such directions for hearing and consideration of that appeal as may be thought proper.

2. That it may be declared that the Greenway acts of 1890 do prejudicially affect their rights and privileges with regard to denominational schools which Roman Catholics had by law, or practice, in the province at union.

3. That it may be declared that these acts do affect the rights and privileges of the Roman Catholic minority of the Queen's subjects in relation to education.

4. That it may be declared that to the Governor-in-Council it seems requisite that the provisions of the statutes in force in Manitoba prior to the passage of the Greenway acts should be re-enacted, in so far at least as may be necessary to secure to Roman Catholics in Manitoba the right to build, maintain, equip, manage, conduct and support these schools in the manner provided for by the said statutes, to secure to them their proportionate share of any grant made out of the public funds for the purposes of education and to relieve such members of the Roman Catholic Church as do contribute to Roman Catholic schools from all payment or contribution to the support of any other schools; or that the Greenway acts of 1890 should be so modified or amended as to effect such purposes.

5. And that any further order or declaration be made as required for the purpose of affording relief to the Roman Catholic minority of Manitoba.

With regard to the first paragraph, the appeal has been allowed and the hearing has taken place. It is therefore disposed of. Paragraphs 2 and 3 may be taken together, and as the Judicial Committee has declared that the rights and privileges of the Roman Catholic minority of Manitoba in relation to education have been prejudicially affected by the statutes of 1890, and as Mr. McCarthy has admitted that the Catholics have a grievance, it is difficult to see how the Governor in Council can avoid making the declaration asked for. Granting that such a declaration will be made, what then? It necessarily follows that the attention of the Manitoba Government and Legislature must be called to the matter on the lines of paragraph 4 and invited to act as there laid down. They cannot fairly and constitutionally do otherwise. The present session of the Legislature will last two weeks longer. Possibly this may not be considered by Mr. Greenway a sufficient time in which to make his curve. Well, let matters go over until next session. Even The Globe has recommended that it would be well to remember the saying, "Make haste slowly." Manitoba will be given a chance to act fairly. If she refuses, then under the constitution there will be no help for it but for the Dominion Parliament to step in and enact such legislation as will cover the judgment of the Judicial Committee and meet the views of the Roman Catholic minority.

About two years ago Mr. Craig, horticulturist at the Central Experimental Farm, commenced growing different varieties of tobacco at the farm here. They were carefully harvested by the single leaf process and sent to Mr. Fortier, the well-known tobacco manufacturer, for report. The result is most encouraging. Mr. Fortier says tha some of the samples are equal in quality to any imported tobaccos, and as fine as any he ever saw.

The success of the Robertson mixture for feeding cattle is assured. Experiments made here on three sets of steers show that animals fed on this mixture, which consists of corn ensilage, sunflowers and beans fatten as well as those fed either on corn ensilage, roots and meal, or hay, roots and meal, and from four to five cents per head per day cheaper.

Hon. John Costigan was unanimously chosen as the Liberal-Conservative standard-bearer for Victoria and Madawaska at a largely attended meeting held at Andover, N.B., on Friday.

In order to insure uniformity in the collection of duty on architects' plans imported into Canada for use in the erection of buildings therein, the Controller of Customs has, under the provisions of sub-section 2 of section 65 of the Customs Act, determined the value of duty of such plans to be as follows:

Each set of original drawings or single set of blue prints of same, if brought into Canada as a substitute for the original drawings, 2 per cent. of the estimated cost of the building to be erected thereon.

Same, if accompanied by details, 3 per cent. of such estimated cost.

Details, or blue print of same, if imported separately, 1 per cent. of the estimated cost of such detail.

When additional sets of blue prints of the same set of drawings are imported, such additional sets of blue prints are to be valued for duty at $5 per set in addition to the value of the original drawings, or first set of blue prints imported in lieu thereof, as above.

Some time ago it was announced that the Government had decided that duty must be paid on Canadian grain returned to Canada. The official order is as follows:

The question of the importation to [illegible] of Canadian wheat, or other grain, which had been stored in United States bonded elevators for some time previous to its re-shipment to Canada, having arisen, and there being doubt on the part of Canadian customs officers as to how such importations should be treated, collectors are instructed that all such wheat, or other grain, which has been so stored and bonded in the United States is liable to duty, under tariff item 53, when the same is brought back to the Dominion.

It having come to the knowledge of the Customs Department that the practice has obtained at some ports of allowing post parcels of large value to be included in the general entry prepared and passed by the customs clerk in charge of the post parcels branch after the duty has been collected, instead of insisting on the importer himself passing the entry at the custom house, collectors are to see that in future all packages received by mail, and being of a greater value than $10, must be entered in the "Long Room" by the importer or his agent, and must be treated in all respects in the same way as similar goods arriving by ordinary freight or other trains or by vessels or other means of transportation.

The argument before the Supreme Court in Lewis v. Alexander, commenced on Friday afternoon, was concluded at 3 o'clock Saturday. Judgment was reserved.

It being Saturday afternoon the court adjourned without entering into a fresh case. Wilson v. Corporation of Elgin will be taken up Monday morning.

Few men on this continent have done as good exploring work as William Ogilvie, D.L.S., of Ottawa, and the honor conferred upon him a few years ago by the Royal Geographical Society in presenting him with the Murchison Medal was admittedly well deserved. It was after Mr. Ogilvie's venturesome trip through unknown territory in the Peace and Mackenzie River country. In a day or two Ogilvie is expected to return to Ottawa from his arduous labors up the Taku River in Northwest Canada. This week Hon. Mr. Daly has received a preliminary report from Mr. Ogilvie, which is of great interest. He left here early in December, and at Victoria started out with a party of five to explore the country from Taku Inlet to the head of Teslin Lake, by which route it has been proposed to construct a wagon road in the interest of developing British Columbia trade, and to make a careful survey of that little-known territory. Ogilvie started with his men for the head of Taku Inlet, a distance of about 30 miles. Making his way up this river eighteen or twenty miles to the head of the survey of that stream made by the United States coast survey party in 1893, he continued his survey of the river and the country surrounding it, almost to the head of that stream, hitherto untouched territory. At this point the snow was so deep and soft that it was found impracticable to proceed further at any profitable rate of speed, and taking advantage of a few fine days in the early part of February Ogilvie climbed several of the peaks in the vicinity, and photographed the country all around, making a photo-topographical survey of the stretch of territory between the head of Taku River and Teslin Lake. Every clear night observations of latitude and longitude were taken, to determine the party's position, and though the weather was very unfavorable the results obtained in four or five weeks' work will fill up a great gap in the map of the northern portion of British Columbia. Mr. Ogilvie's observations will be reduced here. For the present, therefore, he cannot give much information regarding distances, heights or grades. The country is generally rough, and mountains are fully as precipitous as any others along the coast, perhaps more so. About 90 photographs were taken. During the progress of the work the weather was abominable. On the up trip gales prevailed, and against these it was at times almost impossible to stand. They whirled snow about in blinding, confusing masses, until little was left of the river at all. This did not, however, exhaust the supply, as clouds of snow were constantly blowing down from the mountain tops. The thermometer during this time was from zero to 15 degrees below. While the gales prevailed, with the mercury at this mark, every bit of skin had to be carefully protected from the wind, or it was instantly frozen. The first two days, the party being unprepared for such winds at this temperature, all were more or less frost-bitten. One man broke through the ice and got wet to the thighs. He was hurried into the woods, and though less than five minutes had elapsed his socks had to be cut away. The "Taku winds" were succeeded by tremendous falls of snow, which continued without a break or interruption until Feb. 7. From that time till the 13th ult. the weather was beautifully clear and calm, only a gentle breeze disturbing the atmosphere, and though the thermometer was at from 20 degrees to 30 degrees below zero none of the party suffered any inconvenience. It was during this time that the photo-topographical survey was made. As Mr. Ogilvie's time in the field had more than expired he retraced his steps towards the coast. The second day after starting back the snow again set in in a way that is only known in Alaskan solitudes. The storm continued without interruption, except that it rained every two or three days, converting two or three feet of freshly-fallen snow into slush, until Feb. 27, when the coast was reached.

WIMAN'S CASE TO BE PUSHED.

The District Attorney Not Disposed to Let the Case Drop.

New York, March 18.—District Attorney Fellows said this afternoon that he would carry the case against Erastus Wiman for forgery in the second degree, which the general term of the Supreme Court yesterday decided should be retried, to the Court of Appeals. "It is a very important case," said Col. Fellows, "and it will be carried to the highest court of the state by this office." Wiman is now at liberty under $30,000 bail.

WORKING A BLUFF ON SPAIN.

New York, March 18.—That Uncle Sam is determined not to be caught napping in the controversy with Spain over the firing upon the steamer Alliance by a Spanish warship in the Caribbean Sea is shown by the orders which were received by Commander Sicard at the Brooklyn Navy Yard yesterday.

He was ordered to lose no time in preparing all the warships in the yard for sea service, and the work was at once begun with a large force of men on the Maine, the Puritan and the Terror.

The Vesuvius, which has been blowing up derelicts, is ready, and every warship on the Atlantic will be ready in a month.

Captain Rogers of the Brooklyn Navy Yard says that every warship on the Atlantic Coast will be ready for service in a month, and if Spain feels like fighting Uncle Sam will meet her more than half way.

THE ST. THOMAS TRIAL

Particulars of the Reserve Cases Granted.

BOTH PRISONERS BROKEN DOWN

The Prisoners Admit That They Have Had a Fair Trial—Mr. Osler Permanently Retained by the Government to Prosecute All Murder Trials in Ontario—Notes of the Case.

St. Thomas, March 17.—The indications are that the conviction of Hendershott and Welter at the first Spring Assize Court held this year will be followed by convictions all around the circuit. The many recent failures of justice have aroused the public as never before, and the man who is proven guilty of shedding the blood of his fellow need expect only justice during the year of our Lord 1895. The mercy and compassion shown by jurors in the past will be absent during this year of grace. The conviction of Hendershott and Welter is of interest in more respects than one. It is the first conviction for a class of crime which of late has left a trail of graves throughout the entire province—a crime committed for the gratification of sordid greed alone—a crime which implies a deliberation, a hideous ingenuity, a demoniac patience, a fiendish persistence, a relentless cruelty, which are appalling. But justice has been retributive and swift upon this first pair who embarked in the dark system of converting human beings into corpses and cash.

To say that the verdict was expected by citizens generally would be to say what was not true. It was the same story repeated in every murder case. As soon as the men were arrested the opinion was unanimous that they were guilty and the public wanted them hanged at once. When the date of the trial approached the public veered around. It still thought the accused guilty, but there wasn't enough evidence to warrant a jury in convicting! Already there is talk of circulating a petition for the commutation of the sentence. But the hand of justice, inexorable and pitiless, will never for an instant be stayed for the sake of the orphaned daughters of the elder prisoner, or the aged father and mother of the lieutenant whom he enlisted.

Chief Justice Meredith had never any doubt of the guilt of the accused after the evidence for the prosecution was in. Although his address was construed as favorable to the prisoners, it was because he put the most favorable construction on every circumstance which was brought up against them—he gave them the benefit of the doubt in every instance.

The able manner in which Norman McDonald conducted the defence of the accused called forth repeated compliments from both judge and prosecuting counsel. On all points of law he displayed learning and alertness. His cross-examination realized every opportunity that the situation presented him. He was ably assisted by Mr, J. A. Robinson.

The medical testimony told against the accused. Surgery is in a position to arrive at a conclusion just how wounds are inflicted. It can tell whether a tree, a weight or a blunt instrument caused death. The confession made by Welter that he had struck the blows with the flat side of the ax reached the authorities. Then the physicians were summoned to a conference, the ax was fitted into the wounds and all was explained. There could be no possible doubt after this. Dr. A. J. Johnson of Toronto rendered invaluable assistance to the Crown, as did Coroner Gustin of St. Thomas.

Detective Murray sealed the fate of the accused when he caused the corpse of the deceased to be exhumed the morning after his arrival at St. Thomas and got a dozen medical men to examine it. This was the cleverest piece of work in the whole case, which bristled with excellent detective acumen.

The prisoners had expected an acquittal, and until a few minutes before the verdict was returned, when their counsel prepared them for what was coming, they were hopeful of at least a disagreement. After they had been removed to the cells they completely broke down. Hendershott spent a sleepless night, but Welter enjoyed a fitful slumber of an hour or two. All day yesterday they were in a most despondent state, and although allowed to see their relatives all efforts to cheer them up were unavailing. Hendershott says he does not care for himself, but his grief is for his two daughters, who will soon be orphaned. The breakdown of the prisoners is as striking as was their coolness and bravado before the bringing in of the verdict.

Detective Murray returned to Toronto yesterday. He goes to Stratford next week to prosecute the Chattelle case.

It is a singular fact that the day of the conviction should be the twentieth anniversary of Detective Murray's appointment on the Government force. Both the judge and Mr. Osler congratulated him on the way in which he had worked up the case. It was probably the most complete chain of circumstantial evidence ever presented in a court of justice.

Mr. Osler's eloquent tongue will not again be heard pleading for the acquittal of persons accused of murder. The Ontario Government has permanently retained the master of jury rhetoric to prosecute all murder trials.

Elgin has had many expensive murder trials in the past, the Long Point mystery and the Stillwell murder having cost fully $15,000. The costs of the present trial will reach fully $8000. The Crown witnesses cost $1800, the fees of the medical witnesses alone totalling $677.30. The petit jurors were paid $1800 and the constables $316.

David Hendershott, father of the murdered boy, has requested Detective J. W. Murray to have the head of his son reinterred with his body. Mr. Murray will ask the Attorney-General to grant the request.

The only hope of a lease of life that the condemned men can possibly have is for a favorable decision in the reserve case granted by His Lordship. The crime of which they have been convicted is such a horrible one that a reprieve would hardly be granted. It is probable that the execution of the sentence may have been put off for three months by Justice Meredith so as to enable counsel for the prisoners to argue their cases in Toronto. The reserve cases granted were to Mr. J. A. Robinson, counsel for Hendershott, and are on the following points:

That there was no evidence to go to the jury as against Hendershott.

That the evidence of Mrs. McConnell and Mrs. French had been improperly admitted.

That the insurance contracts were not proven to be valid, as there were no signatures proven.

THREE KILLED IN A TOLEDO FIRE.

The Roundhouse of the Wabash Railway Bhrned.

Toledo, O., March 18.—A fire attended by loss of life occurred in this city Sunday morning at the round-house of the Wabash Railway. Three men lost their lives, two being instantly killed. Nine others were more or less injured, one of them it is thought fatally.

The dead are:

R. H. Bohlman, 56, painter, married, seven children.

J. J. Preston, 35, car inspector, married.

John Bowen, 18, spectator.

The injured are:

H. F. Howard, back bruised, face cut, slightly burned. John O'Leary, skull fractured; may die. Patrick McDonogh, skull fractured, shoulder broken. Martin Greenburg, head cut. Harry Zimmerman, leg sprained. Louis Decker, head bruised. Henry Garding, head bruise dand cut. Casper Becker, T. C. Lauer, neck sprained, head cut.

All of the dead except John Bowen were employes of the Wabash Railway. They constituted the company's fire department for the protection of the shops, and were engaged in fighting the flames when the accident occurred.

The round-hous eis located at the foot of South-street. It was a substantial brick strcutrue, with a capacity of 20 engines, and contained six locomotives when the fire broke out. The flames were first seen in the cupola that surmounted the roof, shortly after 10 o'clock. An alarm was telephoned to the city fire department, and in the meantime the yard company got one stream playing on the blaze, which soon made its way to the roof.

The walls of the building were believed to be secure and the firemen pressed closely in towards the building. It was seen that the roof would soon fall, but no danger was apprehended from that source until the southwest wall, weakened by the destruction of the frame supports that connected it with the roof, was observed to tremble and suddenly fall out on the volunteer firemen. Before the majority of the men could realize their peril the heavy wall was down on top of them, burying them under a heap of smoking debris. All but Bowen, Preston and Bohlman were quickly taken out. Bowen and Preston were dead when found. Bohlman was unconscious and succumbed to his injuries shortly after being taken home.

The round-house was completely wrecked, and the six engines stored there were rendered useless. The loss is estimated at from $75,000 to $100,000, and it is believed to be fully insured.

BELLEVILLE, MONDAY, MAR. 18.

IT WON'T WORK.

Mr. Laurier's latest trade policy, namely "Free Trade as it is in England," will not be any more successful than any of its numerous predecessors. In fact that policy, which involves direct taxation, is dividing the Grit party—which, happily, is not wholly made up of insensate partizans who prefer party triumph to their country's welfare. As in 1878, when a great many influential Liberals left their party and united with their political opponents in support of the National Policy, so now the more intelligent and patriotic members of the party, now that the great issue between the Government and the Opposition is the retention or the destruction of the system of moderate protection to our manufacturing, farming and other industries, are declaring in favor of their country.

Considering the disastrous experience of the United States in placing a free trade party in power—a mistake which they have already remedied, (so far as is possible under their system of irresponsible rule, and which would have been rectified months ago under Responsible Government as it exists in Britain and in Canada), our people would be extremely unwise to make such a change as Mr. Laurier proposes, and which the gentlemen to whom we have referred refuse to sanction by their silence or to support with their votes.

Amongst the Liberals who have declared against the policy of free trade is Dr. Cameron, ex-Grit M.P.P. for Huntingdon, Quebec, a man of much influence in the Eastern Townships, who will support the Conservative party in the next election.

Mr. A. F. McIntyre, Q.C., of Montreal, who is a prominent and influential Liberal, has come out at length on the subject, and says:

> It would be nothing short of a calamity if the people should endorse Mr. Laurier's trade policy—Free Trade as it is in England, and the destruction of every vestige of protection in the tariff. Nothing but the rankest want of consideration on the part of the people can induce them to endorse this view. The mere suggestion of such a policy in the event of a so-called Liberal success is at the present time disturbing the trade of the country. How much more will it disturb and unsettle trade if, upon a Liberal victory, it should be put in operation? I am a believer in a tariff so adjusted that the raw materials and other things that we do not produce shall come in free, and that the taxes shall be levied on the articles we manufacture, thus giving incidental protection to our manufacturers and work to our people. This was the policy inaugurated by Sir Alexander Galt and Sir Francis Hincks, two of the ablest financiers it will be confessed that Canada has had, and that has been sought to be continued, particularly in the readjustment of the tariff by Mr. Foster. We can rely upon internal competition lowering the prices of the manufactured article, as has been found in the United States and here. Each year the competition has been bettering the quality and reducing the price of the manufactured articles of Canada. This is indisputable. I do not believe in giving our markets, manufacturing and agricultural, to the Americans and other foreign nations and getting nothing in return.
> I would be willing to accept a limited reciprocity treaty, but I think, in view of the attitude of the United States for the past thirty years, since the last treaty was abrogated, it is a misleading of the people to suggest that such a treaty can be got. A limited treaty would be a good thing for Canada, doubtless, but the Americans, believing that they can press us into annexation, and partly through the log-rolling dishonesty of their politicians will not allow us any treaty that we can accept. We must get along without it. Therefore, I look forward to the time that, from a sense of self-interest, they will further reduce their tariff, as we have done. We shall then get their markets despite them, and without a treaty, and at less disadvantage to ourselves. They require our products more than we require theirs.

Mr. McIntyre's utterances are such as will meet with acceptance from all who do not allow prejudice to usurp the place of reason. His example will be followed by many adherents of the party to which he belongs.

The Hamilton Spectator also notes that it was recently proclaimed in joyful chorus by Grit journals that Sir Donald A. Smith disapproved of the Conservative policy, and would not support another Conservative Government; but the answer came promptly and decisively from Sir Donald himself, who declared himself emphatically against any attempt to interfere with the present trade policy, and agreed to run as a Conservative candidate in Montreal. In the political firmament there appears to be no star of hope for the Grits.

EDITORIAL BREVITIES.

Toronto News: The system of buying supplies for public institutions without tender causes a loss of thousands of dollars every year. Messrs. Cavan, McNaughton and McNeil, all Patrons, voted in favor of the retention of this system. In so doing they voted directly against the fourth plank in their own platform, which calls for "rigid economy in every department o public service."

The Premier in his speech at the Opera House said that Newfoundland had the richest fisheries in the world. A man was heard to remark afterwards that he felt like telling him to come off the perch, and another said the Premier was only "coddin." Perhaps he is right, they may have the richest fisheries but they have the poorest people. The fisheries are controlled by a few persons who grow rich while they 'cod' the people.—Ontario.

Newfoundland is blessed (or cursed) with a policy which is the nearest approach to free trade in the world, England not excepted. And it is to such a policy that the Laurier party would lead this country.

A Reminiscence of Mr. Tasse.

(Thomas Brossoit in Montreal Gazette.)

The recent and untimely death of the Hon. Joseph Tasse, Senator, an old and distinguished journalist, revives memories of a highly interesting and pleasurable trip, namely, the great Press excursion of 1884. The party comprised many other well-known names, some already gone to rest, and many of them since become familiar figures in public life. The others who were among the party, and who are since deceased are Dr. Roi, of Quebec; Mr. W. R. Climie, of Bowmanville, at the time of the excursion secretary of the Ontario Press Association, and Mr. George Daw, of Toronto, a prominent young Freemason. The remainder of the party was composed of the Hon. James Young, ex-Treasurer of Ontario, and Mrs. Young; Mr. Jules Tessier, now M.L.A. for Portneuf, and Madame Tessier; Capt. L. F. Pinault, now M.L.A. for Matane; Mr. John M. Martin, of the Globe, Toronto; Mr. Thos. Brossoit, editor of Le Progres de Valleyfield, and now a Q. C., and his daughter, Miss Brossoit; Mr. N. LeVasseur, of Quebec, the present Vice-consul for Brazil and secretary for Quebec Board of Trade; Mr. J. C. Drewry, advocate and editor, of Napanee; Mr. John J. B. and Mrs. Flint, of Belleville; Mr. John King, of Berlin, Ont.; Miss Matheson and Mr. Arthur J. Matheson, editor and advocate, and Mayor of Perth, Ont., a son of the late Senator Matheson; Miss Libbie E M. Newbatt, of Toronto, and the Hon. B. de la Bruere, editor of Le Courier de St. Hyacinthe, now Speaker of the Legislative Council. Although there were no less than eighty-six persons, ladies and gentlemen, in the party, the larger portion went as far as Duluth only. The above named, however, instead of breaking up at Duluth, continued the journey as far as Yellowstone National Park—a magnificent and instructive trip it was. In the summer of 1883, when the Ontario Press Association were down the Saguenay on one of their annual excursions, they extended a hearty invitation to the members of the Press of this province to share their excursion of the following year, and which was to start from Toronto, and go thence to Duluth, taking in all the principal towns and sights on the way. A start then was made from Montreal on August 1, 1894. Arriving in Toronto the next day the annual meeting of the association was held and even to this day the grateful feelings of all those who participated in the excursion are cherished for the intensely hospitable way all were treated in the Queen City. From Toronto they proceeded to Point Edward and thence to Duluth by boat, where most of the party returned home. All along the route and at every town where a stop was made the citizens turned out en masse to do honor to the representatives of the Canadian press. At Duluth the party, composed of those mentioned above, had a special car in waiting and a start was made for the Yellowstone National park, the park of America. At Livingston and Cinnabar, Montana, short stops were made, and finally the party put up at the Mammoth Hot Springs hotel in the Yellowstone National park. The long trip together in the one car had put all the party on terms of intimacy and it was a large and united family breaking up at the journey's end. As for the late Senator Tasse, he was the life of the party; he was the leader of the "Kazoo band," and a general favorite with all. The adventures that one or two of the party had with some of the "natives of the wild and woolly west" afforded endless amusement to the rest, the anxious and desperate endeavors of Mr. King, of Berlin, to become the proud possessor of a grizzly bear skin in particular, and he will ever be remembered for this adventure anyway. The death of Senator Tasse has awakened these memories, and made each and every member of the party in imagination to repeat the great Press Association excursion of 1894.

ELECTROLYZED OF SEA WATER.

It Is Said to Be Working Wonders in Purifying a French City.

The most wonderful stories are told of the disinfecting power of sea water after electrical treatment, as exhibited at Havre, where experiments upon a large scale have been made under the direction of M. Hermite, the inventor of the system. The following is an extract from the special correspondent of The London Standard: "A central station for the proper electrolyzing of sea water had been established at Havre, on Quai Lombardie, near the Angouleme bridge, and pipes in connection with it had been laid through all the streets of the St. Francois quarter, inhabited by some 12,000 people of the poorest classes and formerly the hot-bed of every infectious disease. The electrolyzed sea water forced through the pipes had, however, effected a marvelous change. The streets watered with the disinfecting liquid by means of hose connected with the pipes had lost that putrid odor which formerly made them not only repugnant but an ever-present danger in the very center of the town. In addition to this two of the most insalubrious houses in the district had been chosen by M. David, the town architect, for the appointment of the Hermite system to dwellings. One of them was situated at No. 24 Rue de la Fontaine and the other at No. 35 Rue d'Edreville. A large tank connected with the electrolyzed sea water mains had been placed at the top of each of these six-story buildings, and pipes from the tanks carried down to flush the closets and sinks on the various floors. In the case of the house No. 24 Quo de la Fontaine, the now odorless water from the syphons of the closets and sinks was conducted through pipes to the street gutter, down which it ran some distance before it ultimately fell into the sewer. The object of this arrangement was to offer the public a constant, visible and olfactory proof of the purifying qualities of electrolyzed sea water. The disinfectant liquid, so to say, consumed the sewage matter as well as the microbes it contained, and in passing along the gutters and through the sewers it contributed to the disinfection of both of them by the chlorine it still contained. With the Hermite system all the sewage water could, without inconvenience, be allowed to flow into the sea or even into rivers, for it purifies instead of contaminating them."

IRISH WANT DISSOLUTION.

Disintegration of the Rosebery Government.

HELPLESS TO PASS LEGISLATION

The Local Veto Bill Stoutly Opposed by the Irish Party—The Speakership Fight Very Bitter—Two Peculiar Ecclesiastical Precepts—The Big Shoe Strike—Influenza and the Death Rate.

New York, March 18.—A special cable from London to The Tribune says: Lord Rosebery is slowly recovering from the effects of the influenza, but his illness has left behind it a serious recurrence of his old trouble, insomnia. If this affliction cannot be overcome it is regarded as highly probable that Lord Rosebery will resign the premiership. In any event that result cannot be far off. The force of circumstances will before many weeks compel an appeal to the constituencies, and no one doubts that the result of a general election will be the defeat of the Ministry.

The last week has witnessed another symptom of the rapid disintegration of the Ministerial party. The introduction of the Veto bill into the sessional program was largely, if not entirely, the work of Sir William Harcourt. The Irish members, while welcoming the assistance of the veto party, chiefly Radicals, in their Home Rule campaign, have never been zealous to purchase that help at the cost of pledges to support the Veto bill. In case of Welsh disestablishment they willingly adopted the well-known methods of log-rolling, because Welsh aspirations in no way affected Irish interests; but in the case of liquor legislation the Irish members were naturally unwilling to give pledges that would bring them into collision with the very large liquor interest that specially prevails in Ireland. Irish whisky and Dublin stout are staples of the country. When, therefore, the Nationalist members realized that Sir William Harcourt was about to force his pet veto project upon Parliament in order to discharge the Ministerial obligations to the teetotal party, they took definite action in order to restrain him. It has been intimated to the Ministerial whips by more than a dozen Nationalists that while they were willing to assist the Government with Welsh disestablishment and with the promised resolution about the Hous eof Lords, they declined to aid the passage of the Veto bill. This intimation, coupled with the possibility of nine Redmondites going into the lobby against Sir William Harcourt's measure, and the certainty that many Liberal members interested in the liquor traffic in England and Scotland will also desert the Government, if they do not actually join the Opposition, seriously jeopardizes the passage of one of the most important measures of the Ministerial program. It shows further that, excepting upon Welsh disestablishment, which is sure to be rejected by the Lords, and the resolution against the Upper House, even th eIrish Nationalist vote has ceased to be trustworthy. Irish members know perfectly well that the Government is helpless for legislation, and Mr. Redmond's demand for early dissolution is becoming the watchword of the entire party. From these circumstances it follows that dissolution is only a question of a few weeks. The issue just described is so generally accepted by all politicians that surprise is expressed that Mr. Arthur Peel was unable to wait till the completion of the session before resigning the Speakership.

The color of the week's parliamentary debates has been chiefly notable for the remarkable unanimity with which the men now in office have accepted the policy of their predecessors in regard to the navy. The attitude of Lord Rosebery's Cabinet is in striking contrast with the line adopted by Mr. Gladstone and Sir William Harcourt when the latter were in the Opposition. For this reason the Conservatives of to-day have pardoned the inconsistency of their opponents, and last week has witnessed many expressions of warm approval of the Ministerial policy from the Opposition benches; even the criticisms of the Conservative leaders were delivered in a sympathetic spirit, and the great subject of naval defence was completely lifted out of the arena of party issues.

Ballard Smith, in his cables, says: The definite statement was published here last week and cabled to America that Lord Rosebery had actually resigned. This is not true. Lord Rosebery was with difficulty persuaded from resigning, even up to the very time of his interview with the Queen the day before her departure for Nice. I understand that she exacted from both him and Lord Salisbury, whom she significantly summoned immediately after the interview with Lord Rosebery, that disruption shall be avoided during her absence. The quarrel over the Speakership, however, has attained such bitterness as is unprecedented in the English history of that office. The avowed candidacy of Henry Campbell-Bannerman, the Secretary for War, is so fiercely opposed by Sir William Harcourt that a fatal split in the Cabinet is considered very probable. If it should come, the resignation of the Prime Minister and a general election would be almost compulsory.

With to-day the great boot and shoe lock-out culminated, and fully 200,000 operatives of all grades are out of employment. Only three centres of the industry—Stafford, Norwich and Bristol—in all England are keeping their factories open. The dispute is so strictly technical that there is no public feeling whatever on either side.

The Sun's London cable says: The influenza epidemic does not subside as rapidly as was hoped. The official figures of the mortality will show an increase in the death-rate in London. The number of deaths from influenza in the last two weeks is 769. This exceeds the total of the entire year of 1894. The strange winter pestilence is by no means confined to the metropolis. Even in Scotland the death-rate in February was the highest ever known and 45 per cent. above any previous February since records were kept. The influenza is peculiarly malignant in certain places. Three sisters died of the disease at Rochester this week, and it was necessary to postpone the funeral because all the mourners were prostrated by the same malady. The medical profession in Europe holds out no hope of a panacea or practical means of holding the plague in check.

Public attention has been attracted this week to two ecclesiastical precepts from high authorities. Archbishop Walsh has established a new qualification for holiness. He has issued a regulation in his archdiocese in which he directs that no one, child or adult, shall be admitted to confirmation or instructions in preparation for it who has not been vaccinated, or who having reached the age of seven years has not recently been vaccinated.

The Archbishop of York sent a letter enjoining on the clergy "the greatly diminished use of tobacco" and other acts of self-denial during Lent.

An Affectionate Mother.

"The most affectionate mother I ever knew," said Col. Golington, "and I believe all mothers are affectionate, is the wife of my young nephew, Claude Gosllngton. When their young child was sick its mother took its medicine for it. It was some sort of bitter medicine and when it came time to take it the child said: 'I can't take that; it is nasty!' Well, 'oo needn't take it, Regie; mamma will take it for 'oo.' And she did, and thereafter at the appointed times she took Regie's medicine for him regularly. Regie got well, notwithstanding that he didn't get his medicine; but what child could stay long sick with such a mother as that?"—New York Sun.

Addison had regular and quite pleasing features, unmarked by dissipation.

The Duke of Wellington had a great Roman nose, and a stern, forbidding face.

Vitellius had very gross features. He is said to have weighed over 250 pounds.

Napoleon III. had a dull, almost stupid face. He generally seemed half asleep.

Pepe's features were small and delicate. All his life he was very pale and looked sickly.

Wordsworth had what would be called a negative face. It was as colorless as much of his poetry.

Paganini looked like a caricature of a man, so thin was he, with every feature exaggerated.

Pepin the Short, father of Charlemagne, was only 5 feet high, but had a beard down to his waist.

Raphael's face, painted by himself, represents him as a man with more than usual personal attractions.

Alcibiades had a typical Greek face, and was called by a contemporary "the handsomest rascal in Athens."

Bulwer Lytton was always considered an ugly man. He had a large, coarse nose, thick lips and heavy, dull features.

Hawthorne had the kindly face and manner of a village pastor. More than once he was mistaken for a preacher.

Lord Clive was thin and keen-faced. He had the appearance of a man always worn down by lack of food and rest.

Victor Hugo's face is described by those who knew him as far from kindly than his pictures would seem to indicate.

Like many other men who have done a great work in the world, Luther was at first thin, then became quite fleshy.

Calvin's face was too strongly marked to be called handsome. Impressive and stern are the words that best describe his features.

Almost without exception the American leaders in the Revolutionary War were thin, while the British generals were stont men.

Dickens' face was not disagreeable, but his manner with strangers was not always pleasant, and sometimes was quite offensive.—St Louis Globe-Democrat.

OXFORD DOWN SHEEP.

The history of the sheep industry in this country is one of almost ceaseless fluctuations between a boom and a panic. With almost cyclical regularity one has followed the other. Just now the industry is in the very trough of the wave, in consequence, as heretofore, of hostile legislation. The slight barrier of import duties between our markets and foreign wools have been not merely lowered, but totally overthrown, and American wool growers have to encounter the competition of the world.

But this extreme depression in the wool market has created increased interest in the heavy mutton breeds of sheep. However cheaply wool may be imported, the mutton supply must be mainly produced at home. True, the prices for mutton have also declined, but the outlook for mutton is more hopeful than for wool in the immediate future. While the holders of fine-wool sheep must sell out on ruinously low markets, or hold on at little profit, if not absolute loss, until the return of better times, the holders of middle and long-wooled sheep may reasonably expect fairly remunerative prices for carcasses whatever may be the condition of the wool market. Besides, the heavy breeds of sheep are generally held in comparatively small flocks, a few on each farm, and do not constitute the leading industry of their holders, as in many cases do fine-wooled sheep. Holders of mutton sheep seem largely disposed to hold their flocks and keep right along raising lambs and mutton. An indication of this was visible at the last Chicago fat-stock show, where the entaies in the down and long-wooled sheep classes compared favorably with the exhibits of more prosperous years. The display of Southdowns, Shropshires and Oxfords were particularly good, while long wools and merinos were quite fairly represented. Of the Oxford classes the entires of R. J. Stone, of Illinois were specially fine, and took all the prizes but one. His yearling wether, "Stone," a portrait of which is shown in the accompanying illustration, was awarded first in his class and was at the head of the premium pen.—American Agriculturist.

SAM BROWN'S FIRST KILLING.

A Nevada Desperado Whose Career of Crime Was Started by a Bully.

"At my first meeting with Sam Brown, the famous desperado, he did me an honor that few men would care to receive," said Wash Parker, an old-time Nevadan. "He invited himself to be my companion on a two days' wagon journey. I was starting out one morning with a wagon and a pair of horses from a little mining settlement known then as Goldcrop. As I came opposite the hotel a large man standing on the veranda hailed me and asked if I was going to Virginia City, I answered yes, and he said:

'"I reckon I'll go along with you.'

"'I'm Sam Brown,' he added. 'Maybe you don't have much confidence in me since hearing my name, but I reckon we'll travel along together all right.'

"Well, there wasn't anything to be said but 'All right;j umpa board,' and Sam Brown with his carpet-bag in his hand and his pistols bulging out under his coat came out to the wagon and took his s at beside me. He proved a civil enough companion and we got through to Virginia City all right with nobody killed on the way. He had taken along a bottle of prepared cocktails and I had a box of cigars, so that the time passed rather sociably as we made our journey together.

"We went into camp that night at Sandy Springs, about half way to Virginia City, and in the course of the evening he told me something of his life and adventures. One thing in particular that I remember was the way he came to start out on his career of killing. I don't recall whether it was in Texas or Missouri that this first affair happened, but it was when he was a hulking young fellow, green and chicken-hearted, to use his own words in telling it. There was a certain gambler in the town who used to bully and abuse him whenever they would come together, and whenever the gambler saw him in a saloon he would kick him about and drive him out of the place. One day a man unfriendly to this gambler said to Sam:

"'Why do you stand all this abuse from that gambler? Take this pistol and the next time he crowds you, kill kim.'

"Sam took the advice and the pistol, and the next time the gambler went for him, instead of sneaking away and looking sorry he shot his tormentor dead. After he had thus got his hand in, killing men came easy to Sam and he made a long score before his own time came.

"Though, as I said, we made our journey together all right, I knew it would take too little to set things to going wrong for me thoroughly to enjoy Sam Brown's society. I wasn't sorry to set him down at the Primaventura saloon in Virginia City, where we took a drink together, shook hands, and went our different ways."—New York Sun.

LUCKY THIRTEEN.

A Man and Wife Reunited After Thirteen Years.

In the hurly-burly of life strange things ofttimes occur, and one of the most peculiar drifted to the surface last Wednesday. It was simply the unexpected and startling reunion of a married couple who separated under very unhappy circumstances thirteen years ago to the very day, and almost to the hour that the meeting occurred. Thirteen years ago there lived in a little town not far from Cairo, Ill., a young couple at that time not long married. Their honeymoon had barely ended when at an early summer picnic a fight occurred between a lot of tough interlopers and several male members of the picknicking party. During the melee one of the rowdies was terribly slashed with a knife in the hands of the young married man—the subject of this sketch. His victim did not die, but was marked for life. The young husband was tried and sentenced to three and one-half years in the Chester penitentiary. He served his time, but when he returned to his former home he found his wife had abandoned it; nor could he secure any intelligence regarding her whereabouts. In a fit of pique he went the mines in Colorado, and there delved and struggled and saved until he had secured sufficient capital for a start. Then he proceeded to Portland, Ore., where he embarked in the lumber trade. From contracts with the Northern Pacific Railway Co. and the Oregon Steam Navigation Co. he realized handsome returns. He came east, and after attending the World's Fair went down into "Egypt" to search for his wife, for whom his love was never lessened. Near his old home he found a lady who had received from his wife a letter dated in Indianapolis. He said nothing, but came direct to this city. The letter indicated that the wife was rooming in a block on Massachusetts avenue. He finally found his way there, and in the early hours of a certain evening about a week ago he rapped at her door. She answered the summons. He knew her, although she had aged and was very care-worn. She failed to recognize him. The recognition came, however, when he exhibited an old-fashioned locket containing her picture and a lock of her hair, which he had carried with him through all his trouble from first to last. Certain old papers served to complete the recognition, and the result was a happy reunion of two long separated souls. The wife had never sought divorce, and last Tuesday night husband and wife left for their future home on the Pacific slope. The lady who gave the story of this romantic little piece of history vouched for its absolute truth, but declined, for obvious reasons, to disclose the names.—Indianapolis Sentinel.

Pretty Girls in Bethlehem.

A correspondent of The Washington Star has been "doing" the Holy Land, and is filled with admiration for the damsels of Bethlehem. In a recent letter he writes: "I don't wonder that Boaz fell in love with Ruth. The Bethlehem girls are among the beauties of the East, and you will find more pretty girls in the hills of Judea than in the same amount of territory anywhere else the world over. A shipload of these Bethlehem maidens, if they could be transported to the great Northwest, would capture the bonanza farmers of the Dakotas just as Ruth captured this great landowner, Boaz, and when they came back to Washington as Senators' wives they would be the belles of the capital. These Bethlehem maidens are fair-skinned and bright-eyed. They have straight, well-rounded forms, which they clothe in long dresses of white linen, so beautifully embroidered in silk that a single gown requires many months of work. This dress is much like an American woman's nightgown, without the frills and laces. It falls from the neck to the feet, and is open at the front in a narrow slit as far down as the modest decollete dress. Over this gown they wear sleeveless cloaks of dark red stripes, and the head they cover with a large shawl of linen embroidered with silk. Each girl wears her dower on her person in the shape of a necklace of coins, and the forehead of each maiden is decorated with a crown of coins, some of which are silver and others gold."

The Eganville Star says that Frank Anglin of Toronto, who is spoken of as the Liberal nominee in South Renfrew, is not wanted. A home man will have the call.

The water in Lake Ontario has not been so low as it is now only in 1846, 1848, 1872 and 1891. In 1838 J. W. Judson, United States engineer, established a gauge in Oswego harbor. On Feb. 28th and March 1st last the water went down to the zero point, below which it has never gone since 1838. This zero point is two and two-thirds feet below the average lake level of twenty years. At present the water is a few inches above the zero mark.

DEATH'S SUDDEN CALL.

Mr. Cornelius White, Minister to the Friends, Dropped Dead in the Pulpit Yesterday.

Yesterday, when preaching in the Friends Meeting House at Bloomfield, Mr. Cornelius White suddenly stopped in his discourse and, to the dismay of the congregation, fell to the floor.

The scene was, naturally, very exciting as the congregation pressed forward and lifting up the fallen man, were shocked to find that life was extinct.

The deceased, who was about 70 years of age, had long been a minister to the congregation of Friends, by whom he was held in the highest esteem.

It will be remembered how suddenly Mr. Stephen J. White, his brother, died here some time since. Both brothers were called with a terrible suddenness.

Mr. and Mrs. W. W. Pope will attend the funeral, which will take place to-morrow in the Friends Meeting House at Bloomfield.

Surprise Party.

A very pleasant event took place at the residence of Mr. Spencer, in the 4th concession of Ameliasburg, on Friday, the 15th inst., being a surprise party given Mrs. Basheba Carnrike. There were about 45 persons present, and after a sumptuous repast an address and purse of money were presented to Mrs. Carnrike, it being the 78th anniversary of her birth. The address was signed by Henry Delong, Rynard Brickman, Simon Delong and William Caughey. After a very suitable reply the gathering broke up by singing "God be with us till we meet again," all feeling that it is more blessed to give than to receive.

Another Swindle.

There are three or four pairs of those slick confidence men working in different parts of Ontario. Their plan is to take a sample washing machine out to the country and try to sell an agency to the farmers, offering them $75 a month and expenses paid. As an example they got a man named Scarff, near Wingham, to sign what appeared to be an agreement of some sort. Some person sent word to him that it was a swindle, and he and four or five others made the agent show them the papers. It turned out that his name was to four notes amounting to $504.

Memorial Services in Sidney.

The memorial services of the late Mrs. Ramsay were conducted in the Centenary Church, 2nd concession of Sidney, yesterday morning by Rev. Mr. Faull, pastor. The church was filled to the doors and the service was most impressive. The preacher took for his text Jeremiah, 15-9, "Her sun has gone down while it was yet day," and he preached a sermon that carried a conviction in every word. In it he laid down precepts to live by as well as die by.

A Snow Shoe Jaunt.

On Wednesday last a party consisting of the Misses Crosby, Parker, Lynn, Smith and Milne accompanied by Messrs. D. Sager, C. Parker, Jos. Parker, H. Judd, H. Boldrick and D. Milne tramped out four miles to the residence of Mr. Moses Boardman, where they were entertained in that hospitable manner for which Mr. Boardman is noted, and after having a jolly good time tramped home again.

Y.M.C.A. Meetings.

The rooms were crowded yesterday with young men at their regular four o'clock service. Rev. Mr. Potter, of Toronto, gave a short address on "Trust," speaking forcibly on this element in the christian's character. Following the address came a short testimony meeting which was of great interest.

During the week Rev. W. W. Weeks will continue his addresses every afternoon and evening.

The Weather.

We have now had seventy-seven days of sleighing, and the "beginning of the end" is not yet in sight. The weather continues fine, but wintery, and March winds are blowing daily, as is usual at this time of the year. The Ponton Mineral Spring and Baths.

To the Editor of the INTELLIGENCER.

SIR,—I have through the winter, with the exception of a few days, kept a path clear to the Mineral Springs, and the public have been and are very welcome to use freely as much of the water as they please. I propose having hot and cold baths there this summer, for which, of course, a reasonable charge will be made. I have already erected a small bath house and would be glad to receive suggestions from anyone who has had experience as to how best to arrange the baths. It would also be considered a favor (and incidentally it would be a benefit to the city) if all who have been benefitted by the use of the water would kindly permit me to refer enquirers to them, or if they would write to me such particulars as they care to give briefly stating what they believe and from their own experience can certify to, as to the merits of the water. I have already about a dozen such certificates, and if we can induce people to visit Belleville for the purpose of using the waters, we will to that extent be doing public service to the city and developing a possible future industry and sanitarium in our midst.

Yours, &c.,
W. N. PONTON.

SIR MACKENZIE'S APPRECIATION.

He was Greatly Impressed With the Demonstration and Banquet.

In acknowledgment of the magnificent public demonstration and banquet given by the Board of Trade in his honor on the 12th inst., Sir Mackenzie Bowell has forwarded the following letters to the Mayor and the President of the Board of Trade:

PRIVY COUNCIL, CANADA,
OTTAWA, March 14th, 1895.

His Worship, Mayor Walmsley, Belleville, Ont.

MY DEAR MR. MAYOR,—Kindly accept for yourself and extend to the members of the City Council and its officers my sincere thanks for the tribute of respect which they paid to me on Tuesday, the 12th inst. It was more than I could have possibly expected. Engaged as I have been for over a quarter of a century in the difficult task of assisting in the government of a country, comprising such diversified interests, it was indeed an inexpressible pleasure to receive from those with whom more than sixty years of my life have been passed, such a hearty welcome as that which was accorded to me on Tuesday last.

As an old "Bay of Quinte Boy" I know with what pleasure and pride the citizens of Belleville view the success of one of their number. I know something also of their unbounded hospitality. Yet, I was scarcely prepared for the demonstration to which I have alluded, and can but feebly express the gratitude which fills my heart.

Wishing each of you, and the city as a whole, a prosperous future,

Believe me &c.,
Sincerely yours,
MACKENZIE BOWELL.

PRIVY COUNCIL, CANADA.
OTTAWA, 14th March, 1895.

Thomas Ritchie, Esq.,
President, Board of Trade,
Belleville, Ont.

MY DEAR MR. RITCHIE,—I should indeed be ungrateful, did I not, without loss of time, extend to you, personally, and to the members of your Board, my sincerest thanks for the honor done me on the 12th inst.

It was a mark of respect and confidence from the business men of your city, irrespective of creed or political predilections, which I shall never forget. I can only hope that my future life—whether as a public man or a private citizen—may be such as to warrant a continuance of the esteem and confidence which they have shown me.

Sincerely yours,
MACKENZIE BOWELL.

A PRINTER ARRESTED.

John F. Howden Charged with Stealing Trinity Examination Papers.

The Toronto News, of Saturday, says: John F. Howden, of 113 Shuter street, was charged in the Police Court with stealing Trinity Medical examination papers from Rowsell & Hutchinson and in complicity with William Terry selling them to a student for $75.

Through lawyer H. H. Macrae he deferred pleading and electing until Monday.

He was allowed out on bail on giving three sureties, himself in $500 and two others in $250. William Staneland, of 258 Yonge street, and his father, John Howden, were his bondsmen.

Dean Geikie said that the authorities discovered the fact in time to change the examination papers.

At St. Michael's Church.

Yesterday being St. Patrick's day, the services in St. Michael's Church were of a special character. Rev. Mons. Farrelly, after reading the epistle for the day at the evening service, proceeded to speak at some length of the Saint whose memory they commemorated. He said Scotland, Wales, France, and England, all claim the honor of St. Patrick's birthplace. We can allow all these claims but the latter. He showed that Ireland, in her early days, had an educational system superior to any country in the world and that children of every nationality were sent there to be educated. Ireland has produced some great fighters, amongst whom he mentioned Wellington and Capt. Nolan. Ireland has produced some great orators. He made a feeling reference to the late Mr. Parnell and also to our late lamented Premier, Sir John Thompson.

The musical part of the services of the day was particularly good. At the morning service Miss Katie Bawden sang very sweetly "The Harp that Once Thro' Tara's Halls." At the evening service Mrs. Jas. Grant, Mrs. E. D. Gough and Messrs. J. N. Doyle and J. Petty furnished some excellent selections in splendid voices and time. At the latter service the church was filled to overflowing with citizens of all denominations.

Military Appointments.

The following appointments and changes were gazetted on Saturday:

15TH BATTALION "ARGYLE LIGHT INFANTRY."—2nd Lieutenant William A. Lott having left the limits, his name is removed from the List of Officers of the Active Militia.

16TH "PRINCE EDWARD" BATTALION OF INFANTRY—To be Adjutant: Captain Benjamin Alexander Wycott, vice Lighthall, promoted.

No. 4 Company.—To be Captain: Captain Charles Hobart Ferguson, from No. 3 Company, vice Wycott, appointed Adjutant.

—The prizes captured by the Japanese at Yleng Kow include several gunboats, two steamers, one hundred junks and a large quantity of munitions of war.

STEEL MEN IN KINGSTON.

What They Want the Corporation of That City to do—They are Here To-day.

At three o'clock, yesterday, says the Kingston Whig, of Saturday, G. E. Hamilton, of New York; G. Hamilton, Youngstown, Ohio, and G. Caulfield, Grand, Ohio, members of the Dominion steel and blast furnace company, negotiating for a branch of its establishment in Kingston, arrived in the city and were received by the Mayor and President of the Board of Trade, J. Hewton. They are well pleased with the city and its location, and if terms suitable to them and the corporation are arrived at a blast furnace will be established here before the summer is finished. Last evening a meeting of the City Council and Board of Trade was held in the Council Chamber and the visitors made addresses explaining the terms they desired. At their request reporters were excluded. The visitors claimed that newspaper reports of their deliberation would not be wise, inasmuch as they were not in a position to come to any definite conclusion as to the establishment of their works in the city.

Of the three gentlemen present two are practically employed in the manufacture of iron and the third is intimately associated with them in business. They seem to mean business, but they are novices in lobbying, and so, up to this point, have failed to present their case in a form which is at once popular and intelligible.

The purpose is to erect a blast furnace and rolling mill at some point in Canada, contiguous to the mines and convenient for smelting and shipping purposes. The plant, it is estimated, will cost $600,000, and the municipality securing its location is expected to give it a site, exemption from taxation and free water (for a term of years), and guarantee the interest on the bonds of the company to the extent of $300,000, taking a first mortgage on the plant as security; or otherwise granting aid to the company and being recouped by the Government bounty, which is figured at $100,000 a year. In addition to any assistance given by the municipality the company wants the assurance of protection from the Government, in the way of a duty, of at least $5 per ton.

There is a great deal to be considered about the matter before it can be submitted for the approval of the people in a by-law on which they can vote. The company has not been a bit partial to Kingston. It has presented its scheme elsewhere, notably in Belleville, the Council of which place has made an offer that the members of the company are bound to dispose of before they can freely negotiate with the representatives of any other place. The company is anxious that the Council shall be quick in saying what it will do. But the company, presuming that it is composed of sensible business men, did not reach its conclusions about coming to Canada, and it has been influenced in its course thuswise by many considerations in which, so for, it has not let in very much light. The meeting in the Council Chamber last night was characterized by much talk, by a flow of words, words, words, but of words that did not carry much meaning with them.

The gentlemen exhibited ground plans of what their premises would be, but had no designs of their buildings. They could not promise the employment of any number of men.

There would be no difficulty getting a site in the east end of the city for a blast furnace. The Folger Brothers and the K.P.R. company will sell enough land at a low figure for the works, and will give besides a bonus of $1,000.

To-day the visitors had an interview with Folger Brothers and a conference with the Civic Committee and Executive Committee of the Board of Trade.

G. E. Hamilton stated, this morning, that if he and his company decided to erect a blast furnace here work would be commenced at once. The material for it would be shipped here inside of ninety days. There would have to be several conferences with the city authorities before a basis could be arrived at. They knew nearly what they wanted and he believed the aldermen knew what would be best for the city. Said the speaker: "We mean business and are anxious to close negotiations as soon as possible because we want to be the first in the market." They would have a furnace in working order before Hamilton. The Grand Trunk Railway Company has given them encouragement. They will carry materials over their road winter and summer at such low rates the company will not need to use water privileges.

"I believe Kingston is well situated for our business, and I hope the negotiations will be successful. Mr. Caulfield, of our company, has a three-quarter interest in a coal mine in the United States."

From here the United States visitors go to Belleville to discuss the same or a similar proposition made to the Council of that city, says the News.

Mr. G. E. Hamilton, one of the above company, arrived from Kingston at 11 o'clock this morning and registered at Hotel Quinte. Shortly after his arrival he was waited upon by the Mayor and Messrs. H. Corby, W. A. Hungerford and W. N. Ponton. Mr. Hamilton told the deputation that he had not come to make the city any offer, but passing through he stopped off till evening.

In regard to a paragraph that appeared in a local paper to the effect that his company had given away the correspondence between this city and themselves to Kingston, he gave it a most emphatic denial. The only ground there was for such a report was in the fact that the offer made to Belleville as to guaranteeing bonds and rejected by this city had been made to Kingston, with the understanding that this city had refused to entertain the offer.

Mr. Hamilton says his company is ready and anxious to do business with Belleville, and he and other members of his Company will be here with propositions in a week or ten days. He had an interview with Mr. Thomas Ritchie, President of the Board of Trade, and Ald. Wills, Chairman of the Industrial Committee, this afternoon. "Belleville," says Mr. Hamilton, "will have the first opportunity of securing the works."

(Henry Clews' Circular.)

The general conditions of the country since the adjournment of Congress have materially improved and have now reached a stage where the judgment of business men will hereafter be the guide, instead of business affairs being dominated by what Congress was or was not going to do, as heretofore. This means a great deal in trade circles from now onward. Confidence may, therefore, be expected to gradually increase, and business courage will come back with it. This means a new departure and, instead of the business of the country being restricted to a retail basis, it will gradually broaden and develop into wholesale transactions of an important scale, which increased confidence and courage will bring about by trade purchases being made ahead of wants and not confined, as for a long time past, to a hand-to-mouth policy. Buyers of late are very numerous in the city from all parts of the country and have shown an inclination to pick up supplies that are cheap in very much increased quantities. An enlarged merchandise business will go far to help the railroads between now and the harvesting of the next crop.

C. I. Hood & Co., Lowell, Mass.:

"Gentlemen—I am glad to say that Hood's Sarsaparilla and Hood's Pills have done me a great deal of good. I had a severe attack of the grip in the winter, and after getting over the fever I did not seem to gather strength, and had no ambition. Hood's Sarsaparilla proved to be just what I needed. The results were very satisfactory, and I recommend this medicine to all who are afflicted with rheumatism or other afflictions caused by poison and poor blood. I always keep Hood's Sarsaparilla in my house and use it when I need a tonic. We also keep Hood's Pills on hand and think highly of them." J. W. DYKEMAN, St. George, New Brunswick.

Hood's Pills are purely vegetable, and do not purge, pain or gripe. Sold by all druggists.

SPORTING TALK.

Cyclist John S. Johnson will sail this week for Europe, where he will ride as a professional.

The Prince of Wales' yacht Britannia defeated the Ailsa yesterday. The wind was light and variable and the Britannia had the best of the luck.

The annual St. Patrick's Day curling match was begun at 3 o'clock this afternoon. Mr. Frank Dolan skips for the Irishmen and Mr. Thos. Ritchie for All Comers.

It has been suggested that a bicycle track be built on Mill Island. A float walk could be built from the old ferry slip to the end of the island and it would doubtless prove an attractive spot. We give out this hint to those who are interested.

A Proton farmer, after chopping down a tree, found in the hollow stump a large bear sleeping so soundly that even the operation of the falling the tree failed to arouse him. The severe weather told on him. The bear was a little surprised when the farmer invited him to shake off his drowsiness. The long fast, however, had taken all the fight out of his bearship and robbed the capture of some of its zest.

At a meeting of the Directors of Prince Edward County Agricultural Society, in the discussion of the programme of sports for the current year, it was suggested that if a circuit of races was held between Kingston, Napanee, Deseronto, Picton, Belleville, Trenton, Port Hope, Brockville and Gananoque, etc., it would be to the advantage of each Society and locality. And in order to ascertain the view of the several Societies, it was thought advisable that each Association should appoint one delegate to meet in Belleville (as the most central point) on Wednesday, March 20th, at the Queen's Hotel to discuss the matter and to complete arrangements to carry out this object.

SPECIAL MENTION.

—Thieves ransacked the street letter-boxes at Ottawa and scattered the contents on the streets.

—About 50 persons were killed by an explosion of fire damp in a mine at Troppau, Austria-Silesia.

IF SICK HEADACHE IS MISERY, what are Carter's Little Liver Pills if they will positively cure it? People who have used them speak frankly of their worth. They are small and easy to take.

—Hon. Wilfried Laurier is confined to his home at Arthabaskaville, Que., through illness, and cannot leave for his Ontario tour to-day.

—Mr. Rider Haggard, the novelist, has been nominated for Parliament for North Norfolk, England.

THERE IS NO ONE ARTICLE IN THE LINE OF medicines that gives so large a return for the money as a good porous strengthening plaster, such as Carter's Smart Weed and Belladonna Backache Plasters.

But one opinion prevails through the world and that is most strongly in favor of Perry Davis PAIN-KILLER, that no other article ever attained so wide spread popularity. 25 cents buys a big bottle.

—Edward Gorman, a Canadian, was fatally shot by Police Officer Mainsfert at Chicago yesterday at 59th and Halstead streets. The officer was so brutally beaten that his condition is critical. He interfered in a quarrel between four men, who kicked him into insensibility. Before losing consciousness Mainsfert fired two shots, one of which entered Gorman's body.

TRULY ASTONISHING.—Miss Annette N. Moen, Fountain, Minn., says: "Ayer's Cherry Pectoral has had a wonderful effect in curing my brother's children of a severe and dangerous cold. It was truly astonishing how speedily they found relief after taking this preparation."

A Small Fire.

About 7:15 last evening, the fire alarm rang. A blaze started in a small rough-cast house owned by the Pitceathly estate, and occupied by Alfred Horne. Nearly all the contents were got out, but the house was badly gutted. The firemen had plenty of water pressure, and were not long in subduing the flames when they got to work. Insured for $300 in the Royal on building and $150 in the Queen on contents.

Mr. Laurier's New Policy.

(Victoria Warder.)

Within eight years the reform party leaders have had the following platforms, each in succession being discarded:—

"Commercial Union."
"Unrestricted reciprocity."
"Continental free trade."
"Tariff reform."
"Tariff for revenue only." and
"Free Trade as in England."

In some cases until recently there were advance "free-lances" of the party who gave the secret away, and openly advocated annexation. That is dropped now.

That our readers may know exactly what Mr. Laurier means, and what will occur when he gives the people "Free trade as they have it in England," the following article from "Temple Bar" is submitted. All these taxes are for the national government.

"Birth is taxed, marriage is taxed; death is taxed; we are taxed for our butler, if we are prosperous enough to keep one; we are taxed for our footman, our groom; the carriage we keep is taxed; the omnibus we ride in is taxed; the house dog is taxed; everything we drink, wine, tea, coffee, is taxed; light is taxed; the linen we sleep on is taxed; the tobacco we smoke is taxed; our anti-bilious pills are taxed; we have local rates, poor rates, county council rates, water rates, vestry rates; house-holders, lodgers, married and single men, women and children, are all taxed in one form or other. 'One-ninth out of what everybody earns in this country,' Lord Sherbrooke said, 'goes in taxes'; but the proportion is more now and is growing all the time."

Further, the farmers will be greatly interested to know that under Mr. Laurier's new policy, wheat, oats, corn, pease, beans, barley, rye, cattle, horses, sheep, hogs, beef, pork, mutton, eggs, and every product of the Canadian farm will come in free of duty; without their being able to send one dollar's worth into the United States free of duty.

Truly, Mr. Laurier and his Reform friends are adepts at framing policies in the interest of the Ontario farmer.

FOXBORO.

Why Contemplate Suicide?

It is like tempting Providence for consumptives to ignore the remarkable remedy known as Miller's Emulsion of Norwegian Cod Liver Oil. For any person to die of consumption without trying this remarkable flesh and blood maker, after knowing of its existence, is suicide pure and simple. All that the consumptive patient needs is new blood with which to battle against the destructive forces of the disease. Miller's Emulsion provides new blood in abundance. It is a combination of Norwegian Oil and hypophosphites of lime and soda—a triumph of science. Miller's Emulsion is the great nerve strengthener and blood maker, and cures Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis, Scrofula and all lung affections. In Big Bottles, 50c. and $1, at all Drug Stores.

The Use of It.

(From Harper's Young People.)

Among the many useless inventions thrust upon the world by people who like to do useless things was a clock once exhibited in Brussels. The peculiar thing about this clock was that instead of striking the hours with a bell, it fired a pistol every hour.

"It's ingenious," said a visitor to the exhibitor; "but of what use is it? Why fire a pistol?"

"To kill time," said the witty inventor.

PIERCE Guarantees a CURE
OR MONEY RETURNED.

For over a quarter of a century, Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery has been effecting cures of Bronchial, Throat and Lung affections. The makers have such confidence in their "Discovery" for curing Asthma, Bronchitis, and Incipient Consumption, that they can afford to guarantee it.

MRS. ISAAC LOTMAN, of Thurlow, Delaware Co., Pa., writes as follows:

H. C. TROUP.

DR. R.V. PIERCE, Buffalo, N.Y.: "Dear Sir—I wish to write you of my brother, Harry C. Troup, who has been sick for ten years with asthma. He has been treated by ten different physicians, who have said he could not be cured. He had to sit up at night, he got so short of breath; he suffered with fearful headaches and had a bad cough. After taking Doctor Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery and Pleasant Pellets, he did not get short of breath, and can sleep all night."

St. Patrick Was a Gentleman.

Henry Bennett, who wrote "St Patrick was a Gentleman," was born in Cork about 1785. While this poem is known all over the world it will always bear reprinting.

Oh! St. Patrick was a gentleman,
Who came of decent people;
He built a church in Dublin town,
And on it put a steeple.
His father was a Gallagher;
His mother was a Brady;
His aunt was an O'Shaughnessy,
His uncle an O'Grady.

So, success attend St. Patrick's fist,
For he's a saint so clever:
Oh! he gave the snakes and toads a twist,
And bothered them forever.

The Wicklow hills are very high,
And so's the Hill of Howth, sir;
But there's a hill much bigger still,
Much higher nor them both, sir.
'Twas on the top of this high hill
St. Patrick preached his sarmint
That drove the frogs into the bogs,
And banished all the varmint.

So, success attend St. Patrick's fist, etc.

There's not a mile in Ireland's isle
Where dirty varmin musters,
But there he put his dear fore-foot,
And murdered them in clusters.
The toads went pop, the frogs went hop,
Slap-dash into the water;
And the snakes committed suicide
To save themselves from slaughter.

So, success attend St. Patrick's fist, etc.

Nine hundred thousand reptiles blue
He charmed with sweet discourses,
And dined on them at Killaloe
In soups and second courses.
When blind worms crawling in the grass
Disgusted all the nation,
He gave them a rise which opened their eyes
To a sense of their situation.

So, success attend St. Patrick's fist, etc.

No wonder that those Irish lads
Should be gay and frisky,
For sure St. Pat he taught them that,
As well as making whiskey;
No wonder that the saint himself
Should understand distilling,
Since his mother kept a shebeen shop
In the town of Enniskillen.

So, success attend St. Patrick's fist, etc.

Oh! was I but so fortunate
As to be back in Munster,
'Tis I'd be bound that from that ground
I never more would once stir.
For there St. Patrick planted turf,
And plenty of the praties,
With pigs galore, ma gra, ma 'store,
And cabbages—and ladies!

Then my blessings on St. Patrick's fist,
For he's a darling saint, oh!
Oh! he gave the snakes and toads a twist;
He's a beauty without paint, oh!

Dangers of Delay.

If we were allowed to look into the future and see the fatal consequences that follow a neglected cold, how differently would our course be; could we realize our danger, how speedily we would seek a cure; but with many it is only when the monster disease has fastened its fangs upon our lungs that we awaken to our folly. What follows a neglected cold? It is not diseases of the throat and lungs, bronchitis, asthma, consumption, and many other diseases of like nature. Is it worse than madness to neglect a cold, and it is folly not to have some good remedy available for its frequent complaint. One of the most efficacious medicines for all diseases of the throat and lungs, is Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup. This medicine is composed of several medicinal herbs, which exert a most wonderful influence in curing consumption and other diseases of the lungs and chest. It promotes a free and easy expectoration, soothes irritation and drives the disease from the system.

Mrs. Celeste Coon, Syracuse, N.Y., writes: "For years I could not eat many kinds of food without producing a burning, excruciating pain in my stomach. I took Parmelee's Pills according to directions under the head of 'Dyspepsia or Indigestion.' One box entirely cured me. I can now eat anything I choose, without distressing me in the least." These Pills do not cause pain or griping, and should be used when a cathartic is required.

CHAPTER I.

It was Saturday night in Rock River. Teams covered with the dust of the August roads stood in rows along the sidewalks. Harvesting was in full drive, and the town was filled with nomads from the south, men who had worked their way north following the isthermal line of ripening wheat.

Farmers had driven in for provisions, and their hands had come with them for an evening's outing. The streets swarmed with rough, lawless characters. Few women ventured abroad, but bands of yelling boys, feeling the unstable equilibrium of the atmosphere, fought or played up and down before the saloons which were crowded to the door.

The better class of farmers hitched up and drove away before nine o'clock, gathering together as many of their hands as possible, but others remained to see the fun, which everyone felt to be coming.

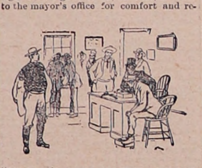
It was reported that the "Wapsey gang" was in town. The Swedes from Rock Run were also well represented down at Ole's "Hole in the Wall." The Vesey boys and Steve Nagle had been seen, and last and most important, Bill O'Shea, "the Wapsey Tiger," was down at the red saloon.

Bill was brother to the deputy sheriff, who had been in his day the most feared of all the Wapsey gang. He it was who used to terrorize the constable and make men like Steve Nagle quail when, on his infrequent sprees, he took offense at the sound of their voices. He dominated the gang and ruled as if with naked sword in hand.

By the advice of Dr. Carver, Jim O'Shea had been made constable of the town. The doctor had quoted with great effect the experience of Boston in making the famous crook, Turkey, marshal, in the days when thugs ran the city in their own way. From being constable, Jim came naturally to be the deputy sheriff of the county. He had given up drink entirely.

Bill, also from the Wapsey prairie, was quiet enough ordinarily, but when in liquor was ferocious as a panther. At such times no one dared to oppose him nor lay hands upon him, that is, no one but his brother, the deputy. Every law-abiding citizen regretted the infrequent visits of the Wapsey Tiger.

Constable Ranney, a tall, mild-mannered man, grew more and more nervous as the night drew on and reports came in about Bill. He kept sedulously out of sight after eight o'clock; in fact, he went to the mayor's office for comfort and reinforcement. He made a feeble effort to cover his flight by saying to several of the uneasy citizens on the street:



"BUT I CAN'T STRIKE HIM WITH A WEAPON, YER ONNER."

"If I'm wanted, I'll be at the mayor's office. I'm going up to consult him."

This deceived no one. Every man and boy in Rock River knew Raney was afraid of Steve Eagle, to say nothing of O'Shea. They shouted cat calls at him as he went along the street, but they could not blame him very much. There was a sort of horse sense in keeping out of the Tiger's way.

The matter was being discussed in the mayor's office. Ridings was there, and Judge Brown, and two or three others. Foster, of the Saturday Morning Call, took a humorous view of the matter, the others did not. Foster quoted a line or two while sharpening a pencil.

"Now, 'whether Roderigo killed Cassio, or Cassio Roderigo, all makes my gain,' I'm getting news."

"We may pull through all right yet," said the mayor, a small man of a scholarly turn of mind, not fitted to cope with such crises.

"Depends on how soon Bill gets whiskey enough to put 'im to sleep," said Ridings, one of the council men.

A wild volley of whoops arose on the street. Ranney turned pale, the mayor started up in his chair, Ridings set his lips grimly.

"The fun begins," said Foster. "Ranney, why ain't you out there on the street? You'll miss something."

Ranney gave up all pretense. "I can hear just as well a little further off"

Judge Brown cleared his mouth of tobacco.

"Mr. Constable, we who are peaceable, and not of powerful physical organization hire you to fight our battles for us. Mr. Mayor, order the constable to the scene of carnage."

"All too well," said Foster.

Another series of whoops arose, maniacal laughter and then a single wild voice in a sort of chant.

They all went to the window and looked out. Up the street, clearly outlined in the brilliant light of the moon, came the Tiger. He walked with a curious action as if his legs were made of steel springs. His bare feet glistened, his head was flung back in a wild gesture. He was Red Brian defying the English battle line on Balley Moor.

"Come out, ye sons o' dogs, ye all, ye white-livered whelps. Come to me arrums, come, smell o' me fist." He leaped in the air. "Come down out o' that," he snarled as he caught sight of the men in the mayor's office.

The heads disappeared, and the crowd on the street laughed, and the Tiger kept on waving his fist. "I can whip the worruld."

"Constable, arrest that man," commanded the mayor.

Ridings broke out: "Things have come to a narrow lane, if we can't control the streets of our own town. If our constable can't or won't do his duty—"

Ranney, nearly sobbing in his shame and fear dragged the star off his coat, and extended it to the mayor.

"Take back the office, I don't want it. I didn't go into this thing to arrest grizzly bears nor crazy maniacs, for three dollars a day. It's all very well for you fellows to sit here and order me to go and arrest that infernal devil; go do it yourself."

He flung the star on the floor and walked toward the back stairway; "I'm going home."

Foster dryly remarked: "There's a certain degree of justice in what Mr. Ranney says. There are too many commanding officers here and too few active warriors. There's just one man in this country who can arrest Bill O'Shea."

"You mean Jim?"

"Yes, of course."

"Jim's in Cedarville."

"Then telegraph him."

"I telegraphed him an hour ago," said the judge. "I knew we were in for trouble. He ought to be here soon if he started at once."

They looked out of the window at every fresh burst of noise. The Tiger still paraded up and down, leaping into the air occasionally with a shrill "Wherroo!" He had the weight of a lion and the activity of a leopard. He was transformed from a slouchy, quietly humorous farmer into a demon. Everybody gave way before him, behind him followed a howling mob of admiring friends. Silence came only when he led the way into some saloon.

The better citizens kept dropping in at the mayor's office to ask why that man was not arrested. The mayor cooled each one off by saying: "I'll deputize you to arrest him, if you wish."

While they sat waiting they heard the sound of hurry out in the street, then a word of command that brought them to a halt.

"Here comes Jim!"

Quick, powerful steps were heard on the stairway, and Jim came in. He was of moderate height, but the girth of his chest was enormous. His face was dark and handsome. His eyes had something placid and sorowful in them. His drooping mustache concealed his mouth. Altogether he was a fine Irish type.

"Where is he?" he asked.

"In the red saloon, just now."

"Is he wild, boys?" Jim asked in a hesitating way.

They felt no inclination to laugh.

"He is plumb crazy."

Jim gave a groan of sorrow and dismay.

"Murtherin' divils! What a task I have." He took out his big clasp knife and laid it down.

"There's a gang with him, too;" said Ridings.

"I dont moind that, its Billy, poor divil." He laid aside his revolver and took off his coat.

"It'll be desprit, boys," he said with a sad quiver in his voice. "I can't shoot him, yer anner. It's me duty to arrest him, an' I will, but it's loike embracin' a loin to take Billy when he's dhrunk. He'll kill me if he can, if he's crazy, but I can't stroike him with a weapon, yer anner."

CHAPTER II.

He looked sad and weak as he went out the door, but they knew the stuff of which his heart was made.

"If he isn't too dhrunk he'll come along when I lay me hand on his shouldher; if he's fightin' dhrunk, it's him or me," he said half to himself, as he went down the street, accompanied by Foster.

"Wan comfort," he added, in the same musing way, "Billy nivir shoots. It's fists wid him."

They heard a wild shouting up the street, where the open door of a saloon emptied its light into the street.

A crowd of men alternately surged in and out of the door as if they moved away from a chained wildcat making plunges to the length of his chain. As they drew near the howl of the drunken man could be heard as he raged against the barkeeper, who stood in deadly terror behind his bar pleading with him. He tried to assume a careless voice.

"Here, take all ye want. That's all right. I gave you y'r change. Take a drink—it's on me. That's all right—" Bill stopped suddenly like a hound scenting game.

"GOD FORGIVE ME," SAID JIM. "I NEVER STRUCK ME BROTHER BEFORE."

"Here's Jim!" was the cry. "Get out o' the way, here's Jim."

Jim came through the crowd, his big, brown eyes fixed on Bill's wild face. The sadness in his face and its resolution awed the crowd.

"Billy, my boy, come home," he said, gently. "Come home, Billy," and he laid his hand on his brother's shoulder.

There was no sign of relenting in Bill's eyes. He looked astonished, then his eyes contracted to red slits, his mouth squared at the corners and his teeth showed in a horrible grin. His hand spread on the counter like a paw.

"To —— wid ye!" he answered.

"Get out o' my way," said Jim, without looking around. The crowd fell back, leaving a clear space.

"Come, Billy," he said again, but in a different tone. He saw a madman before him. With a quick, clutching, downward jerk, he rolled the Tiger to the floor and fell upon him. But the insane man rose under him with a rolling bearlike action, and forced him on the floor on equal terms.

It was a terrible sight. The two brothers, so nearly equal in strength, Jim fighting because it was his duty and hindered by his great love and admiration for his brother, the other man irrational, cruel, deadly. Jim broke loose and rose.

"God forgive me!" Jim said; "I nivir struck me brother before."

He waited for the fallen man to rise. Bill seamed to bound from the ground. Again Jim knocked him rolling, and again he rose. This time he rose with a knife in his hand.

"Ah!" breathed the crowd.

"Shoot him!" said the barkeeper.

"Keep off!" said Jim. A new look came into his eyes. He was fighting for his life now. Again he met the infuriate with his fist, but the man fell at his feet, throwing him sprawling. Jim whirled upon his back, catching Bill's hand in a terrible grip. The blood was running from a gash in his cheek.

Over and over the two men rolled in the blood and sawdust. Notwithstanding their great bulk, they writhed with the bewildering convulsions of cats. Now Jim came to the top, now Bill, but always that right hand of the sheriff's gripped the murderous wrist that held the knife. Jim fought silently, grimly. The brother uttered short, snarling imprecations, like a carnivorous animal at meat. He snapped at his brother with open jaws.

Again and again some volunteer raised a chair to strike Bill, but Jim said "no." His pride was touched. He would conquer him alone. He would not let another man strike his brother.

For ten minutes this struggle continued, and then Jim rose and sat astride the Tiger, who lay breathing heavily, cursing, raving, under his breath.

"Handcuff him!" cried the crowd.

Jim shoook his head. "There is no need," he said.

At the word "handcuff," the struggle began again. Bill wrenched loose suddenly and struck Jim again with the knife. The blow fell upon his collar bone, and the blood poured forth again. Jim caught the deadly arm again in his left hand and lifting his terrible right hand struck a blow upon the side of his brother's head, which laid him out limp and still.

"Out o' me way now," he said, as he rose holding the limp body in his hands. They made way for him and he passed out into the street.

A shudder seized on the crowd. Jim was covered with saw dust and filth from the floor. His face was unrecognizable by reason of the terrible blows with fist and knife which had fallen there, and his shirt was dripping with blood also. He walked into the middle of the road with the stunned man held in his hands. The crowd made way for him as if he were a king.

He put Bill down and knelt watchfully beside him.

"Call the mayor," he said, "I'll have a word with him."

A moment later and the mayor came hurrying down.

"What is it, Jim?"

He lifted a wild, sad face to the mayor.

"Y'r anner, I ask permission to take Billy home. God knows it would kill him to wake in the jail, y'r anner. The b'y dawn't know what he's doin' at all. He'll be near dead with shame, whin he sees the mark he's put on me. If he wakes in jail, 'twill break the heart of 'im. Y'r anner, you know Billy, when the whisky's not in him, he's as fine a mon as iver breathed the breath of life. May I take him home, y'r anner?"

The mayor, deeply moved, nodded his head.

"Do what you think best, Jim."

"God bless ye, y'r anner. Will somebody find Billy's team?"

The team was brought, and the maniac was lifted into the wagon like a log.

Jim climbed in. "Give me the lines," he said to the man in the seat.

"Shan't I go with ye, Jim?"

"Give me, I say."

"Good night, y'r anner. Good night, boys."

The wagon moved off in the glorious moonlight, with Jim sitting beside the drink-crazed man who lay on the bed of the wagon unbound, save by the grip o' his brother's relentless right hand. He never set foot in Rock River again, and the next year Jim was the only candidate for sheriff in the county.

A Dinner Pill.—Many persons suffer excruciating agony after partaking of a hearty dinner. The food partaken of is like a ball of lead upon the stomach, and instead of being a healthy nutriment it becomes a poison to the system. THE change from the extremely delicate coloring of the past few years with such monotonous effects, to the stronger, richer colorings of to-day, is not so much a change in fashion as an improvement in taste. When a decorator was timid or inartistic, he avoided strong colors as a child avoids the fire. He had little or no conception of how to use them; hence he remained in the cold montony of whites and grays. If now and again he tentatively ventured in colors, the results were so awful that he would shrink in horror from another such attempt. Some bolder and more callous spirits made picturesque and kaleidoscopic effects which they urged upon innocent and amiable people as artistic; but that sunflower æstheticism did not last. It had the merit of garish effect or of artistic sensationalism only. It could not last. Good taste, like good sense, will always prevail. As a sort of protest against the sunflower sensationalism, the dainty period of creamy-white timidity came into vogue. Many decorators knew that oddities of form and color could not be used in marble halls and maidens' boudoirs, but they did not have the independence to risk an open defiance of the prevalent style. They found a sort of refuge under "A Milk White Flag" of nonentity. The wall-paper manufacturers assumed the risk of putting colors into their papers for this season. The results are beautiful in the products and profitable to the consumer. Strong, rich colors are precisely what the people were waiting for; employed judiciously, they are precisely what they should have. This is an era of strong colors. It is also an era of good taste. It is the period of the golden mean between the eccentricities of the sunflower sensationalism, of riotous vulgarity, and the dreary daintiness of whitey timidity. It is not only philosophic to use strong colors, but it is artistic, æsthetic, and delightful—the climax of all things true, good, and beautiful.

THE UNIVERSITY COMMISSION.

A Full Investigation Into All the Students Grievances to Be Made—Changes Proposed in Sir Oliver's New Law Reform Bill—Measure for the Payment of Union Wages

Toronto, March 19.—The Ontario Cabinet met yesterday evening and decided upon thbe personnel of the commission which is to enquire into the recent troubles at the University. The following gentlemen were chosen: T. W. Taylor, Chief Justice of Manitoba, chairman; J. J. Kingsmill, Toronto; Judge Senkler, St. Catharines; B. M. Britton, B.A., Q.C., Kingston; Prof. John Campbell, M.A., LL.D., Presbyterian College, Montreal.

These gentlemen will investigate all the grievances and complaints of the students, both in regard to the charges of inefficiency of the staff and in relation to the management of the University. They will meet in Toronto on Monday, April 8.

The session of the House yesterday was very short and unimportant. The promise of Sir Oliver that the Fees Commission report should be laid on the table yesterday was not fulfilled, and the reports, which are very voluminous, had not arrived at the Parliament buildings up to a late hour last night.

Dr. Ryerson's bills compelling the payment of union rates of wages in all Government works and for the appointment of a female factory inspector were read a first time.

Mr. Reid introduced bills to amend the Municipal and Assessment Acts, the effect of which, if passed, will be to give people living in incorporated villages the right to work out their statute labor instead of paying a tax. The law would then place villagers upon the same plane as farmers in the townships.

Mr. Davies introduced a bill to amend the Act dealing with counsel fees in connection with the administration of justice. The bill is presented at the instance of the York County Council in order to make it clear that the Clerk of the Peace for preparing municipal voters' lists is only entitled to one fee for the whole municipality, and not to one for each sub-division.

The bills to amend the Municipal Act, introduced by Mr. Garrow and Mr. Wood, were read a second time.

Mr. Whitney introduced a bill to amend the drainage law of last session, so as to enable county drainage works to be completed which were initiated under the former Act.

In answer to Mr. Crawford the Provincial Treasurer stated that municipalities in this province had not the power to regulate the hours for the retail sale of liquors by license-holders in taverns, but they had in shops. The license commissioners, he said, had power to regulate in both.

Mr. Ross told Mr. Whitney the Government had not decided to establish a Normal School at London.

The Attorney-General replied in the negative to Mr. Howland's question as to whether it was the intention of the Government to introduce an act during the present session amending the Registry Act by re-uniting the Toronto Registry Office and abolishing the office of registrar of East Toronto.

On the motion of Mr. Farwell the House ordered a return showing the cost of the diamond drill, the date when operations were begun with it and the number of days it has been in operation, the hours of the day it is worked, a statement of the work done and where carried on since its purchase and the number of men employed in its use and the rate of wages at which they are engaged.

In their annual report the Ontario game and fish commissioners recommend that two more wardens should be appointed this year; that H. K. Smith, warden in charge of the eastern portion of the province, be appointed chief warden, rendered vacant through the resignation of Mayor Stewart of Hamilton, and that deputy wardens be made constables under the act so as to allow them to serve their own summonses, subpenas, etc.

A deputation representing the W.C.T.U. waited upon the Government yesterday morning to ask that factories and mercantile establishments where women are employed should be inspected by women under the Provincial Government. Dr. Ryerson's bill is along these lines.

The bill which Sir Oliver Mowat is bringing in to reform certain legal clauses has been made public, and contains some radical alterations of the present conditions. The change with regard to appeals is that cases where the amount at issue does not exceed $1000, or which does not come within certain classes of cases, are appealable directly to the divisional court of the High Court, from which a second appeal to the Court of Appeal is not allowed. The specified cases are as follows: Where the validity of a patent is affected, or where the matter in question relates to the taking of an annual or other rent, customary or other duty or fee, or a like demand of a general or public nature, affecting future riglety, or where the judgment or order involves a question of law or practice on which there have been conflicting decisions by the High Court of Justice or by judges thereof, or where the judgment or order is in regard to a matter of practice, but affects the ultimate riglety of parties to the action; or where there are other sufficient special reasons for treating the case as sectional.

The next charge is that in cases in which the amount is more than $1000 or come under the cases given, the appeal from the trial judge may be taken on the option of the appellant, either to the divisional court of the High Court or to the Court of Appeal. If the former, the party so appealing shall not be entitled afterwards to appeal from that court to the Court of Appeal, but any other party to the action or matter may apply for leave to appeal to the Court of Appeal. The application shall be made to the divisional court or to the judge, whose judgment or order is in question, or to the Court of Appeal or to the judge thereof. The granting of leave shall be entirely in the discretion of the judges of court appealed to. No security for costs shall be required for an official court of appeal, unless such security is specially ordered by the court to which the appeal is made or judge thereof.

Printed appeal books shall not be necessary, but the court may order for special reasons the printing of any documents, proceedings or other papers in any case for the use of the court.

The divisions of the High Court are abolished, and provision is made for the monthly sitting of the Divisional Court, which shall be composed of a president and two other judges of the court arranged according to order of seniority.

The Divisional Court of the High Court shall always be composed of three judges, from none of whom the appeal shall be taken. Non-jury actions in any county may be entered for trial at any sitting of the High Court in such county.

A High Court judge at either jury or non-jury sittings shall be authorized and required to determine any local matters which would have jurisdiction to determine it in getting in court or chambers in Toronto.

No sitting for the trial of causes shall begin before 9.30 a.m., or except for special reasons extend beyond 7 p.m., with at least one-half hour's intermission at or near noon.

In a case of a compulsory reference by the judge at the trial of any action to the county judge, registrar, deputy registrar, deputy clerk of the crown, local master or other officer of the court, or of any matter where it would have been competent for such judge to try himself at the trial, no fees are to be allowed to such referee.

The charges for litigants for term copies of evidence taken in shorthand at trials, references, examinations, etc., shall be 7 1-2 cents per folio, instead of 15 cents as heretofore.

In respect to costs in civil action, as between solicitor or client, it shall be competent for a solicitor to make an agreement with his client as to the remuneration, either by a gross sum, commission, salary or otherwise. This agreement is subject to taxation and review by the court.

Arragement is also made for the substitution of monthly or semi-monthly for weekly sittings at Ottawa by the judges of the High Court, in view of the expressed desire of the Ottawa bar, and the expected reduction of work, and a similar change may be made for London if the London bar so wish.

MONEY AND REASON GONE.

John Faragher Loses $6000 and Goes Insane.

Chicago, March 18.—Through the mysterious disappearance of $6000 John Faragher, an expressman living at No. 189 North Wood-street, has lost his reason and is now in the care of friends at his home.

Ever since the great fire Faragher has been a familiar figure at the corner of Lake and Wood-streets, where he apparently did a thriving business. The property on the corner where he kept his express wagon he owns, and it is valued at $15,000. He has lived for years with a family at No. 189 Wood-street, and there had his rooms on the first floor.

He is a native of the Isle of Man and naturally frugal, but his saving disposition gave him the reputation in the neighborhood where he lived of being a miser. He hoarded his earnings, and even in times of sickness would deny himself almost the necessities of life. His faith in banks and similar institutions was totally destroyed when he lost $11,000 in the panic of 1873 in the failure of Spencer's Fidelity Bank, the entire amount of his deposit. Since that time he has hid his money in the house, and, ever in fear of its being discovered by thieves, he has continually changed the hiding-place.

About two weeks ago he moved his quarters from the first to the second floor, and the $6000, which was in greenbacks, he transferred from a hole in the chimney to a similar hiding place in hs new rooms. Late one night about a week ago a feeling of insecurity, which at irregular intervals came over him, prompted him to remove the money. In the darkness, afraid to use light, he was unable to find it all, but the portion he obtained he placed in the bed clothing for the remainder of the night. The next morning, as was his custom, he started to satisfy himself that the money was still safe, but he found it gone. The dread of such an occurrence, which had been haunting him for 30 years, and its reality proved such a shock to him that it affected his mind, and he has since been demented.

The house has been thoroughly searched and every conceivable nook and cranny in which money could possibly have been hidden has been carefully overhauled, but without success. Confident that the money has been stolen Faragher accuses no one, and the honesty of the people with whom he lives is not questioned.

The loss of the money remains so far unaccountable.

C.P.R Boats to Touch at Detroit

Detroit, March 18.—It is reported here that the Northern Steamship Company and its ally, the Great Northern Railroad, are not to have the Detroit and Michigan field to themselves this year, as the Canadian Pacific is to be a competitor. It is stated that the plans are practically completed by which the Canadian Pacific's fine steamer, Manitoba, which was built for the roads, Lake Superior traffic before th eline was built north of that lake, will be a Detroit visitor this summer, and it is believed the Canadian Pacific will put a fleet of boats on the Mackinac route eventually.

Niagara Aerial Tramway

Niagara Falls, N.Y., March 18.—Attorney Pound of Lockport, for the proposed Aerial railway over the Niagara River, is satisfied that the New York State authorities will not permit a landing to be made in the park reservation, and the company has acquired rights just below the reservation limits. Mr. Pound to-day received word from the State Department, Ottawa, that the Canadian Government was satisfied with the project, but required the usual rights of customs supervision. The company has agreed to this.

HID HIS GOODS IN THE HAY.

Simon Goldtaub Failed to Defraud the Insurance Company.

Winnipeg, March 19.—Simon Goldtaub, merchant, of Plum Coulee, was burned out last week, and put in his claim to insurance companies for the loss of his stock. Insurance people were suspicious and engaged detectives, who found large quantities of goods from Goldtaub's store carefully packed away in a stable and covered with hay. Goldtaub is now in jail.

THE GIBBS MURDER TRIAL.

Confessions of Both Prisoners Used Against Them.

Buffalo, N.Y., March 19.—The trial of the Robinsons was resumed this morning. Police Superintendent Bull testified to the confession made by Sadie to him at police headquarters, and swore positively that no threats or promises had been made to cause her to confess. The confession was then submitted and read to the jury. It related with hideous detail the story of the murder, and during the reading Clarence's face became ghastly pale, while Sadie sank lower in her chair and riveted her eyes upon the judge. The confession states that Clarence fired all three shots, while he in his statement charges Sadie with firing the third and fatal shot. When recess was taken at noon Superintendent Bull was under cross-examination, but all efforts to shake his testimony were fruitless.

A Joke Results in Murder.

New Orleans, March 18.—A negro shot two brothers named Pettingim to-day killing one and fatally wounding the other. In a spirit of fun Frank Pattingim threw down a few chips or splinters on the negro's head from the second story of a factory where he was employed. The negro looked up and applied a vile epithet to the boys and made threats. The boys went down stairs to punish him for his insolence. When they reached the sidewalk the negro drew a revolver and began firing, hitting Frank in the left breast, killing him almost instantly, and shooting Harry in the breast near the right arm. The negro was arrested.

THE HYAMS MURDER CASE.

Important Testimony at the Preliminary Hearing.

DEFENCE WILL AWAIT THE TRIAL.

Undertaker Humphrey Describes the Injuries to the Head of Young Wells—The Head Had Been Crushed by the Weight Falling on the Side, But There Was a Punctured Wound Over the Eye

TORONTO, March 19—Yesterday afternoon preliminary examination of the Hyams' twins, charged with the murder of Wm. C. Wells, was resumed before Police Magistrate Denison. The prisoners are as indifferent as ever and chatted and laughed with counsel pending the opening of the case.

The Crown will not call Mrs. Harry P. Hyams, the sister of the alleged murdered man, at the preliminary examination at all events. Neither have the defence any intention of submitting testimony until the case comes on for trial.

The Crown showed the theory upon which it is proceeding yesterday, when it called Undertaker Humphrey. It will endeavor to prove that deceased was struck a blow over the eye, which knocked him senseless, and then that the weight was dropped upon the side of his head. The wounds are of such a nature that they must have been occasioned by two distinct blows coming from opposite directions.

County Crown Attorney Curry appeared for the prosecution. There was the same imposing array of counsel for the defence, W. G. Murdock, E. F. B. Johnston, T. W. Horn, and, associated with them Francis L. Wellman and W. W. Gooch, the New York attorneys. Mr Morrison Renshaw is present representing The New York World.

The first witness called, Sailmaker John Thompson, gave important testimony. The defence has claimed all along that the hook now on the rope attached to the weight in the shaft at the Colborne-street warehouse is not the one that was there when the tragedy occurred. Thompson, however, identified the hook as the one he had spliced on the rope for the Hyams brothers on Dec. 28, 1892. The tragedy occurred one month later on Jan. 16, 1893. Witness also testified that he cut out the little piece in the weight produced, in order to get the hook in. The date of the splicing was fixed by an account from Rice Lewis & Son, where the hook was purchased. In answer to Mr. Johnston, witness stated that he could not fix the time when he did the work, but he only purchased the one hook in the fall of 1892. Considerable amusement was created by the positive way in which Thompson stated that he was a professional splicer, that the work was spliced in a first-class manner, and the job couldn't be improved upon. He don't know how other sailors spliced ropes, but if they did it properly they would do it that way. He had no recollection whether or not there was a hook on the rope before, but he thought there was and that the small weights produced were attached thereto. The prisoners laughed continuously while Thompson was testifying, and their faces develoed into a broad grin when the witness admitted that if there was a Know-Nothing party he might be a member of it.

The witness was positive that the weight could not have come off the hook. "And any man who said it did would be a fool," said Mr. Johnston. "I don't know anything about any other men," said the witness, "I have seen a good many men do a good many foolish things."

Undertaker E. D. Humphrey, who was summoned by telephone to the Hyams warehouse to remove the body of young Wells on Jan. 16, met one of the twins, he couldn't tell which, upon his arrival at the warehouse. He had been told it was Harry Hyams, however. Hyams was in a nervous condition, and his hands were badly cut. He said he got his hand torn in lifting the weight off the elevator—that he had lifted the weight and it slipped out of his hands. The body of deceased was lying on the floor, near the elevator, the weight resting near the shaft. Witness did not touch the body, pending the arrival of Coroner Aikins. The story of the occurrence as he understood it was that Wells had been fixing the elevator and the weight had fallen off and killed him.

Witness then described the injuries to the head. There was a scar over the right eye, which was badly punctured, showing that it had been hit hardly. The head was split open along the top and across the forehead from right to left in star shape. The wounds over the eye and across the forehead he filled with plaster of paris, and sewed up the wound on the back of the head. The wound on the head did not look like a clean cut. Witness thought that the weight had struck deceased on the side of the head and had split open the skull, cracking the bone and forcing out the flesh. He thought the neck was broken, but would not swear positively. If Dr. Caven swore it was broken he was probably right. The defence claim that the neck was broken, and this claim is one of the strongest points they will put forward in support of the weight theory. Witness would not swear, however, that the neck was broken, although he judged it was.

To Mr. Johnston witness stated that the head was flattened out to two-thirds its usual size. The front part looked as if it had been bulged out by the weight falling upon it.

The case will be resumed at 10.30 this morning.

Corner Stone of Garibaldi's Monument

Rome, March 19.—The corner stone of the Garibaldi Monument was placed to-day in the presence of the Ministers, Garibaldi's sons and the municipal authorities. The monument is intended to commemorate the defence of Rome in 1849. It will be completed and unveiled with great pomp next September, on the 25th anniversary of the reunion of Rome with Italy.

Why Spain's Cabinet Resigned.

London, March 19.—A despatch from Madrid to The Pall Mall Gazette says the resignation of the Cabinet arose from a difference of opinion among the Ministers as to the method of proceeding against the newspapers which have attacked the army. Despite the decision of the Supreme Court in favor of the procedure under the press law, General Lopez Dominguez, Minister of War, insisted that the Cabinet should issue a decree requiring the offending editors to be tried by court-martial. This was opposed by all the Civil Ministers, and the differences became so pronounced that Premier Sagasta pronounced it impossible for the Cabinet to further exist in harmony. The Ministry, therefore, resigned.

Land Is Good, But Money Is Wanting.

Lake Linden, March 19.—Theophile Roberts, who went to Vernon, Canada, to investigate the proposed new home for the French-Canadians here, has returned. He reports the land as being very good for farming, but further than that he had nothing to say. The Government will give them 80 acres of land free, and the township roads built through the tract. Father Paradis, who was to have been here to-day, will not show up for a month yet, as he is no nearer getting transportation and money than two months ago.

TWO CASES OF ALLEGED PLEURO.

An Official Report That Two Canadian Steers Have Been Found Diseased at Antwerp.

Londn, March 19.—In the House of Commons yesterday Sir George Baden-Powell, Conservative, asked if the Government had fixed a date for the initiation of measures against Venezuela in the event of her failure to give satisfaction for the arrest and detention of a number of British Guiana policemen.

Sir Edward Grey, Parliamentary Secretary for the Foreign Office, replied that it was impossible to make a statement in regard to the question at the present time, but he declared that the matter would not be dropped without proper preparation was made.

Sir Edward Grey further said that no progress had been made towards resuming diplomatic relations with Venezuela.

Mr. Thomas Waring, Imperialist member for Down County North, asked what truth there was in the report that two ship loads of cattle from Canada that had arrived at Antwerp had been found to be suffering from pleuro-pneumonia.

Sir Edward Grey replied that communications to that effect had been received by the Board of Agriculture.

Sir Edward Grey announced that in consequence of the Government having secured information alleging that as the result of mock trials, or without trial at all, 2500 Armenians had been sentenced to imprisonment and were still confined, representations had been made to the Porte for the purpose of ascertaining the truth and the attending complications.

O'Connor and others uttered similar sentiments.

Daily Intelligencer.

BELLEVILLE, TUESDAY, MAR. 19.

A CANDID STATEMENT.

We believe in reciprocity for various reasons, because two countries with so many interests in common should be neighbors in the highest and best sense, says the St. Thomas Times. Commercial hostility between us and the United States is a disgraceful state of things. But it is not of our choosing, and we are not to blame for it. The Grit representation of the case is that our Government, while professing to be in favor of reciprocity, are secretly opposed to it, and that even when they take steps that appear to invite it, they use underhanded means of thwarting it. These charges have been denied time and again by individual members of the Government, and by the Cabinet as a whole, but it makes no difference, they are made afresh with a brazen impudence that it would be hard to match on any field of politics except one that is infested by a gang of annexationists who are at heart willing to sell their national birthright at any price, or even give it away outright.

It has been shown over and over that when there have been negotiations looking toward reciprocity, the condition has been uniformly insisted upon that our commerce must be controlled from Washington. There has never been a scheme of the kind, call it by what name you will, commercial union, unrestricted reciprocity, or free trade between Canada and the United States, which did not involve this objectionable feature, and really amount to a surrender of our fiscal interests to the manipulation of a foreign power.

THE HOME MARKET.

Have you found the home market?—Globe.

Read your answer in the trade returns. See the statements of imports of grain, flour, pork, etc. from the United States in 1878 and 1893-4.

Grit papers say the National Policy between 1881 and 1891 reduced the number of farmers in Canada. Yet the farmers in Canada in 1891 fed 500,000 more Canadian citizens and exported to other countries a much greater value of their products, than they did in 1881. There is no evidence of decay in that kind of agriculture.

Furthermore, it is not true that the trade policy had anything to do with reducing the number of persons engaged in agriculture, the prime causes of which were the lessening of labor caused by the introduction of machinery and the increased demand for labor in other occupations caused by the N. P. See census returns for 1891, as recently published in these columns. With say 200,000 fewer farmers and 700,000 more people engaged in other industries than in 1881, the farmers of Canada must have had, in 1891, that many more mouths in Canada to feed than they had ten years previously. Here, then, has been a vast addition to our home market, in addition to the shutting out of Yankee products by the N.P.

This market the policy of "free trade as it is in England," as it is advocated by Mr. Laurier, would throw open to our neighbors without any compensation.

Are there any farmers in Canada who will vote to share the market which takes the great bulk of their products with competitors who will not reciprocate? We trow not.

The World's Fair jury that gave Dr. Price's Baking Powder the highest award was headed by the Chief Chemist of the U. S. Department of Agriculture.

EDITORIAL BREVITIES.

It is amusing, remarks the independent Trade Bulletin, to hear some people advocating a change of Government for the purpose of removing the duty off sugar, when consumers can buy it at 3c to 4c per lb. against 10 to 10½c under Mackenzie's free trade regime.

Mr. Laurier has accepted, provisionally, the Liberal nomination for Saskatchewan, remarks the Montreal Gazette, and now, instead of the crack of that musket, will be heard on the banks of the famed and muddy river the silver voice of the Opposition leader pleading for votes, which, very likely, he won't receive. Saskatchewan is not a constituency of Liberal tradition. Riel was defeated there.

The Grits have always professed to be in favor of the "natural industries" of the country, and yet by their present policy they declare deadly war against the Canadian iron industry. We have in this country all the materials for the production of iron and steel, even nickelplated steel. Will any one tell what a "natural industry" is if the iron industry is not a natural one for this country to prosecute?

There is a good deal of force, says the Toronto Telegram, in what the Conservative papers are saying as to the folly of Canada going from bad to worse at this juncture. Admit, for the sake of argument, that the National Policy is bad, and why should the force of that admission carry Canada into the arms of the Grits, who offer an alternative that is worse? The country knows the worst now, and it ought to be an easy choice between the certainties of experience and the uncertainties of Grit theories. Other countries have been a great deal worse off than Canada, and Canada might be a great deal worse off than it is, if the country changed platforms at this time.

The Canadian farmer's export trade in eggs has not increased rapidly under protection. In 1877 is amounted to 5,025,953 dozen, worth $535,891. In 1893 it had only grown to 6,805,432, worth $868,007.—Hamilton Evening Times.

Thanks for these figures, replies the Spectator. They show that in 1893 Canadian farmers got for their eggs two cents a dozen more than they got in 1877, twenty per cent. more under protection than under the "revenue-tariff" regime. It does not appear that the N.P. quite annihilated the egg industry.

A writer in a Beaverton paper, after decrying the country to the best of his ability, had asked why people left the country and went to the United States. Hon. Clarke Wallace, replying at Beaverton, said it was because of the efforts of just such people. But what were the facts with reference to the emigration to the United States? He would tell them that between 1875 and 1878 the importation of settlers' effects from the United States amounted to $3,000,000, and the exports of the same to the United States amounted to nearly $3,500,000, whereas during the last four years the importation had amounted to $7,300,000, and the exports to only $4,300,000, leaving a balance of $3,000,000 in favor of Canada. The immigration from the United States is increasing at a rapid rate. Our Grit friends are slow to recognize that "the exodus" is now on the right side!

QUERIES.

The Montreal Gazette asks: Will shutting up a Canadian factory and buying the class of goods it produces from a foreigner make you rich?

Will it increase the amount of employment for Canadian citizens?

Will it add to or decrease the exodus?

Will it promote a revival of business?

Will you vote for it?

The fittest survive. That is why Dr. Price's Baking Powder is always kept in every kitchen where it is once used.

That Boy of Yours.

If he is over ten or eleven years of age he will look well in one of Oak Hall's $5 three piece suits. We have a large range at this price, made from desirable tweeds, serges and worsteds. We have them cheaper, too. It is much nicer to see your boy dressed in a well fitting suit, made in a reliable way, than a poor suit that will keep neither shape or appearance.

VICTORIEN SARDOU

The Great Dramatist.

The mobile features of this great man are seen above. Sardou is the great wizard of the stage, clothing his characters in flesh and blood, and making them live. He makes, not mummies, but men and women, as witness the realistic portrayals of Bernhardt,—chiefly the master's thought. When body and brain are weary with work, anything that will drive away the blues must possess a great value, It is the verdict of Sardou that "Vin Mariani," the great tonic-stimulant, possesses this subtle power. This is what the great man says: "'Vin Mariani' is perfect, gives health, drives away the blues, and is of such excellent quality that whoever tastes it might almost desire to be forever debilitated and depressed, thus to have a pretext to drink it." Celebrated men and women, the world over, have spoken similarly of the stimulating, nourishing effects of "Vin Mariani" upon body and brain. A preparation from pure grapes and carefully selected coca leaves, "Vin Mariani" is more tonic than quinine, and yet it never constipates. For the convalescent it is invaluable; for all enfeebled people, it has a magic restorative property. Send your name to Lawrence A. Wilson & Co., Montreal, the Canadian Agents, and you will receive an album containing the portraits of a large number of celebrated people, who have used "Vin Mariani" with wonderful results, and who speak highly of it.

THEY TALK OF AN ELECTION

Knowing Ones in Ottawa Predict a Campaign.

MANITOBA QUESTION UNDECIDED

The Ministers Considering the Bearing of the Various Manitoba School Acts on the Proposed Remedial Order—Pardons and Reprieves Asked for Several Prisoners—Supreme Court Cases and General News Notes From the Capital.

Ottawa, March 18.—The Cabinet was in session for over six hours to-day, and at the close it was again intimated that no official announcement could be made for the present.

It is said to-night that the Ministers were considering the different School Acts of Manitoba as bearing upon the proposed remedial order which will be made.

Despite local talk in favor of a session, the knowing ones insist that an election is more than probable.

Mr. T. C. Robinette of Toronto was in town Saturday and had an interview with the officers of the Department of Justice on behalf of Thomas Williamson of Markham, who is in penitentiary for arson. He also presented a petition for the release of Patrick Lyons, who is serving four years in Kingston for perjury. In regard to the case of Donald Morrison of Toronto, who was two years ago sentenced to seven years in the penitentiary for burglary, Mr. Robinette asks for his release on the grounds of ill-health and severity of the sentence, which was imposed by Mr. Justice MacMahon and pleads that this is Morrison's first offence. John D. Hutchison, who was sentenced at Toronto last month to seven years and 30 stripes, for assault, is fearful of stripes, and Mr. Robinette asks to have them remitted. Michael King is serving five years in Central Prison for robbery in Toronto, and the Minister was asked to consent to his transfer to Kingston Penitentiary.

Ward meetings to select delegates to the Liberal-Conservative convention Tuesday night were held Monday evening. In all wards except the Central, there was the greatest harmony. In the Central Ward, which is entitled to 30 delegates, an effort was made to select that number en bloc. Many in the meeting objected on the ground that this action was unconstitutional, but the chairman, Mr. J. P. Fisher ruled the objections out of order. Thereupon, after the meeting adjourned, the minority met, chose 30 other delegates and 60 will present themselves at the convention.

The first case argued before the Supreme Court to-day was Wilson v. the corporation of Elgin, the question for decision being whether or not under the High School Act of 1891 a county council can detach a minor municipality from a High school district, except in a case where a High school is established or discontinued, under section 8 of the act. After hearing counsel for both parties the court gave judgment dismissing the appeal, with costs. Tremear and McDonald for appellants; Glenn for respondents.

Robertson v. the Grand Trunk Railway Company was next taken up. The plaintiff (appellant) in this case sued for the value of a trotting horse, "Harry R.," killed on defendants' railway while being carried from Windsor to St. Catharines, claiming $5000. The railway company relied on a provision of the bill of lading that they would not be liable under any circumstances in case of loss beyond the sum of $100, but the appellant claims that section 246 of the Railway Act of 1888 deprives them of that defence, as it provides that a company cannot be relieved from liability for negligence by any notice, and that Vogel v. Grand Trunk Railway Company (11, S.C.R. 612) holds that the said section applies to a contract. The Ontario courts, with a difference of opinion, held that Vogel's case did not apply, as the re contract did not limit liability as in this case and that the limitations did not contravene the statute. Argument not concluded when the court rose. Moss, Q.C., and Collier for appellant; Osler, Q.C., and Nesbitt for respondents.

Collier v. Wright is the next case on the list.

Justice Burbidge rendered judgment in the Exchequer Court to-day in Queen vs. St. John Gas Light Company. This was a judgment on an application for an order to restrain the Gas Light Company from depositing in the harbor of St. John tar, pitch and ammoniacal water. The judgment restrains the company in the case of tar which the evidence shows to have been deposited. The supplicants are to be free to make another application on a new state of facts.

Chief Justice Davie of British Columbia arrived here to-day. He has come east on private business previous to assuming the duties of his new office.

Pontiac & Pacific Junction Railway Company have written the city council urging that a memorial be sent to the Ontario Government to grant a subsidy to an inter-provincial bridge across the Ottawa River from Nepean Point to Hull.

Senator Miller of Nova Scotia, who has been here a few days, in the course of an interview, expresses himself strongly in favor of the union of Newfoundland with Canada. He believes it will be to the mutual advantage of both and will lead to a speedy settlement of the French shore question, as no Imperial Government could resist the united demands of a united Canada.

The Government have received no word from the Home authorities of the reported intention to allow the Canadian Copyright Act.

The C.P.R. express from the Pacific Coast brought two carloads of Chinamen into Ottawa this afternoon. The Oriental visitors remained in their coaches at the depot, and will leave, via Prescott for New York to-morrow, where they will take passage for Havana.

Winnipeg Looks for a Session.

Winnipeg, March 19.—Winnipeg Conservative leaders are convinced there is to be a session, and have announced a postponement of their convention to select a candidate for two months.

CHINESE SUPPLIES CUT OFF.

China Said to Have an Agreement With Russia to Avoid Partition.

New York, March 19.—A Shanghai special says: A terrible disaster has befallen the Chinese troops in Manchuria. Their entire supply of provisions for three months has been captured near Niuch Wang by the Japanese.

Li Hung Chang's negotiations with Japan will be hampered by the ignorance that prevails as to the real designs of Russia, whose movements in the east are being closely watched.

It is reported that the British Mediterranean squadron is coming out to the east.

A despatch to the Central News from Shanghai says: It is reported that China has a secret agreement with Russia whereby the latter is to intervene if Japan insists upon any territorial cession as the price of peace. As China is relying upon this, the result of the peace negotiations is doubtful.

Toronto Markets.

Toronto, March 19.—Flour—Steady, with straight rollers selling at $2.75 to $2.90, Toronto freights.

Wheat—The market is quiet, with little change. Holders are firm, with sales of white at 62 1-2c on the Northern. There is a moderate demand for No. 1 Manitoba hard, with little offering. It is quoted west at 81c to 81 1-2c, and grinding in transit at 83 1-2c.

Barley—Trade is quiet and prices unchanged. No. 1 is quoted at 50c to 51c, No. 2 at 46c, and feed at 43c to 45c.

Oats—The market is easier, with white selling at 34 1-2c to 35c west. Cars on track quoted at 38c.

Peas—There are limited offerings, with prices firm at 59c to 60c outside.

Rye—There is little or nothing offering and prices are firm at 46c outside.

WELL PAID SERVICES.

Why Patron Pringle Has a Fondness for the Mowat Government.

Allen Pringle, a Lennox County Patron of Industry, has been pretty active for some time past in trying to persuade his brother Patrons in South Oxford to hold on to Sir Richard Cartwright. A good many of the farmers of Oxford, having become tired of Sir Richard's candidature, insisted that if he was still to be sent to Parliament, some county less than three hundred miles from his own home, in all reason should do its share in carrying the burden. By the last Farmers' Sun, it appears that Mr. Pringle has been liberally dealt with already by the Mowat Government, and his zeal just now to transform the Patron order into a sort of donkey engine for the Liberal party at the next election may be understood very easily. At the great Chicago Exhibition the Mowat Government decided to have a honey exhibit, although just how the Ontario honey interests were to reap any advantages from it was not apparent. No American demand for Canadian honey was created thus, and no Canadians were induced to become greater honey consumers. All the same, that particular exhibit cost the tax-payers of this Province the little figure of $3,170.40. That outlay convinced at least one family, no doubt, there is a good deal more money in the honey business, if rightly worked, than was generally imagined. Patron Pringle received the appointment of Superintendent of that honey show, and tax-payers have now fair reason to know that he did not make a bad thing out of it. He drew, for salary and expenses, $2,289.43, and Miss Pringle, as assistant, received $579.57, or $2,869 for the two of them. A number of the other Superintendents—all friendly, of course, to the present Ontario Government and the Liberal candidates for Ottawa—were about as liberally paid. How much benefit the tax-payers are getting back for these extravagant outlays it puzzles a good many people to find out.

Character in Hosiery.

In the matter of the stocking, which sometimes shows a bit above the boot on windy days when the pavement is wet, the woman's code ordains that the stocking shall be as smooth and snug as well as well-shaped webbing and modern invention in the matter of clasps and buckles can make it. Any right-minded girl, with any sort of rectitude in principle, will fasten her stockings with safety pins before she will let them wrinkle down over her boots. When a woman sees one of her sisters with wrinkled stockings, down goes the barometer of her opinion, If the offender has a husband, the other woman knows he doesn't care for her, and she doesn't blame him any. That her children are not properly fed, that she gives her baby paregoric, that she neglects her household to be running after false gods, societies for the study of Hindustanee or something equally futile, goes without saying. If a girl wears wrinkled stockings there isn't a woman in the world would want her son to marry the girl, because her top drawer is sure to be full of curl paper and always in a mess, the buttons and tapes off her clothes, and, generally speaking, her character and disposition wholly unreliable. She would, if she were married, shut a man's dress shirts into the drawer so as to break the bosoms, she would leave his socks all undarned or stick the rents together with court plaster, let baby sit down on his new silk hat, and never have her sheets and pillow cases numbered and in order.

THE LITTLE BOY WAS SAVED.

A MOTHER'S WORDS.

"Lactated Food saved our little boy. We had tried seven different kinds of prepared foods, besides the various ways of giving oat-meal, lime-water, and almost everything else. He was as thin as it was possible for a child to be, and we have since learned that the doctor expected he would die. Another doctor recommended Lactated Food. We hesitated about making a change, as he was so low. We used Lactated Food, however, and it saved his life. He is now two years old, fat and perfectly well."

No other food known to physicians and mothers can do the life-saving work that Lactated Food does from day to day.

SPECIAL MENTION.

—Toronto's civic holiday has been fixed for August 19th.

IF SICK HEADACHE IS MISERY, what are Carter's Little Liver Pills if they will positively cure it? People who have used them speak frankly of their worth. They are small and easy to take.

THERE IS NO ONE ARTICLE IN THE LINE OF medicines that gives so large a return for the money as a good porous strengthening plaster, such as Carter's Smart Weed and Belladonna Backache Plasters.

But one opinion prevails through the world and that is most strongly in favor of Perry Davis PAIN-KILLER, that no other article ever attained so wide spread popularity. 25 cents buys a big bottle.

TRULY ASTONISHING.—Miss Annette N. Moen, Fountain, Minn., says: "Ayer's Cherry Pectoral has had a wonderful effect in curing my brother's children of a severe and dangerous cold. It was truly astonishing how speedily they found relief after taking this preparation."

ARE YOU CLEANSED?

WITHOUT CLEANSING THERE IS NO TRUE LIFE.

PURE BLOOD MEANS HEALTH AND STRENGTH.

In spring time nature commences to don a fresh attire. She puts on new garments and decks herself with fresh beauties. She throws aside the dull and dead condition of winter with its accumulated impurities, and is infused with a new and vigorous life.

In like manner, at this season should all men and women banish the weights and burdens of impurities with which the system is filled. The blood is filled and clogged with poison and disease; the nerves are weak; the muscles are flabby and relaxed. The whole system is like a disordered house; it requires cleansing, setting in order, that all the machinery may work safely and harmoniously.

Thousands who have been cleansed and made strong by Paine's Celery Compound, willingly support the assertion that this medicine cleanses and rejuvenates the human system in spring time in a way that not no other medicine can do. It gives new life, fresh red blood, vigor and strength to the weak, nervous, rheumatic and dyspeptic, and makes the skin of those suffering from blood diseases as soft and clean as that of a little child.

Mr. D. McMahon, of Peterborough, Ont, thankful for new and fresh blood and renewed health, writes as follows:—

"I have great pleasure in testifying to the fact that Paine's Celery Compound has caused a remarkable change in my condition. I was troubled with a very bad type of Eczema on my face, and in patches over my body for four years; and was under treatment of three doctors at different periods. I have also tried other remedies, but all proved useless. At last I bought a bottle of Paine's Celery Compound, and put in Iodide of Potassium as recommended on the label. The one bottle did me so much good that I bought five bottles more, and now am happy to say I am perfectly cured, and completely free from the troublesome disease."

Safe, Sure and Painless.

What a world of meaning this statement embodies. Just what you are looking for—is it not? Putnam's Painless Corn Extractor—the great sure-pop corn cure—acts in this way. It makes no sore spots; safe, acts speedily and with certainty; sure and mildly, without inflaming the parts; painlessly. Do not be imposed upon by imitations of substitutes.

A meeting of former members of the Knights of Labor organization was held last night at W. Malcolm's and the probability is that the order will be re-established here.

R. Arnott, the lessee of the bay bridge last year, says he will not tender this year. During the very cold weather in February he had to have five men cutting ice around the piers and he says this ate up all his profit.

Drop into Haines & Lockett's to-morrow at the shoe opening and see a display of all the newest styles of boots and low shoes, without being asked to buy anything. Sample pairs will be placed on stands or tables all marked in plain figures. The display will be well worth seeing.

You are too young, no matter what your age, to lose your hair. Save it by the use of Ayer's Hair Vigor. It removes dandruff, prevents baldness, restores gray and faded hair to its original color, and makes it soft, glossy, and abundant. No toilet is complete without it.

Cholera and all summer complaints are so quick in their action that the cold hand of death is upon the victims before they are aware that danger is near. If attacked do not delay in getting the proper medicine. Try a dose of Dr. J. D. Kellog's Dysentery Cordial, and you will get immediate relief. It acts with wonderful rapidity and never fails to effect a cure.

Be careful as to the kind of Boots or Shoes you wear. Just as much comfort and a great deal more satisfaction can be got from a neat, close fitting Shoe or Boot as from a loose, ill-fitting one. What you want is a Boot or Shoe the right shape for the foot and the proper thing to do is to go right to Haines & Lockett's and get fitted at the store. The variety is so immense, you must have a queer foot indeed if you can't get just what you want.

Faust.

When Lewis Morrison takes the character of Mephisto, in a certain line he says, He is mine, all mine, body and soul. So it is with a customer that buys one of Gough's men's blue serge suits at $3.75, he exclaims, Your mine, all mine, coat, vest and pants, and only $3.75 at Gough's only.

A MAGNIFICENT GIFT.

MR. H. A. MASSEY OFFERS $10,000 TO ALBERT COLLEGE.

Provided a Similar Sum be Raised in This City—An Energetic and no doubt Successful Effort will be Made to Utilize This Grand Offer.

Mr. H. A. Massey has evinced the true spirit of liberality, having signified to the management of Albert College that he would give them $10,000 for new buildings or for the remodeling of those they already occupy, provided a similar sum be raised in the city.

The management has taken the matter in hand in an energetic manner, with the result that the responses have been extremely liberal, so that there is no doubt but that Mr. Massey's liberal gift will be supplemented by a like sum.

Rip.

Mr. M. M. Thompson has a bright terrier dog called "Rip," known by all the small boys in town as a dog that will not take an affront, but figuratively trails the tail of his coat in the dust with a dare-devil sparkle in his eye, as much as to say tread on the tail of my coat if you dare. These pugnacious qualities on the part of Rip keep his master in a certain state of mental "stew," as only when lying calmly in his master's window after having made a night of it, is Mr. Thompson's mind at ease about his favorite.

Now Mack Moon has a dog for which he regularly contributes to the city exchequer, and it would look as if at some recent period Rip's ancestors had yelped disrespect to to the ancestors of Mr. Moon's dog, which he has taken to heart and is determined to wipe it out with blood.

Rip is loyal to his antecedents and his bob-tail bobs in a vicious manner when he meets his old enemy, as he did this morning, when without fear of arrests by the police, bystanders were enabled to "enjoy" the excitement of a genuine dog fight when the two canines met. Mr. Thompson, ever in the alert in the care for his pet, endeavored to part them, when the Moon dog resisted the interference and severely bit Mr. Thompson in the hand, but we are pleased to find that the bite is in no way dangerous.

On Saturday several conferences were held as to the establishment of a blast furnace here, says the Whig. The civic and Board of Trade committees could not agree with the visitors as to terms. The offer of the representatives of the blast furnace was not accepted, and another proposition which seemed to be fair was made to them and declined. It was intimated that the city would give $100,000 when the blast furnace was completed, and after the manufacture of pig iron was begun, another $100,000 would be given, but the visitors held for $300,000. The company has a blast furnace in Youngstown, Ohio, which is on a site wanted for a railway station and the furnace would be moved here if arrangements could be made. G. E. Hamilton left for Belleville to-day and his brother and Mr. Caulfield remained here.

I. H. Breck thinks the Council should be very careful in dealing with the smelting works company. If the offer of the company was for them to put in $300,000 and then ask the city to guarantee their bonds it would be different.

Remained Till Midnight.

Mr. G. E. Hamilton, one of the blast furnace company who are negotiating for a site here, was shown about the city by several prominent gentlemen yesterday afternoon and evening. Col. Hendrick interested himself in his countryman and helped to make his few hours stay pass pleasantly. Mr. Hamilton is an inveterate sportsman, fishing being his favorite pastime. Although a business man he occupies his leisure moments in making cartoons for "Judge," the New York comic paper. He left on the midnight train to join his brother in Kingston.

May Run to Belleville.

Mr. Ira A. Breck stated this morning that he, although an old man, hopes to see the Kingston Street Railway line extended as far as Belleville. This may be taken as a measure of the comparative enterprise of Belleville and Kingston. There is no talk of running the Belleville Street Railway to this city.—Kingston News.

Don't be jealous, neighbor. Belleville won't talk of extending her Street Railway until she gets one. Moreover, if Belleville were such an unenterprising place as the News' silly scribe implies, Kingston would not be anxious to secure a second railway connection with her.

Election of Officers.

Below are the officers of C. O. O. F. of Plainfield, for the ensuing term:—John McCreary, N.G.; E. O. Platt, Secretary; E. Horton, Ass't Sec.; D. T. Gillespie, P. N.G.; S. Moore, Treas.; S. M. Campbell, L.M.; M. Jones, Conductor; Jno. Howard, Warden; Richard Cole, R.S.N.G.; James Hamilton, L.S.N.G.; Sam'l Hodgen, R.S. V.G.; Wm. Parker, L.S.V.G.; Albert Pitman, I.G. Our Past Noble Grand filled the office with credit to himself and to the Lodge. The order is progressing remarkably well.—E. O. PLATT, Sec'y.

Pastry that is light and dainty, crowns every dinner in homes where Dr. Price's Baking Powder is used.

Another Fire Yesterday.

About 4:15 yesterday afternoon the firemen were called to put out a fire in a double house on Mill st. owned by Major Farley and occupied by Saul Mouck. The blaze started in a partition and was put out with little difficulty. The contents of house were much damaged by smoke and water and on them there was no insurance. The building was damaged to the extent of about $100. No insurance.

Something New.

Haines & Lockett will have a grand shoe opening to-morrow, a sample pair of nearly every kind of spring styles of boots, low shoes and slippers will be displayed on eight handsome show tables. Each shoe will have price marked in plain figures and no one will be asked to buy anything. Ladies and gentlemen are invited to step in and make themselves acquainted with what will be worn in shoes this spring.

Only $12.00.

The $12 Black Worsted Suit Gough is showing this spring is worthy of your attention. To commence with, the material is of a very superior class of French worsted; it is lined with A 1 all wool farmer's satin, and is tailor-made throughout. Of course we have cheaper ones at $8, $9, and $10, but our $12 suit is a beauty, and would cost you $18 any place else. See it—at Gough's only.

Funeral of the Late Mr. Kinch.

The funeral of the late George Kinch took place yesterday afternoon and was largely attended. The service was held in St. John's church and was conducted by the Rev. Mr. Bogert. The bearers were Messrs. C. Rainbow, F. Ford, A. Simmons, J. Sharp, R. Appleby and J. Black.

FURTHER ACKNOWLEDGMENTS.

Sir Mackenzie Bowell Expresses his Thanks to the School Board and the Children.

PRIVY COUNCIL, CANADA,
OTTAWA, 14th March, 1895.

S. A. Moore, Esq., Chairman High and Public School Board, Belleville, Ont.

MY DEAR SIR,—I cannot too warmly thank you and the members of the Board over which your preside, for the honor done me in permitting the pupils of the Belleville High and Public Schools to take part in the demonstration of welcome extended to me by the people of your city on Tuesday last. It was a tribute of esteem which I never shall forget.

I shall regard it as a favor if you will convey to the school children my very sincere appreciation of the part they took. It was a pleasure which I cannot find words to express to see their smiling faces and hear their words of welcome. It reminds me of the happy days of the past when I was also a pupil in the Public Schools of Belleville. Your beautiful city was then but a village and the standard of instruction lower than it is to-day. Let me hope that the pupils of the present may appreciate their advantages, and lay the foundations for lives of usefulness when they begin the struggle of life in earnest.

Wishing them success, and thanking you again, I remain, etc.,

Sincerely yours,
MACKENZIE BOWELL.

ALBERT COLLEGE.

The following letter from the Premier of the Dominion was received by Dr. Dyer and read by him before the students, assembled in the College chapel this morning. The latter evinced their satisfaction at this recognition from Sir Mackenzie Bowell by giving the College "cry" in right good style:

PRIVY COUNCIL, CANADA,
OTTAWA, March 14th, 1894.

Prof. Dyer, Albert College, Belleville, Ont.

MY DEAR SIR.—I shall feel greatly pleased if you will accept for yourself and staff of teachers my unfeigned thanks for the honor conferred upon me in permitting the students of Albert College to join in the demonstration of welcome tendered me by the citizens of Belleville on Tuesday last. To me, as an old Belleville Boy, it was indeed an honor which, I trust, I fully appreciate. I shall certainly never forget it.

Kindly convey to your students my sincere appreciation of the part they took, as well as my earnest desire for their success in whatever walk in life they may choose. The educational advantages which they enjoy are vastly superior to those which were obtained in Belleville some fifty or sixty years ago, and are calculated to fit them for lives of usefulness and eminence. They should also realize that Canada presents an inviting field to the ambitions of her young men—no privileged class standing in their way—and that in commercial, professional or public life, they may reach the topmost rung of the ladder. The very humblest of them may aspire to the highest position in the land.

Again assuring you of my gratitude and good wishes,

Believe me, &c.,
Sincerely yours,
MACKENZIE BOWELL.

A DEFEAT AND A VICTORY.

For several years past it has been the custom of the Irish members of the Curling Club to play a match against any other members of the Club who cared to face them. Sometimes the challenge was taken up by the Scotch and sometimes by rinks of mixed nationalities, but so well have the sons of the Green Isle exerted themselves to uphold the national honor that upon one occasion only previous to yesterday had they suffered defeat, and that by a team of All-Comers. Yesterday was another "bad day for Ireland," as the All-Comers once more overcome their Hibernian fellows in the Club; but one stern satisfaction the Irishmen have, namely that the Scotch—who claim to be the originators of the game and Past Masters in the art of playing it—have never won a St. Patrick's day game.

In yesterday's match the ice was hard and keen and there was much excellent play, particularly in the latter part of the game. The wearers of the green started off gaily with a five end, but by steady play the All-Comers, whose Skip, Mr. Thos. Ritchie, played the best game of his life, gradually gained the lead, which they held to the end, winning by 3 shots. Following is the score:

IRISHMEN.	ALL-COMERS.
M. D. Ward	W. Webster
John Bonar	W. W. Pope
Jas. V. Jenkins	H. K. Smith
F. Dolan, skip—13	T. Ritchie, skip—16

The game was for a bag of flour for the caretaker.

Although tired by the afternoon game, the Irishmen accepted a challenge at night from Mr. Ritchie to play another game for a bag of flour for the caretaker. The same rinks could not be got together again, but a good game resulted, and the result was a bad defeat for the challengers. The record is as follows:

IRISHMEN.	ALL-COMERS.
M. M. Wright	H. Smart
M. D. Ward	J. A. McFee
John Bonar	H. K. Smith
F. Dolan, skip—21	T. Ritchie, skip—12

Mr. G. E. Hamilton, of New York, one of the steel works company, was an interested spectator and finally becoming impressed with the idea that, although he had never curled, he ought to be able to play, tried a few stones and made a promising debut as a player in the "roarin' game."

Since it received the highest award at the World's Columbian Exposition the sales of Dr. Price's have exceeded those of all other baking powders.

Died at Kingston.

The deepest sorrow and regret is felt says the Kingston Whig, at the sudden death, yesterday, of W. B. Gordon, one of the members of the year '97, Queen's College. For about six weeks Mr. Gordon had been ill, suffering from asthma and also a slight fever. He was improving, however, and had intended to go home, today, to Lonsdale, between Napanee, and Belleville. Yesterday, however, he had a sudden attack of heart failure and died at 11:30 o'clock.

Mr. Gordon was a good student in every sense of the word and was much liked by all who knew him. He was of a very quiet, unassuming disposition, a conscientious worker and kind and courteous in all his student relationships. He was secretary of his year when in the freshman term. His intention was to take an honor course in honor philosophy before entering divinity hall. He was very ambitious and strong spirited, but a naturally delicate constitution would not stand the strain of work. Of his worth and character his most intimate friends speak in the highest terms.

The funeral took place yesterday at Lonsdale and was attended by a number of his classmates, and associates in the Y.M. C.A.

To Horse Owners.

WALTER FANNING.

ECCLESIASTICAL PRECEDENCE.

Mr. Ritchie, President of the Board of Trade, Replies to the Rev. Dr. Carman.

On the day following the banquet to the Premier, it became known that the Rev. Dr. Carman, General Superintendent of the Methodist Church, had declined an invitation, on the ground that a Roman Catholic clergyman having been asked to say grace, whereby the order of precedence contended for by the General Conference of his denomination would be ignored, and on Saturday he published a long letter in the Ontario to that effect.

The following explanation from Mr. Thos. Ritchie, President of the Board of Trade, was published in the Ontario, and in justice to all concerned and in order to give the matter as wide a circulation as possible, we reproduce Mr. Ritchie's communication herewith:

To the Editor of the ONTARIO.

DEAR SIR:—It is quite contrary to my inclination to be drawn into a newspaper controversy respecting the subject of the Rev. Dr. Carman's letter in Saturday's Ontario. This letter, however, has laid upon me the obligation to publicly explain certain facts relating to the late banquet in honor of Sir Mackenzie Bowell, though without at all imposing upon me the duty of dealing with the general question of ecclesiastical precedence and preferences, which is the subject of his letter. The occasion of that letter is the Rev. Monsignor Farrelly being asked to say grace at the banquet, and it is with this incident alone I have to do.

As the reverend doctor seems to have had quite a misconception of the matter, it is to be regretted that he did not seek an explanation from me personally. Had he done so, I am quite certain he would have been perfectly satisfied that no offence was either committed or intended by that incident, as he implies there was, and that of a most serious character, when he says, "Protestant Christianity ought not willingly and silently to submit to insult and the insult of the Methodist Church in my own city." Neither, again, would he have in effect asserted that "many" seats of honor were allotted to members of the Reform party either by right or subtlety," for no political distinctions whatever were recognized in arranging the banquet, which, by the way, was not a civic function, as he erroneously conceives, but one entirely under the auspices and management of the Board of Trade. The civic function was that held in the afternoon. At the banquet the chair was occupied by myself by virtue of my office, and the vice-chair by Mr. J. G. Frost as Vice-President of the Board of Trade. The other vice-chairs by three other gentlemen solely because they are prominent and active members of the Board. The banquet then, let it be understood, was wholly an affair of the Belleville Board of Trade from beginning to end. The only official invitations issued were those to the members of the Dominion and Ontario cabinets and a number of prominent public men throughout the Dominion, outside the city, and to residents in the city, only to His Worship the Mayor and the United States Consul.

No official invitations were sent to any clergymen, those of them who honored us with their presence either bought their tickets or had them presented to them as a personal compliment from individual members of the Board of trade. This being the case, the Council of the Board of Trade had no cognizance of any clergymen about to be present at the banquet. But anticipating the religious service of grace before meat, I took upon myself, as I had authority to do in virtue of my position, but without any request or suggestion from any person inside or outside the Board, to inquire what ministers of religion would likely be present. The first names which suggested themselves to me were the Rev. Canon Burke and the Rev. Mgr. Farrelly, and these not in any way on account of ecclesiastical pre-eminence but simply as the oldest men. I found that the first had expressed his regrets to the gentleman who sent him an invitation that he would be unable to be there. Afterwards, casually meeting the Rev. Monseigneur Farrelly on the street, and learning from him that he was going to try to be at the banquet, I expressed a hope that he would be able to be there, and that if present, I would take the liberty of calling upon him to say grace. The Rev. Dr. Carman's name did not occur to me up to this time, for I had no idea whatever of the subject of ecclesiastical precedence, but my simple thought was of it being a courteous thing to ask the clergyman who was the oldest man to officiate. When spoken to about the matter afterwards, I, having acted on one ground, refused to recede and act upon another. I may be permitted to say here, in justice to Monsignor Farrelly, that when I spoke to him he instantly replied to me, in substance saying, "Mr. Ritchie, you had really better not call upon me. Other clergymen will be present, and there may be ill feeling aroused among some people in town were I to be asked to say grace, as there has foolishly been, I understand, formerly on some similar occasions. I had rather you would pass me by, for the sake of pleasantness and harmony among our citizens."

Thus it will be distinctly understood that upon my shoulders alone must rest the whole responsibility. Yours truly,

THOS. RITCHIE.

Sixty-two more biscuit can be made with a pound can of Dr. Price's Baking Powder than with any other kind.

A Machinists' Association.

Mr. John Reed, of Stratford, organizer for the International Machinists' Association, is in the city endeavoring to organize an Association here. A meeting was held last evening at the Hastings House, but owing to the short notice there was not a large attendance. Another meeting will be held on Wednesday evening. The Association is doubly protective, guarding the interests of the mechanic and, through their monthly journal, notifying employers of dead beats. There is every probability of an Association being formed in this city.

A New Grocery Business.

Mr. T. J. Benson will in a few days open a grocery in the Cronk block, two doors north of this office, under the firm name of T. J. Benson & Co. Mr. Benson, who is well known in the city and surrounding district, has had several years' experience in this line of business, and is thoroughly conversant with its every phase. He will carry nothing but the very best goods, which will be sold at the lowest living profit. He expects to be ready for business by Saturday next.

Nervous People

And those who are all tired out and have that tired feeling or sick headache can be relieved of all these symptoms by taking Hood's Sarsaparilla, which gives nerve mental and bodily strength and thoroughly purifies the blood. Interesting to Mothers.

Just now mothers are on the look-out for something neat and nobby for their boys to wear, and before making their purchases it will be interesting to them to take a look through Gough's stock. We are showing a very pretty two-piece suit for $1.25, but we think our three-piece suit at $2.50 is a gem. We feel quite proud of this suit. See it—at Gough's only.

A Visitor From Revelstoke.

Mrs. Ernest McLean, of Revelstoke, B.C., arrived home in Belleville this evening after nearly a year's absence. Her numerous friends in Belleville will be delighted to have her sojourn here for a time. Dr. McLean did not accompany Mrs. McLean; having built up a large and lucrative practice in the Kootenay District, he found it inconvenient to leave home for such a length of time. Mrs. McLean will be domiciled at Hotel Quinte with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. W. L. Hamilton. Just here a few words descriptive of Revelstoke, B.C., would not be inopportune. These few remarks are condensed from a lengthy description found in a copy of the Saturday Night, of Winnipeg. The name of Revelstoke is already well known throughout the mining world as being the supply point of the famous Kootenay mineral country. Its history has been replete with stirring incidents. It was named after Lord Revelstoke, head of the famous banking house, Baring Bros., London, Eng., which firm loaned the money for that section of the C.P.R. The town is situated on the Columbia River, which is navigable, a fine steamer, the "Lytton," plying on its waters. It is the only entrance to the Kootenay mining district and the direct gateway to the Big Bend gold field. It is a thriving town with every prospect of being a great commercial centre in the not far distant future.

Mr. Holdich, of the School of Mines, says, "There has already been discovered within a radius of fifty miles of this place almost every known mineral, including gold, silver, lead, copper, iron, arsenic, antimony, bismuth, platinum, asbestos and mica." So that Revelstoke is "the future metropolis of a fabulously rich mining district." It is a wide-awake western town. The climate is healthy, its mildness being wonderfully beneficial to persons with a tendency to lung diseases. The land is rich black loam, while wild fruits and flowers abound. Revelstoke boasts of three churches, Roman Catholic, Presbyterian and Methodist, and the adherents of the Anglican church are contemplating the erection of a place of worship. There is also a fine school building with graded classes. There are seven hotels and stores conducted by energetic business men. It is a customs port of entry. There is also a large bonded warehouse. Revelstoke also has a first-class telephone system connecting all the stores, hotels, station and leading private residences. The question of lighting the town with electricity is being discussed. It has also one of the best papers in the interior, "The Kootenay Mail." Messrs. C. B. Hume & Co., general merchants, do a large business which amounted to $50,000 last year. Revelstoke can be no more judged than Belleville, as seen from the windows of a passing train, as the town proper is a quarter of a mile from the C.P.R. station." This is a short article on Revelstoke, and the half has not been told.

The affirmative was ably supported by Messrs. C. C. Otten, J. Wellwood and D. A. Brown, while the negative was supported by Mr. O. McCurdy, Mr. W. E. Paquin and Mr. Walters. Many interesting points were brought out by both sides, which showed that there had been some hard study, considering the short time for preparation. The judges, Rev. Mr. Roberts, Mr. Dimond and Miss Phelps, decided in favor of the negative, to the satisfaction of all concerned. Miss A. Bosely occupied the chair.

CURED OF ASTHMA.

HOW A YOUNG LADY IN TORONTO WAS RESTORED TO HEALTH.

She Suffered for Years from this Distressing Complaint and on Occasions was Confined to her Room for Weeks—Her Father Tells How She Was Cured.

From Brockville Recorder.

Mr. Reuben Barber, architect of the city of Toronto, at one time a resident of Merrickville, has been visiting old friends and relatives in and around the village recently. While chatting with the RECORDER correspondent, the recent wonderful cures in the vicinity through the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills came up, when Mr. Barber said he had an experience in his own family quite as remarkable. Asked if he would give the particulars, Mr. Barber said that some seven years ago while living in Mount Forest, his daughter took a severe cold which developed into asthma. At first she would be confined to her room for days and to see her struggling for breath one would think she could not possibly live an hour. As she grew older the asthmatic spasms became more frequent and of longer duration. Sometimes she would be unable to leave her room for weeks, and then she would rally and be better for a short time. After we moved to Toronto she was put under the care of one of the best doctors in the city. At first his treatment seemed to help her, but after a few months she became as bad as ever and the medicine did not appear to do her the slightest good. We had now fully made up our minds that the trouble was incurable. We had read so much of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, that we determined to give them a trial, really looking upon them as a sort of forlorn hope. My daughter began taking the pills and continued the treatment for about six months, when she found herself entirely free from the distressing disease. Seven months have now passed since she took the last box, and she has never had the slightest spasm or return of the trouble. "She is now the picture of health," says Mr. Barber, and we give the entire credit to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and lose no opportunity of sounding the praises of this great medicine." These pills are a positive cure for all troubles arising from a vitiated condition of the blood or a shattered nervous system. Sold by all dealers or by mail, from Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, Brockville, Ont., or Schenectady, N. Y., at 50 cents a box, or six boxes for $2.50. There are numerous imitations and substitutions, against which the public is cautioned.

SPORTING TALK.

The heavy weights Jake Kilrain and Steve O'Donnell, Corbett's sparring partner, fought an eight round draw at Boston last night.

The Belleville and Mutes hockey teams will play a friendly game on the rink this evening, commencing at eight o'clock. This will likely be the last game of the season.

Now that hockey is about ended for this season those of a sporting ilk are turning to other amusements. The Ramblers' bicycle club will likely meet in a few days for organization, as Laurie Lockett, the Secretary, has received a communication from the C. W. A. Board, asking him to send in the names of our delegates to the annual meeting on April 12th. If the club has a membership of over fifty they will have fifty votes at the meeting. It is important that all who intend joining should do so as early as possible after organization that the club may have the above number of votes. All the local wheelmen are in favor of Peterborough getting the annual meet this season, but they will have to do something more, as strong representations will be made from the west in favor of Waterloo.

Belleville's New Street Railway.

The under ground system, which the Electric Street Railway Co. proposes to build, it is hoped will work successfully, but it will not be in it with the Pants which Gough, the Wonderful Cheap man, sells for $1.00 add $1.25. The $1.25 pants particularly—they are lined throughout—will wear like iron, and only cost $1.25, at Gough's only.

A PALE FACE comes from poor blood. Your blood needs to be enriched and vitalized. For this there's nothing in the world so thoroughly effective as Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. Children who are weak, thin, pale, and puny are made strong, plump, rosy, and robust by the "Discovery." It's especially adapted to them, too, from its pleasant taste. It's an appetizing, restorative tonic which builds up needed flesh and strength.

In every blood-taint or disorder, if it doesn't benefit or cure, you have your money back.

DR. R. V. PIERCE: Dear Sir—I will say that I used the "Medical Discovery" for my little girl, and she is entirely well. I cannot praise your medicines too highly. You may rest assured that you will always have my support.

Dangers of Delay.

If we were allowed to look into the future and see the fatal consequences that follow a neglected cold, how differently would our course be; could we realize our danger, how speedily we would seek a cure; but with many it is only when the monster disease has fastened its fangs upon our lungs that we awaken to our folly. What follows a neglected cold? It is not diseases of the throat and lungs, bronchitis, asthma, consumption, and many other diseases of like nature. Is it worse than madness to neglect a cold, and it is folly not to have some good remedy available for its frequent complaint. One of the most efficacious medicines for all diseases of the throat and lungs, is Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup. This medicine is composed of several medicinal herbs, which exert a most wonderful influence in curing consumption and other diseases of the lungs and chest. It promotes a free and easy expectoration, soothes irritation and drives the disease from the system.

I knew Charles Backerton Salemaker fairly intimately. He was a young man, mild-eyed, fair-haired, good-tempered, and—before he went on the staff of Home Happiness—conscientious. He was fond of describing himself as a good all-round journalist. I was one of the people who saw him last before his unfortunate and mysterious disappearance; and, as far as anyone can know why he disappeared, I know it.

I think the trouble really began when Home Happiness, an excellent magazine, supplied a long-felt want. The very first number supplied it fully; after that first number hardly anybody seemed to want any more. The streets of London were filled with crowds of people who were doing without the last issue of Home Happiness, and not minding it. Wherever the English language—or any other language—was spoken, there were earnest men and women who had never heard of the magazine, and did not even want to hear of it. And yet the editor was a man of talent. When hardly anybody bought his second number, he sent round a paragraph to the other papers to the effect that their esteemed contemporary, Home Happiness, was rapidly securing the first place among weekly journals of the domestic class. It is true that the other papers never inserted that paragraph, not considering it to be altogether funny enough, but still the thing showed enterprise. Then again, when the third number did not sell quite so well as the second, he advertised Home Happiness at all of the railroad stations as "A success unprecedented in the history of journalism!" Some people called this also enterprise, and some called it something shorter. And finally the editor did a very clever thing when he secured, at a moderate salary, the services of Charles Backerton Salemaker. Salemaker loved work; he worked willingly, and he was—at one time, at any rate—a conscientious man.

The paper started its first number with great profusion. In return for his salary, Salemaker was asked to write only a column a week, a column entitled "Politics for Papa." I know that he was uneasy about this, thinking and saying that he was afraid he was not really doing enough for the money he received. However, he did the column well. Any liberal or any conservative who read it would have found nothing with which it was possible to disagree. Salemaker said it was written from an independent standpoint. Subsequently prices were cut down; journalists fell off the staff of that paper like leaves before the blast, and their work was assigned to Salemaker without increase of salary.

When the art critic went it was Salemaker who was appointed to write that delightful column, "Through the Picture Galleries." "And this," he said to me, "gives me great pleasure, for I have never had it practically recognized that I know something about art." I could understand that, and told him so. I do not think he was quite so pleased when he was given a third column to do every week, because the third column was called "Notes for the Nursery." "However," he said, "one can always read up a subject." He bought two second-hand medical works on the treatment of children and quoted them alternately. The two medical works were diametrically opposed to each other on several important points, and in consequence there was a little trouble. He also invented a new game for infants, to be played with wax matches, and the editor got a furious post card saying that if the author of "Notes for the Nursery" had the feelings of a mother she would never have advocated a game which must lead to phosphorus poisoning and incendiarism in the end. Salemaker said that he would be more careful in future, and the editor—to show that he still had confidence in him—gave him two more columns to write every week.

I met him in the street a fortnight afterwards, and he was not looking quite as enthusiastic as usual. "Well," I said, "how's the paper, and have you got the feelings of a mother yet?"

"The paper is beginning to turn the corner," he said. It'll do very well in time. Of course there is none of the silly extravagance that there was at first. The staff has been very much reduced."

"Then who does the work?"

"Well, I write eight columns for every number myself now, and the editor does not want to be tied down to one subject. Besides the paper is practically turning the corner now."

I advised him not to overwork himself, and he hurried away to the office; I thought he seemed paler and thinner than he used to be.

That night, after dinner, I was alone in my chambers, when suddenly Salemaker arrived.

"It's a terrible business!" he exclaimed, as he came in at the door. He did not look himself. He seemed indignant and distraught. He was wearing his hat very much on the back of his head. I gently removed his hat, made him sit down, gave him something to smoke, and asked him what was the matter.

"It's a perfectly terrible business. I've just come from the office. I wanted to consult you," he said, rather incoherently.

"I see," I said. "The success unprecedented in the history of journalism is going to stop—going to put up its poor, unhappy shutters."

"Nothing of the kind. The paper is now, as a matter of fact, definitely turning the corner."

"Do you know," I asked, "that you've already told me that twice to-day?"

He sighed.

"Have I?" he said drearily. "Very likely. I've got into the habit of saying it whenever I hear the paper mentioned. Let me tell you what's happened. We've got a column in the paper called 'The Height of Fashion,' a column for women, you understand."

"Quite so."

"Well, it used to be written by a lady journalist, a Miss Catling. It was one of the most popular features of the paper. Now the editor, on the plea of economy, has turned her off, or, rather, asked her to write gratuitously. She says she won't work for nothing, and she doesn't care. She says she shall go and be a new woman, and write an improper novel. You can see she's cut up about it."

"Well," I said, "I'm sure your sympathy with her does you credit, and if the editor discontinues the most popular feature, it may retard the progress of the paper, but after all—"

"Stop!" he said irritably, "that isn't it at all. 'The Height of Fashion' is to come out every week as usual, but the scandalous—the absurd—I may say the unspeakable thing about it is that I've got to write it." He laughed bitterly. "I, Charles Backerton Salemaker—moi qui vous parle—have got to write a fashion article for women. Think of it! Picture it!"

"Why don't you protest?"

"Protest? What else do you think I've been doing at the office except protesting? Heaven knows I don't mind work. I give them plenty for their money. I write the politics, the art and the nursery notes, and other things besides, and I've never complained. I told you that I did eight columns a week. That was a lie. I wrote eleven then, and I have just had two more put onto me. 'The Height of Fashion' makes the thirteenth. I lied to you because I was ashamed to say how much I did. I had high principles once, but Home Happiness has about done for them. You see, publishers won't send us books for review—say they've never heard of us. Theatre managers won't send us tickets. What's the consequence? I review books I've never read, and criticise plays I've never seen; I always notice them favorably, and so I've never been found out. Last night I wrote an obituary of a man who isn't dead, and some 'Genuine Experiences of a Detective,' which I never was. But that was honesty itself compared with what the editor wants now. Besides," he added, more quietly and reflectively, "it will be a very difficult thing to write that article without being bowled out."

I said that the subject was probably much easier than was generally supposed. I had known some girls who appeared to be singularly, impressively stupid, and yet they thoroughly understood fashions.

"Ah, yes," he said, it is not so much a question of brains as a question of instinct. All women have the instinct. You think the subject easy? I'll guarantee you don't even understand the elements of it, the mere question of structure, letting alone ornamentation. Here's a thing that may happen any day, and I've seen it myself: The top half of a woman's dress has two rows of buttons and button holes; one row is genuine, practical and works; the other row is pure 'fake,' just put on out of exuberance. Can you tell me which is which? No, you can't, and I can't, but a girl of twelve could without looking. Then there are dresses which can never be put on at all—at least, one would say so if there wasn't a woman inside them. How did the woman get there? The only possible explanation is that she was melted down, poured in through the collar and allowed to set. I say that it is the only possible explanation, but I am perfectly well aware that it is not the right one. And you can't tell me the right one. I don't know and can't find out the bare elements of the subject."

"Then why didn't you tell the editor so?"

"I did," said the Salemaker, pacing excitedly up and down the room. "He's a married man, and has got two sisters into the bargain to my certain knowledge. He lives in the atmosphere of it. He would only have to leave the women in a room together and nature would do the rest. They would begin to talk clothes, and he could have his clerk at the keyhole to take it all down in shorthand. That would give him something to go upon. As for me I have not got one living female relation. However, he wouldn't hear of doing it himself. He said he had enough to do already. He told me that a good all-round journalist could write any article on anything."

A Dinner Pill.—Many persons suffer excruciating agony after partaking of a hearty dinner. The food partaken of is like a ball of lead upon the stomach, and instead of being a healthy nutriment it becomes a poison to the system. Dr. Parmelee's Vegetable Pills are wonderful correctives of such troubles. They correct acidity, open the secretions and convert the food partaken of into healthy nutriment. They are just the medicine to take if troubled with Indigestion or Dyspepsia.

THE change from the extremely delicate coloring of the past few years with such monotonous effects, to the stronger, richer colorings of to-day, is not so much a change in fashion as an improvement in taste. When a decorator was timid or inartistic, he avoided strong colors as a child avoids the fire. He had little or no conception of how to use them; hence he remained in the cold montony of whites and grays. If now and again he tentatively ventured in colors, the results were so awful that he would shrink in horror from another such attempt. Some bolder and more callous spirits made picturesque and kaleidoscopic effects which they urged upon innocent and amiable people as artistic; but that sunflower æstheticism did not last. It had the merit of garish effect or of artistic sensationalism only. It could not last. Good taste, like good sense, will always prevail. As a sort of protest against the sunflower sensationalism, the dainty period of creamy-white timidity came into vogue. Many decorators knew that oddities of form and color could not be used in marble halls and maidens' boudoirs, but they did not have the independence to risk an open defiance of the prevalent style. They found a sort of refuge under "A Milk White Flag" of nonentity. The wall-paper manufacturers assumed the risk of putting colors into their papers for this season. The results are beautiful in the products and profitable to the consumer. Strong, rich colors are precisely what the people were waiting for; employed judiciously, they are precisely what they should have. This is an era of strong colors. It is also an era of good taste. It is the period of the golden mean between the eccentricities of the sunflower sensationalism, of riotous vulgarity, and the dreary daintiness of whitey timidity. It is not only philosophic to use strong colors, but it is artistic, æsthetic, and delightful—the climax of all things true, good, and beautiful.

THE ONTARIO LEGISLATURE

Division on Appointment of County Officers

PATRONS VOTE WITH GOVERNMENT

Their Plank Is Elective Officials and Failing This Let the Government Appoint the Registrars, Etc.—A Motion on the Question Defeated by 33 Hardy's Ten Jurors Bill.

Toronto, March 20.—On the question of the appointment of county officials Sir Oliver Mowat, with the help of the Patron party, secured a majority of 33. The subject was brought up by Dr. Meacham, who moved this amendment to the motion that the House resolve into Committee of Supply:

"That in the opinion of this House the present mode of appointing registrars of fees and other county officials is unsatisfactory, and should be changed, and that the appointment of the said officials, whose salaries are paid in full or mainly by the counties by which they are appointed, should not be vested in the Executive of the Province, but in the people of the locality through their municipal bodies."

The amendment formed a text for a debate, which occupied the attention of the House for over two hours, the debate being conducted vigorously on all sides.

Mr. Meacham contended that under the present system the country was called upon to pay large salaries to party hacks, whose sole qualification was that they had served the Government and made a business of their politics.

Sir Oliver Mowat replied that the amendment was brought forward at a most inconvenient time, as it did not admit of an amendment following. That all appointments should be vested in the County Councils meant a great change, and one that should not be made without much care and caution. He accused the Opposition of having brought the motion as a party dodge. The Conservatives, he said, had no hope that they would be able to make provincial appointments, therefore they were anxious to abolish them.

Mr. Whitney characterized the Premier as an old Tory, who did not like the idea of losing control of an army of office-holders, who, at general election times, were broadcast over the land as political heelers, doing election work for the Government.

Mr. McNichol, on behalf of the Patrons, said his party wanted all officials elected, and announced that they would vote against the amendment.

Messrs. Biggar, Dryden, Marter, Matheson and several others also spoke upon the question, and then a division was taken, with this result: Yeas 23, nays 56; majority for the Government 33. There was no cross voting; the Patrons voted solid with the Government, with the exception of Mr. Gamey, who shirked the vote, and the two P.P.A. members registered with the Opposition.

Mr. Hardy's bill, allowing ten jurors in civil cases to give a verdict, was read a second time. In moving for the second reading, the Commissioner of Crown Lands expressed surprise that difficulties had not arisen in the past of so striking a character as to cause a change before now. It very often happened, he said, that a disagreement of a jury worked against the ends of justice, and furthermore it was contrary to the very general rule that the majority shall govern. Under the new arrangement, the majority would be so preponderating as to be overwhelming in character.

Mr. Whitney, for his part, would have welcomed the abolition altogether of juries in civil cases. The provisions of the new bill, he was afraid, would not result in unmixed good. Had the gentlemen who introduced the bill considered the effect which this change would have on the trial of cases against municipal corporations, which were increasing in number and which formed a serious outlook for many corporations? It struck him that the proposed change would not be in the interests of the greater number in such cases. Besides, if the question was to resolve into a less number than the whole number, where was the magic of 12 jurors? If five-sixths of the jury were to decide the case, why not have six jurors, and let five out of the six decide, thus lessening the expense of litigation and the onerous burden cast upon the men who had to discharge jury duty?

Mr. Hardy's bill providing for the payment of jurors when detained over Sunday, and also that in the case of jurors not residing in the county town and who are informed by the judge that their attendance will not be required for several days, and they are at liberty to go home, their per diem allowance shall not be deducted for a period not exceeding two days, was read a second time.

Sir Oliver's bill respecting convictions under municipal bylaws was also read a second time. The bill provides that no conviction made under a municipal bylaw passed in pursuance of any act of this Legislature shall be deemed invalid or be quashed for want of proper proof of such bylaw before the convicting justice, but upon any application to quash such conviction the court to which the application is made may, in its discretion, dispense with proof of the bylaw or may allow the same to be proved before it by affidavit or by the production of a copy duly certified.

The Attorney-General's bill providing that when any expression of time occurs in any act of the Ontario Legislature or in any legal instrument the time referred to shall be held to be eastern standard time also passed the second reading.

The House went into committee on and reported Mr. Hardy's bill respecting road allowances in the Rainy River survey.

Hon. Mr. Dryden introduced two bills respecting the Department of Agriculture and to amend the Agriculture and Arts Act, consolidating and revising the law relating to matters under the control of the Agriculture Department. The act abolishes the Agriculture and Arts Association, except to declare that they are to hold their property in trust until Jan. 1, 1896, for the public uses of the province, at the end of which time they are to come under the control of the department. Under the act the copying of the pedigree books, etc., is transferred to the department. It is believed that Secretary Wade will be appointed by the Government to continue this work.

Mr. Marter introduced a bill providing that in all disputes or claims to which municipal corporations are parties an official arbitrator shall determine the issue. The arbitrator is to be appointed by the Lieutenant-Governor in Council, and must be a barrister of at least 10 years' standing at the Ontario bar. The arbitrator is to have the power of the judges of the High Court, and an appeal from his decision would be only in the Court of Appeal. The remuneration of the arbitrator is fixed at $15 per day, each of the parties to contribute half, unless otherwise decided by the arbitrator. The bill was read a first time.

Mr. Gorman introduced a bill amending the Municipal Act so as to exempt ice storage houses from taxation.

A bill to amend the Act respecting Joint Stock Companies was introduced by Mr. German, to enable gas and water companies to issue additional stock as preference stock under their act.

Among the private bills introduced were these: To consolidate the debt of Toronto Junction, Mr. St. John; to provide for the division of the Township of York, Mr. Richardson; respecting the town of North Toronto, Mr. St. John; respecting the Township of York, Mr. Richardson.

The House was in Committee of Supply during the whole of the evening session, when good headway was made with the estimates. Immediately upon the Speaker taking the chair, Sir Oliver arose and with a smile of satisfaction announced that Dr. Baxter had been returned as the member for Haldimand. The announcement was received with both Government and Opposition applause.

The Select Committee appointed to consider the question of the further maintenance of Government House met yesterday morning and elected the Premier to the chair. Sir Oliver explained his scheme for the sale of the present building for say $300,000, the erection of a smaller structure in Queen's Park at a cost of $150,000, and the funding of the balance, devoting the interest to maintenance, and he was requested to place himself in communication with the Dominion Government for the purpose of ascertaining how they will look upon the proposed arrangement. Messrs. McNish and Howland were appointed a sub-committee to work up details in connection with the subject.

The Public Accounts Committee yesterday settled down to business in real earnest. The system of purchasing meat for the public institutions was the subject which engaged their attention, and Provincial Cattle-buyer Hunter was severely cross-examined by the new Opposition critic, Col. Matheson. Mr. Hunter said that he bought between $59,000 and $60,000 worth of cattle every year in the open market as cheaply as anyone else, and he defended the system of buying cattle on the hoof and killing according to the present system as more economical and satisfactory in every way than a system by which tenders would be called for and contracts made for a supply of dressed meat. He asserted that he never concerned himself with the politics of any one from whom he bought, but pressed by Col. Matheson he admitted that he had taken an active part in opposing the election of Mr. Crawford in West Toronto and added that he did not think enough of his position nor of $1000 a year to let it prevent him doing as he chose.

The report of the Fees Commission was placed in the hands of members last evening. The report is very voluminous, covering nearly 800 pages; but the findings of the commissioners are summarized by themselves as follows:

1. No change should be made in appointing the officers by handing over the choice to local authorities.
2. The fee system should be continued as to all ministerial offices, e.g., registrars of deeds, clerks and registrars of courts, sheriffs and bailiffs.
3. Salaries should be paid to all judicial or quasi-judicial officers, e.g., local masters, county attorneys, and (for convenience) clerks of the peace (as a conjoint office).
4. The expenses connected with clerical and other assistance in the offices should be systematized so that uniformity and not diversity may characterize the service.
5. A limit should be placed upon the receipts of fee-paid officers, to be fixed by the Legislature, having regard to the just mean between scanty and excessive compensation.

These results are responsive to all the matters with which the commissioners are directly charged; incidental suggestions have been made on germane or collateral subjects in the course of the report, which are not here specifically enumerated.

The report is signed by J. A. Boyd, J. B. Robinson, John I. Hobson, Thomas Brooks, J. J. Mason.

THE HYAMS CASE.

Continuation of the Preliminary Enquiry.

Toronto, March 20.—Evidence of the most damaging character was submitted by the Crown yesterday at the trial of Harry P. and Dallas T. Hyams, charged with the murder of William C. Wells in the Colborne-street warehouse of the prisoners on Jan. 16, 1893. The accused appeared cheerful when they entered the dock at 10.30 a.m. Before they left it at 5 p.m., their confidence had entirely departed, and they looked haggard and careworn. Half a dozen expert witnesses were called by the Crown, who swore positively that they could not imagine a condition of things in the elevator shaft whereby the weight could have slipped off, and they gave cogent reasons for their opinions.

The defence has claimed all along that the hook on the weight had been changed since the accident. The man who spliced the hook into the rope was put in the box, and it was proven that it was the same hook as is now there, and that the change was made on Dec. 28, 1892, just 19 days before the fatality.

The similarity between the Hendershott murder case and the charge against the twins was adverted to three or four times. The counsel for the defence in the Hendershott case abandoned their original theory that the victim was killed by the falling tree and fell back on the branches. It is likely, however, the defence in this case will stick to the explanation given by Harry P. Hyams, that the weight shipped off the rope, since it was off the rope when the first parties to be summoned to the warehouse after the occurrence arrived there.

Mr. T. W. Horn of counsel for the defence offered to be formally committed for contempt for declining to testify as to the negotiations entered into by the Hyams brothers to secure the insurance money from Martha Wells after the tragedy, but the Magistrate reserved his decision until the conclusion of the Crown's case.

An important fact which developed was that a day or two after the tragedy Dallas P. Hyams commenced negotiations with the New York Life to have $25,000 insurance placed on his life. This, the Crown claims, was done to make the company less anxious to investigate the circumstances of the alleged accident.

There was the same array of counsel for the defence present when the enquiry was resumed.

A REMEDIAL ORDER MADE.

Greenway Called Upon to Remove the Grievances.

THE ELECTIONS PREDICTED IN MAY

The Remedial Order to Be Forwarded to Lieutenant-Governor Schultz This Afternoon—It Calls Upon the Greenway Government to Restore to the Catholics the Privileges of Which They Were Deprived.

Ottawa, March 20.—The mail train for Winnipeg leaves here at 1.45 in the afternoon, and it is possible that to-morrow's westbound train will carry a package addressed to Lieutenant-Governor Shultz containing the remedial order of the Governor in Council on the Manitoba school question. This order, in effect, as stated on Monday, acknowledges that the Catholics of Manitoba have a grievance, and calls upon the Government, of which Mr. Greenway is the head, to supplement the legislation of 1890 by a statute or statutes restoring to the Catholics the privileges of which they were unjustly deprived by the Reform Government of Manitoba.

It transpires that after yesterday's meeting of the Privy Council a sub-committee, consisting of Hon. Messrs. Foster, Angers and Montague, met to draft the precise terms of the proposed remedial order, based on Sir Charles Tupper's report. This sub-committee were at work last evening and again this morning, and at 3 o'clock this afternoon the Cabinet again met and agreed upon the exact terms of the order. This will be signed by His Excellency to-night, and will be sent forward to Winnipeg to-morrow.

Now that a conclusion has been reached on this question, the next point that arises is as to whether or not there is to be a session of Parliament or dissolution. If your correspondent were a betting man he would wager that there would be a general election. Interested politicians may set it down as a sure thing that polling will take place about the end of May. Parliament is prorogued until next Monday, and possibly the next proclamation will be one announcing dissolution. Some authorities, however, say there may be no announcement of dissolution until it is seen what action the Manitoba Government takes upon the order just made.

ORANGE M.P.'S SPEAK.

Gananoque, Ont., March 20.—The annual convention of the Orange Grand Lodge of Eastern Ontario was held here to-day. The Grand Master addressed the meeting, and in the course of his address referred to the Manitoba school matter, and expressed the opinion that the matter should be left to the people of Manitoba to deal with, and deprecated interference with the province in matters provincial. The subject was brought to a climax by Mr. Clark, P.G.M., of Ottawa, in his speech. He said that there were several members of parliament present who had not stated their views or how they would vote if the Government granted remedial legislation to Manitoba.

Mr. Bell, ex-M.P. for Addington, then came forward and said if elected he would vote against any interference with Manitoba. Mr. George Taylor, M.P. for South Leeds, said that two months ago he advised his leaders that he would certainly oppose any intereference with Manitoba.

Major Hughes then said he was sorry his speech had not been more plain, but that he would certainly oppose any interference with Manitoba.

BERGIN OUSTED IN CONVENTION.

Cornwall Conservatives Nominate R. A. Pringle—Bergin's Alleged Speech.

Cornwall, Ont., March 19.—(G. N. W. special.)—The largest and most enthusiastic convention ever held in the County of Stormont, was held at the village of Newington to-day. One hundred and eighty-six delegates were present. Mr. Joseph Kerr moved Dr. Bergin as a candidate. Robert A. Pringle was also named. Col. Bredin stated that he had been a warm supporter and friend of Dr. Bergin's since 1876, and that the same friendly feeling still, and would, exist, but there was a strong feeling that in order to unite the party another candidate had to be brought forward. If that feeling did not exist, the delegates could say so by their ballots. Dr. Bergin said he had a duty to perform before leaving Parliament, and he had already procured from the United States Government a reduction in the tariff on horses, barley and coal and that he was still in communication with an agent of the United States Government to bring about a further reduction in the American tariff, which would benefit the farmers. He further stated that no person would be more disappointed than Sir Mackenzie Bowell if he did not receive the nomination.

A ballot was then taken and resulted as follows: R. A. Pringle, 103; Dr. Bergin, 83. Mr. Pringle stated that he would not give his assent at the present time, but would reserve same until the meeting to be called to ratify the nomination.

OTTAWA CONSERVATIVES.

Taylor McVeity and H. Robillard Their Two Candidates

Ottawa, March 20.—At 1 o'clock this morning the Liberal-Conservative convention concluded its labors, the nominees being Taylor McVeity and H. Robillard, M.P. There were 174 votes in convention, and on the first ballot stood: McVeity 90, Champagne 53, Sir James Grant 16, R. G. Code 12, Robillard 2. Second and third ballots were invalid, Mr. Robillard having more than the number required for choice, but too many votes were cast. On the last vote the figures were: Robillard 98, Champagne 72.

Masson Nominated a Second Time

Owen Sound, Ont., March 20.—The second Conservative convention of the north riding of Grey, met here yesterday to select a candidate. The meeting was long and much recrimination was indulged in. Mr. James Masson, M.P., the nominee of the first convention, who accepted on condition that there was no session of Parliament before an election, was not present. A ballot was called for, the vote standing Masson 49, W. A. McClean 42.

West Bruce Reformers.

Kincardine, Ont., March 20.—The Liberals of West Bruce met in convention yesterday to select a candidate. Peter McKenzie of Kinloss was the nominee. James Rowand, Liberal, is the present member.

Scriver for Huntingdon.

Huntingdon, Que., March 20.—The Liberals of Huntingdon met in convention yesterday. Julius Scriver, M.P., will once more be the candidate. He has represented this constituency since 1869.

WENT DOWN WITH 420 SOULS.

Cadiz, March 20.—The Spanish cruiser Alfonso XII., which has been cruising in the Mediterranean in search of the missing warship Reina Regente, arrived here this morning. She found the Reina Regente at Bajo Accitunos, near Couil, where she had sunk. Only about 18 inches of her masts were visible above the surface of the water. The Alfonso XII. has returned to the scene of the wreck with a company of divers. The news brought by the Alfonso XII. has created a profound feeling of sorrow here.

From the best information obtainable here it is regarded as probable that all on board of the Reina Regente were lost. Not a single survivor has been reported as having arrived at any port, nor has a single body been found that could be identified as that of one of the officers or crew of the lost ship.

The Alfonso XII. is taking divers and diving appliances for the purpose of removing the bodies from the sunken ship and examining the condition of the vessel, with a view of ascertaining the possibilities of raising her. Until something further is heard from the Alfonso XII., nothing can be definitely known, but all hands were undoubtedly lost.

BELLEVILLE, WEDNESDAY, MAR. 20.

GOING NORTH.

Mr. John Caskey, the Conservative candidate for North Hastings, will go on a trip to the northern townships this week. We have no doubt that Mr. Caskey, who has often canvassed that part of the County on behalf of others, will get a hearty reception, now that he is working in his own behalf, from his old friends, and will win many new friends in his tour.

QUERY.

Does Free Trade lessen taxation?

That is the great test question, as to which the Grits try to deceive the people. In 1893 the taxation in Canada was $5.91 per head of the population and in Great Britain $9.47, or $3.56 per head greater in Free Trade Britain than in Protected Canada.

Will our people vote for higher taxation under the name of Free Trade?

SIAMESE TWINS.

"Scratch a Russian and you will find a Tartar" is an old saying which might well be modernized into "Scratch a Patron (leader) and you will find a Grit." In a recent issue we said:

> In this Province we find that the Patrons and the Grits are in alliance against the Conservatives, in the constituencies named herewith, the former having nominated candidates whom the latter will support, namely: East Hastings, North Hastings, Prince Edward, Lennox, Frontenac, South Leeds, North Lanark, South Lanark, Carleton, Glengarry, West York, East York and Prescott.
> We also find that, in return for the abstention of the Grits, as above stated, the Patrons have not nominated candidates in any of the following constituencies, which are at present represented by Grits: Addington, Russell, West Ontario, North York and Peel.

Since the above was written the Patrons have nominated a candidate in Russell, but to the list first above given we have to add Haldimand, South Essex, South Simcoe, North Simcoe, North Wellington, North Grey.

To the second list there is this formidable addition: Kent, North Simcoe, Cardwell, Welland, South Oxford, Norfolk North, Lincoln, North Brant and South Brant.

If these facts do not mean that Mallory, Haycock & Co. have entered into an alliance with the Grits, then men's acts have no significance.

ALBERT COLLEGE.

The munificent offer of Mr. H. A. Massey of Toronto, the well-known philanthropist, which was announced exclusively in these columns yesterday, must give great satisfaction to every friend of the institution and to every citizen of Belleville who desires to see means adopted for adding to the solid, permanent progress of the city.

Mr. Massey's offer is that he will give $10,000 for the erection of new or the enlargement of the existing College buildings, provided that an equal amount is paid by other persons for that purpose.

That the needs of the College are great is shown by the statement of its requirements that is given in another column, and the further fact that there is pressing necessity for the enlargement of the campus, in the interest of physical culture.

The manner in which the appeal has so far been responded to, leaves no doubt that the terms of Mr. Massey's offer will be complied with, and that within a short time. Let us hope that the sum asked for may be largely exceeded and that not only may the buildings be enlarged and improved, but that the amount which is necessary to meet all other requirements may be contributed.

It is the duty of the residents of Belleville to be liberal in behalf of Albert College, not only as a matter of self-interest in increasing the attendance at the institution and the consequent receipts from it, but as a matter of pride in making Belleville's College second to none.

Principal Dyer has proved his capacity by largely increasing the attendance at Albert and Alexandra Colleges. He has an excellent staff of instructors, and as these can be added to as occasion requires, there need not be any fear of overtaxing them. Rather let us encourage them by coming to their aid in making the College what they desire it to be.

ARE THEY TRUE TO THEIR PROMISES?

Clause 7 of the platform of the Patrons of Industry, as adopted by the Grand Association of that order, reads as follows:

> A system of civil service reform that will give each county power to appoint or elect all county officials paid by them except county Judges.

Mr. James M. Farley is one of the most prominent members of the Patrons order in this part of the country, but how does he live up to the principles professed by the organization? By advocating the appointment of all county officers, except the Judges, by the counties?

Not unless the urging and pushing of his own appointment to the vacant office of Deputy Sheriff by the Grit Government of Ontario be living up to the "plank" above quoted.

More than that, Mr. Farley has had Mr. Haycock, the leader of the Patrons in the Legislature, urging the appointment of the genial James, who, in case he should get the appointment, will bid a long adieu to the Patrons, become a docile Grit office-holder, and laugh at the dupes whose influence placed him there. "Election by the County?" Mr. Patron Farley will no doubt say to himself; "Not any! That's all right to advocate for others; but when it comes to my own case, with a good fat office in prospect, let principle go to the winds; appointment by my Grit friends is good enough for me. Let others face the ordeal of the County Councils."

And what of Leader Haycock? Will not he have to furnish an equivalent for the favors he begs from Sir Oliver—also in opposition to his party's platform?

Let thinking men turn these facts over in their minds without prejudice, and they cannot arrive at any other conclusion than that the Patron leaders have made of a professedly non-partizan organization a mere auxiliary to the Grit machine.

Wisely did Mr. N. Vermilyea describe them when he uttered his famous saying, "A Grit is a Grit, Patron or no Patron."

Of course we have no objection to the appointment of Mr. Farley, other than his violation of principle at the dictate of self-interest, as he would no doubt make a highly efficient officer.

SHIPPING MOLASSES IN BULK.

It Comes in the Same Tanks in Which Kerosene Has Been Carried.

Almost all the molasses which comes from Cuba to the United States is brought in the same tanks in steamships that are used to carry petroleum as a return cargo. The ships' tanks are about sixteen feet deep and have a neck seven feet deep. They are pumped full of oil at Brooklyn or Philadelphia, then taken to Havana, and the oil is pumped out into the tanks of the refining plants there. Molasses is brought from the interior of the island in huge hogsheads, which are emptied into storage tanks. A suction pump drawing about 10,000 gallons an hour fills each ship's tanks to within about two feet of the top, that amount of space being required for the expansion of the molasses. It might be supposed that the petroleum would have a bad effect upon the molasses, but it has been shown that the contrary is the case, and as nearly one-half the importation is made into rum and the balance refined into sugar, a little oil is not of much account. The tanks are cleaned after the molasses has been pumped out by turning in a powerful steam jet, which washes down the sides and liquefies what ever molasses may be left in the bottom of the tank, and the suction pump finishes the work.

A cargo of molasses, which formerly required ten or twelve days, can now be unloaded in forty-eight hours, while the difference in cost of handling, to say nothing of the saving of time, amount to a large sum.

The first attempt at handling molasses in bulk was made by the brig Novelty in 1877. She was fitted with a lining and her whole hold was used without partitions. She made several trips between Matanzas and Boston, but was not successful as a dividend earner. Since the present system of dividing a vessel's hold into tanks was devised and put in practice on steamers the profits of the trade and steamship companies have largely increased.—Albany Express.

Writing by Telegraph.

One of the most interesting exhibits in the Electricity Building during the World's Fair was the new writing telegraph called by the inventor the telautograph. In March it was announced by the gentlemen interested that the telautograph was completed and ready for the public; in fact the instruments were sent to Jackson Park and operated successfully during the period of the Fair, but the inventor himself was not satisfied with the machines and wished to still further improve them. A considerable number of the instruments had been made, but the manufacture was stopped to await the result of these later experiments, and now the announcement is made that a greatly improved instrument has been produced. The strings attached to the transmitting pencil, that caused some difficulty in writing, have been replaced by small rigid steel rods that have no tendency to pull the pencil away from the writer, who can now write with the greatest ease, and the pencil may be dropped upon the paper at any part of the writing field. The switching arrangement in the transmitter has also been much changed and improved. But the most radical improvement is in the receiver. The outside appearance of this instrument has not been changed, as the same cover fits over both the new and old receiver; but the interior arrangement has been almost entirely replaced. The motor that was used to shift the paper and drive the mechanism, and made such an unpleasant humming noise, has been done away with, and the great number of adjusting points that added much to the complication of the old machine and required much expert attendance, have been reduced to one. The mechanism is also much simpler and the cost of production will be probably a third less than formerly. As a result of these improvements the writing speed of the telautograph has been greatly increased, and in actual test forty-two words per minute have been written against thirty-five, which was formerly the record. This is much faster than the majority of business men can write, and, so far as speed is concerned, there is nothing more to be desired.

Are We Well-Mannered?

I suppose no one of us likes to be told that we are not well-mannered. Yet, what one of us is free from all charge of misconduct? I do not refer to those lapses from etiquette which are the result of ignorance of those unwritten rules of society which every community makes for itself, but to a disregard of those social laws which have their foundation in character. And, after all, how many of the much sneered at ordinances which politeness lays upon us are really founded on deep and noble principles? Courtesy is but the expression of kindness. Table manners are much transgressed, not simply by eating with the knife and drinking from the saucer, not be offending the taste, but by wounding the heart by sarcastic and contemptuous remarks thoughtlessly uttered, and quite as often, by indifference and inattention. One may say that the heart should not be wounded so easily, but if the heart be hardened so that it do not feel wounds, it will soon become too hard to feel and express sympathy.—Mrs. Lyman Abbott.

MR. MASSEY'S MUNIFICENCE.

ITS CONDITION WILL UNDOUBTEDLY BE COMPLIED WITH.

A Successful Canvass Now Being Made—What the College Authorities Propose—An Enlightened Self-Interest Impels us to be Liberal to the College—It is Worth $40,000 Per Year to Belleville and Will be Made of Still Greater Value in a Pecuniary Sense.

For eight and thirty years the structure crowning the northern hill of our city has been one of the best known institutions of Belleville. Not only is it a permanent mark of our material and intellectual progress, but very many of our professional, commercial and industrial leaders have been, at some period of their lives, enrolled among its members. The history of our city is therefore interwoven with the story of the rise and development of Albert College.

The Methodists of Canada have planted and fostered many institutions for the secondary and higher education of youth, early leading in the multiplication of such advantages when seminaries of learning were few and difficult of access. Of the numerous Canadian Colleges springing from this broad desire for the diffusion of knowledge, Albert College has been one of the most prosperous and most patronized, owing its success in some measure to its advantageous location in Belleville.

On the retirement of its first principal, J. H. Johnson, M.A., the management was entrusted to Prof. Carman, since well known from the Pacific to the Atlantic as the devoted and efficient General Superintendent of the great Methodist body of Canada. Under his control the school advanced to the rank and functions of a University, and as such sent forth a respectable array of graduates, numbering among its alumni many now holding places of dignity, responsibility and importance. When Dr. Carman was called by the unanimous desire of his church to assume another sphere of trust and administration, the Rev. J. R. Jaques was selected to direct the interests of the College. During his administration the union of the various Methodist bodies was effected, and the consolidation of Methodism led to the affiliation of Albert with Victoria University. Subsequently Dr. Jaques became the head of a University in the United States, and the Rev. Wm. Pirritte Dyer, M. A., became President of Albert College.

At the present time Albert College may be considered as holding in the Methodist educational enterprise of Canada the place held by the great endowed public schools of England in the educational system of Great Britain. It aims at imparting the culture and intellectual expansion necessary for a useful university or professional career, and at the same time affords excellent means for acquiring the knowledge and theories of business life and industrial advancement. To these advantages are joined facilities for a thorough musical education and a superior course of instruction in drawing, designing and painting, and in these last named departments the College has won a well-deserved reputation for excellence.

It would be invidious to attempt to make mention of the devoted and unselfish friends of the College who have contributed to its material progress and equipment. But the many who must be unnamed will pardon us for referring to the zealous labors of the Rev. Gideon Shepard, the first Bursar, the eloquent appeals of the Rev. Joseph Wild, D. D., the business-like enterprise of Jas. G. Robinson, and the untiring energy of the Rev. Amos Campbell. The efforts of these gentlemen to endow and expand the College were of lasting benefit to the institution, and paved the way for the successful efforts of President Dyer, who has brought to his work business talents and broad views, which have brought the College to its present eminent success.

The gift of Mr. H. A. Massey of $10,000, noticed in yesterday's issue, is for a new building, and is on condition that an additional $10,000 be secured. A gymnasium will also be erected, and other improvements made. The attendance has largely outgrown the present building, and makes increased accommodation absolutely necessary. A committee has been appointed to secure subscriptions, and already every assurance of success has been given. Several $1,000 subscriptions have already been received. The purpose is to erect a new building for class-rooms and chapel, and to use the present building entirely for dormitories, which will be thoroughly fitted up.

The College has at present over 200 students in attendance, and it is quite under the limit to say that $40,000 comes to Belleville each year through Albert College.

Other places have done well by their educational institutions. For instance, Kingston's gifts to Queen's, Cobourg and Toronto's gift for Victorias, &c.

With the splendid facilities that Albert College will then offer to the public, the attendance will be largely increased, and Belleville will have gained thereby.

NAIL CUTTING MACHINE.

A Mechanical Scheme Which Facilitates Their Manufacture.

Machines for making wire nails are well known now, but a new tool has been designed to turn out a nail more like what is known to builders as a cut nail, heretofore made by hand or finished by skilled manual labor. The new machine is automatic in its operation, and a man can look after several. It is a multiple cutter, producing several nails at a stroke, their number depending on their size. The plate from which they are cut is fed in long sheets, from which the nails are cut transversely. They are made from either hot or cold plates, a gas or oil heating apparatus being furnished for the purpose. The nails differ from the ordinary cut nails in having a chisel point and a head that is not "upset," but merely cut larger than the body on two sides, the whole nail on the remaining sides being of the same thickness from head to point. There is no waste of metal in cutting, as the heads alternate with the points. Tests of the holding power of these nails made last December at the United States Arsenal in Waterton, Mass., apparently showed that they hold as well as the usual form of cut nail and that their heads stay on much better.

The Latest Fashionable Etiquette.

London Truth has an article on the latest Fashionable Etiquette governing various important matters. Our instructor declares that to attend oratorios and philharmonic concerts is thoroughly bad form, indicating a tendency to be pedantic. It is much better to go to a horse show. It is by no means considered correct to shake hands. The proper way is to take hold of the fingers of one's acquaintance at the second joints, and bestow upon them one or two decisive little jerks, as though testing their strength. "No, I thank you," is a form of words no longer heard in good society, having some time since been replaced by "No, thanks." No man with any claim to social position would consent to pronounce the "g" at the end of the present participle of verbs. "Comin' and goin'" are the correct forms just now. "Don't you know" is ridiculously correct. Men of perception do not care to be more accurate than others of their set. "Don't-chi-know" is more customary, and the pronunciation marks the man as riding on the topmost crest of the social wave. There must be a staccato sound about the phrase, which alternates pleasantly with the languid drawl. The latter is still in favor, and accompanies admirably the studied lack of animation in the expression and general wooden look of the face. The correct style is to hold the cane or walking stick at an angle of 45 degrees, with the ferrule uppermost and forward. This is the sort of thing that no man could possibly discover for himself. The natural man would incline to carry his stick in such fashion as would tend to direct its point to the ground. This unsophisticated mode would at once reveal him as uninitiated in the minor morals of good manners.

Consumption of Alcohol.

In 1885 the consumption of beer in England was 32 gallons per head, in Scotland 16, and in Ireland 16; the consumption of cider in England 0.4, and none at all in the other two countries; the consumption of spirits in England 0.8; in Scotland 1.9; in Ireland, 1; the consumption of wine 0.5 in England, 0.5 in Scotland, and 0.2 in Ireland. The English drinker's partiality for beer and the Scotch and Irish drinker's preference for spirits is clearly shown.

When these amounts are converted into their equivalents of alcohol we see that Ireland consumes least—1.4 gallons per head. Scotland comes next with 1.6, and England heads the list with 2.13 gallons of alcohol for each man, woman and child of the population; this, by a curious and undesigned coincidence, is just under one ounce a day per head, the quantity which so many medical authorities assume can be safely taken—the physiological quantity of which the country has heard so much of late years.

Children seldom touch alcohol, most women take little, and many men do not take any at all; so that the habitual consumers of alcohol, whether they drink to excess or not, get through three or four times the amount which the leading medical authorities assert should not be exceeded.—All the Year Round.

SIDNEY CROSSING.

MARCH 18th.—Bare spots are quite numerous in the roads and the sleighing is quite poor.—Mr. and Mrs. P. N. Fletcher, also Mr. and Mrs. J. N. Young were guests of Mr. Charles Lake, of Foxboro, over Sunday.—A large number from here attended the memorial services of the late Mrs. Ramsay, which were conducted in the Centenary church on Sabbath, by Rev. Messrs. Faull and Campbell, of Belleville. She was daughter of Mr. Anson Jones, and well known and highly respected here. The sorrowing parents and friends have our heartfelt sympathy in this their sad hour of bereavement.—Mrs. Marshal Vandewater is lying dangerously ill.—A goodly number of our local politicans were in attendance at the grand demonstration on Tuesday. All were delighted with the day's proceedings.—Mr. T. B. Gerow, of Parry Sound, was the guest of his mother Mrs. Ezekiel Young, some few days ago.—Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Chisholm, of Foxboro, were the guests of Mr. John Carr on Wednesday last.—Mr. Merrit Finkle, one of our most popular and prominent young men, gave an evening party to about forty of his young friends, a few nights ago. Guests were present from Canifton, Foxboro, Newcastle, Belleville and Bayside. The spacious parlors, which were well filled with proud and happy youth, presented a very pleasing spectacle. A most sumptuous tea was provided by the genial hostess, Mrs. Jacob Finkle and the prettily arrayed tables fairly groaned beneath their weight of dainty and tempting edibles. Games, etc., were indulged in until early morn, when they all departed for home unanimously claiming to have spent a jolly good time.—Miss Maggie Meyers, of Bayside, is the guest of her friend Miss Phenie Kelley.—Mr. Albert Finkle has returned home after spending a most pleasant week with relatives in Rawdon.—About twenty years ago Mr. James Sherry, one of our boys, left here with the determination to distinguish himself and better his condition in some other clime. His destination was Appleton, Wis., where he engaged as carpenter. Being a young man with lots of push, energy and enterprise, he gradually hewed his way until at present he is the foremost contractor of the place, employing from thirty to forty men. Unfortunately he fell a victim to the winning smiles of one of Uncle Sam's fairest daughters and consequently has adopted the land of Independence as his home. However, his many old friends are glad to hear of his success and all join in wishing him a long, bright and prosperous career. He is a nephew of Mr. Emory Finkle, of this place, with whom he always resided.—Mr. and Mrs. Portland, who have again become residents of the Crossing, are gladly welcomed by their old friends.—Messrs. Stanley Vandervoort and Alex. Whyte spent a few days in Toronto last week.—The pretty home of Mr. N. N. Kelley was all ablaze with light on Friday last, it being the scene of a brilliant evening party gotten up by his daughter Miss Josephine. The pretty parlors were well filled and a jolly good time was spent. Social intercourse, music, singing, etc., wiled away the fore part of the evening and after partaking of the many delicious viands prepared by the charming hostess, the remaining hours were enjoyably spent in playing games, etc. All claim to have spent a most pleasant evening.—St. Patrick's day passed off very quietly here, as we have very few followers of that patron saint.—Master Percy Fletcher and his trotting dog "Jack" "cut quite a swell" now-a-days, as they gracefully speed up and down our public highway.—Evening parties are all the rage and there is hardly a home but what has had its share this season.

Montreal Markets

MONTREAL, March 20.—Grain—There was very little done in the grain market to-day, oats in fact being the only grade in the least inquired for. Prices are about steady. Wheat No. 1 hard, nominal; No. 2 hard, nominal; corn, duty paid, nominal; peas, per 66 lbs. in store, 69c to 70c.; oats, per 34 lbs. store, 30½c to 41½c.; rye, No. 2, 51½c to 54c.; barley, feed, 49c to 50c.; barley, malting, 58c to 59c.

FLOUR—Manitoba millers are disposed to speak more encouragingly of the situation than the others, but even the most pessimistic admit that there is an improvement at hand. The local demand for the leading Manitoba grades and straight rollers has been quite steady in volume, and holders are pretty firm in their views. The export sales for the week probably aggregate 10,000 sacks. Straight rollers, $2.90 to $3; extra, $2.50 to $2.70; superfine, $2.35 to $2.40; fine, $2.20; strong bakers'. Manitoba, $3.05 to $3.70; strong bakers', Manitoba, best brands, $3.70 to $3.75; spring patents Manitoba, $3.98.

MEAL—The recent advance scored in prices is, so far, well maintained. A fair business is passing, and with stocks comparatively light, dealers are not as a rule looking for any immediate change. Granulated and rolled, per brl. $4 to $4.10; granulated and rolled, per bag, $1.90 to $2.05; standard, per brl. $4; standard per bag, $1.90 to $2.

FEED—If anything, the market for bran is just a shade easier. Ontario bran sold today at $19.50. The majority of holders, however, continue to ask $20. Offerings are larger. Bran $19 to $20; shorts $20; mouillie $21 to $22.

CHEESE—The market is less active, and, although there is considerable cheese going out, it is mostly on consignment.

BUTTER—Jobbers occasionally assume a buying streak, but of late these have been few and far between. Prices however, are on the whole well maintained, late made creamery in small quantities being quoted at 12½c., while lots are obtainable at about 1c or so less. Western dairy in tubs continues to be almost completely neglected. Creamery, finest late made, 21c to 21½c.; townships, 15c to 17c.; western, 10c to 12c.; rolls, 14c to 15c.

EGGS—A slightly better tone was noted in the egg market to-day, but there is no improvement in prices. Fresh stock sold at 15c to 17c. but the latter was for single cases. Limed eggs are completely neglected and values are purely nominal.

LIVE STOCK.

Despite the stormy weather the butchers turned out to the East End Abattoir to-day in large numbers and trade in cattle was brisk, with firm prices all round, good butchers' cattle bringing about 4c per pound, with a trifle over that for choice animals. Pretty good stock sold at from 3½c to 3¾c per pound, large bulls at from 3c to 3½c per pound; milkmen's strippers at from 2½c to 3½c per pound. There were no really good calves offered here to-day and the prices were from $2 to $5 each. Sheep sold at from 3½c to 5½c per pound and spring lambs at from $2.50 to $5 each. The numbers offered here to-day were about 350 head of butchers' cattle, 100 calves, 29 sheep and 10 spring lambs. Fat hogs are slightly higher in price, selling at from 4½c to 4¾c per pound.

SPECIAL MENTION.

IF SICK HEADACHE IS MISERY, what are Carter's Little Liver Pills if they will positively cure it? People who have used them speak frankly of their worth. They are small and easy to take.

THERE IS NO ONE ARTICLE IN THE LINE OF medicines that gives so large a return for the money as a good porous strengthening plaster, such as Carter's Smart Weed and Belladonna Backache Plasters.

But one opinion prevails through the world and that is most strongly in favor of Perry Davis PAIN-KILLER, that no other article ever attained so wide spread popularity. 25 cents buys a big bottle.

TRULY ASTONISHING.—Miss Annette N. Moen, Fountain, Minn., says: "Ayer's Cherry Pectoral has had a wonderful effect in curing my brother's children of a severe and dangerous cold. It was truly astonishing how speedily they found relief after taking this preparation."

Why Contemplate Suicide?

It is like tempting Providence for consumptives to ignore the remarkable remedy known as Miller's Emulsion of Norwegian Cod Liver Oil. For any person to die of consumption without trying this remarkable flesh and blood maker, after knowing of its existence, is suicide pure and simple. All that the consumptive patient needs is new blood with which to battle against the destructive forces of the disease. Miller's Emulsion provides new blood in abundance. It is a combination of Norwegian Oil and hypophosphites of lime and soda—a triumph of science. Miller's Emulsion is the great nerve strengthener and blood maker, and cures Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis, Scrofula and all lung affections. In Big Bottles, 50c. and $1, at all Drug Stores.

NEWFOUNDLAND'S ENTRY.

Terms to Be Discussed at a Conference.

CANADA MUST ASSUME THE DEBT

The Venezuela Question Grows Interesting—British, French and German Warships Sent There—The United States Fleet Now There Prepared to Oppose the United Fleets of the European Powers.

London, March 20.—In the House of Commons Mr. Sydney Buxton, Parliamentary Secretary to the Colonial Office, in answer to Sir George Baden-Powell, said he understood that the approaching conference at Ottawa between the members of the Dominion Government and Sir William Whiteway, Premier, with other representatives of the island of Newfoundland, would fully consider the proposal for the entry of the island into the Canadian confederation as a province. In the meantime, he said, it was impossible to give any information as to the terms of the union or to say whether or not the dispute regarding the French fisheries would be included in the subjects discussed.

Mr. Buxton further said that a reply had been received from Newfoundland in answer to the Imperial Government's offer to relieve the prevailing distress on the island out of the public funds, and Sir Herbert Murray would shortly start for Newfoundland as Her Majesty's commissioner to carry out that object.

Sir Edward Grey, Under Foreign Secretary, stated that as soon as the official report regarding the sentence at Honolulu of Rickard should be received the question of applying for the mitigation of his sentence would be considered.

Australian Bill in the Lords.

London, March 19.—In the House of Lords the Marquis of Ripon, Secretary of State for the Colonies, moved the second reading of the bill repealing the restrictions upon the Australian colonies regarding the imposition of customs duties. Lord Ripon explained that the bill was the outcome of the recent conference of the colonies, and its operation would enable the colonies to enter into fiscal relations with each other for the establishment of differential duties. The bill was read a second time.

CANADA SHOULD ASSUME THE DEBT.

The London Post Discusses Murray's Mission and Newfoundland Affairs.

London, March 20.—The Post to-morrow will say: "There is reason to believe that the sole object of the Government in sending Mr. Herbert Murray, formerly chairman of the customs department, to Newfoundland is that he may provide the fishermen with funds as the banks and leading merchants hitherto have done at the beginning of the fishing season. It is not known." The Post continues, "whether or not Mr. Murray will require the same security for the advances as those who have previously supplied the funds. His mission has nothing to do with the present position of the colony.

"There are many reasons for Canada's taking the liabilities of Newfoundland and admitting that colony to federation. Her fisheries are a source of wealth, while the possession of her bait grounds would be a good card to play against the United States.

"Moreover, the inclusion of Newfoundland in the Dominion virtually means the security of the Gulf of St. Lawrence in the event of foreign invasion. Newfoundland, however, would gain little else than pecuniary assistance. Yet if Canada does not guarantee the colony's debt nobody else will. The idea of her reverting to a crown colony may be abandoned. It will probably happen that Newfoundland will become a part of Canada with Premier Whiteway as the first Lieutenant-Governor."

AUSTRALIA A GOOD MARKET.

Once Canada Gains a Foothold Success is Certain

Ottawa, March 20.—A communication has been received by the Government from Judge Vance of Port Huron, stating that the Michigan State Fish and Game Protective League has been organized, and is now seeking legislation from the Michigan Legislature to secure a total prohibition of net fishing in the waters of that State contiguous to Canada, including the River St. Clair, Lake St. Clair, Detroit River, St. Mary's River and other waters. Judge Vance says: "We have been encouraged in our efforts to have this law passed by suggestions from prominent men in Canada, who feel a deep interest in this subject, to the effect that the Canadian Government would join with us in prohibiting net fishing in the waters mentioned. We are advised that in most, if not in all the waters mentioned, the Canadian authorities now forbid net fishing, and that they are constantly importuned to permit fishing in these waters because of the fact that such fishing is allowed on the American side.

By the Australian mail arrived to-day several reports were received from J. S. Larke, Canadian Commissioner to the Australasian Colonies. Mr. Larke states since he took up his residence in Sydney great interest has been manifested by Australian merchants and others in his work. Many inquiries have been received by him from all parts of the continent. Mr. Larke is of opinion that if Canadian producers only send proper men to push the sale of their goods and once get them started there would be no difficulty in retaining the market. Mr. Larke visited Hobart, Tasmania, at a time when three different conferences were in session, the most important being that of the Premiers of the different Australasian Colonies. The question of Federation was discussed and it was decided to present a measure to the several legislative bodies of the different colonies. Then a federal council consisting of five delegates from each colony met, at which matters of interest to the whole continent came up, and finally there was a postal conference which was attended by all Postmasters-General and deputy heads of the different colonies. Preliminary to the federation question, now being discussed, New Zealand and South Australia have made an agreement for reciprocal trade.

The changes in the statement of the chartered banks for February are not of great importance. The same quiet determination seems to exist as to investments. Loans are evidently made with great caution, and only upon extra good security, which, if it keeps the volume of trade at a low ebb, will tend to prevent disappointment and failures later. Starting from the basis of our present volume, the changes during the month are not unfavorable, as the general trend is a continued reduction until May, when, in most cases, low water mark is reached. The principal changes are as follows, viz.: Bank notes were reduced $101,842. Balances due to Dominion Government increased $459,774. People's deposits show a total reduction of $1,231,868, as follows: Those payable on demand were reduced $2,045,716, but those payable after notice increased $813,848, leaving a decrease, as before mentioned. Total liabilities show a falling off of $806,133. Specie has fallen off $408,132, Dominion notes increased $284,499. Notes of, and bills between, banks were reduced $1,069,850. Loans between banks in Canada, secured, increased $148,625. Deposits payable on demand, or after notice, in banks in Canada, show a reduction of $347,552. Foreign balances show a reduction of $785,970, of which $440,318 is in the United States, and $345,653 in England. Slight increases have taken place in Canadian municipal and foreign securities, and also railway securities, but a slight reduction in stocks and bonds on call. Current loans increased $1,867,261. Loans to provincial governments increased $177,535. Overdue debts have been reduced $190,236. Total assets were reduced $58,029. Directors' liabilities show a reduction of $115,643. The greatest amount of bank notes in circulation at any time during the month was $29,875,664, being only $1,060,230 more than on the 28th, the date upon which the returns were made.

It is somewhat remarkable how little personal interest in farming some of these Patron agents possess, and who are unwilling to entrust the farmers' interests in the 40 per cent. of the members in the Ontario Legislature as represented by the real farmers of the country. We hope that the fund in sight contributed by the mass of Canadian farmers has nothing to do with the interest that so many suddenly evince for the farming community.

No Announcement Yet Made, But a Remedial Order Has Probably Been Issued.

There is, however, very little doubt that a remedial order has been passed.

AN INNOVATION.

Haines & Lockett Have a Spring Opening in Boots and Shoes.

Messrs. Haines & Lockett have always shown a great deal of enterprise in their business, but by having a spring opening to-day they have placed themselves in advance of the front rank in innovations. The firm had displayed on handsome tables their leading lines in ladies', gentlemen's and children's footwear. As was evident from the display, tan shoes for everybody will be more popular this year than ever. The razor toe is a popular shape and are said to be very comfortable. The Adonis, in patent leather, white and black kid, beaded and plain, will be much worn by ladies for evening wear. White stitching and white laces will add much to the attractiveness of dainty Oxford ties, slippers, etc. This firm have been pressing on the manufacturers the advisability of making the cheaper lines of shoes of as stylish an appearance as the more expensive and this they have done. Ladies Juliet gaiters, both low and high, will be much worn again this year. White canvas for ladies and children, will be the proper thing for warm weather, and the prices are very low. In children's goods the firm show an endless variety.

In the gentlemen's department Messrs. Haines & Lockett make a specialty of the finer lines, but they have a fit for any man at any price. Patent leather will be much worn as a dress shoe this summer by young men. The razor toe is the correct thing, but they carry the square in many makes and prices. In fact, they claim they can fit any foot to perfection. The palatial store was thronged all day with sightseers, and the firm's progressiveness and fine display were favorably commented upon.

Belleville Manufactures Appreciated.

The steam and air injectors invented by Mr. S. R. Earle and manufactured here for him by the Brown Mfg. Company and the Mac Machine Company, have made a great reputation for themselves abroad, and their sale is consequently large and increasing. Some of the machines have been sent to Santo Domingo, West Indies, and this morning Mr. Earle received a letter from a purchaser in that island, who says that they have given such satisfaction in burning the bergass (wet sugar-cane, after passing through the rolls, and containing 25 per cent. of moisture), that he sends an order for three more. This is the best possible evidence of the excellence of Belleville inventions and Belleville manufactures.

Another Blaze.

At about 7.30 last night a frame building, occupied by Ald. Green, situated near the second overhead bridge, in the northern part of the city, was burned to the ground. Adjoining was a shed in which was stored a number of wheeled vehicles. This was also destroyed, and but two light waggons were got out, both being partially burned. The large slaughter house near was fortunately uninjured. Although an alarm was not sounded a large number of spectators were upon the scene, drawn thither by the bright glare which illuminated the city. Mr. Green's loss was $400. Insurance $290 in the Western. The building was owned by Mr. Horace Yeomans and was not insured.

During the evening four candidates were initiated. The receipts of the evening were $164.91.

THE CITY MILLINERY PARLORS CLAD IN BRIGHTEST HUES.

The Weather Bright and Cheerful and the Ladies Consequently Happy—The Headgear for the Coming Season, as Shown To-day.

A bright spring day with a mild temperature would tempt any ordinary woman to go shopping, but add to these the pleasure of gazing upon and admiring new millinery and other beautiful goods and it would be indeed something unusually pressing that would keep the fair sex at home. All day the different millinery parlors were thronged with ladies and children, and even a few gentlemen, with an eye for the beautiful, might be seen amongst the throng. It is only fair to say that in no city in Canada is prettier millinery shown or more appreciated by the ladies.

GEO. RITCHIE & CO'S.

This old established firm held its spring opening to-day. The display is even finer and more varied than on any former occasion, and to those who know of the magnificent collection always shown by this house, that is saying a great deal.

The millinery and mantle show room, which was a large one before, has been increased in size by one half more, which allows of greater facilities for the public to see the goods to advantage. The beautiful artistic manner in which the show room is decorated is worth any person's while to go a long distance to see. It is impossible to describe it, therefore we can only ask our readers to see for themselves.

The variety of goods on exhibition seems to be almost endless. Besides the selections made by Mr. Ritchie this season in the European centres of fashion, Miss Irwin, the talented manager, spent a considerable time in New York examining all the latest novelties in that American emporium of styles. Thus the ladies of Belleville may be perfectly assured of getting here the very newest and most correct thing for the coming season.

The attention of our reporter was directed to many changes in the fashion, for example, bonnets and toques are exceedingly small from back to front, some not being over two or three inches, at the same time these are extremely wide, probably being thus intended to harmonize with the big sleeves now in vogue. The hats are very large. Flowers of all kinds are being more abundantly used than ever, some of the French patterns from the leading Modistes in Paris, being perfect flower gardens. Jet trimmings and ornaments, which have been used very much for some time, are still to the front and indeed more enjoyed than ever in millinery. Bright jewelled ornaments are also much in favor. Silk chiffons, both plain and fancy, are being used extensively, as are laces of all kinds, these being particularly handsome this season and in great variety. As the prevailing style in hats is very large, they admit of an extensive use of flowers and laces combined. The Prince of Wales Ostrich Mount is shown very much on these large hats. We were shown in a separate department a very nice assortment of infants' and children's millinery, and alongside this a large variety of mourning goods. As to the prevailing colors for the spring, these appears to be a wider latitude than for many years. Some of the new shades we might mention are Hermosa, Mistral, Glaieul, Volga, Ebenier, Aloes, with a number of new tones in brown, &c.

Under the able management of Miss Irwin, who is a true artist in her line, ladies come from far and near to Geo. Ritchie & Co's. for their millinery, many sending their orders to her every season from Toronto, Kingston, Montreal and other cities. There is one course which Miss Irwin invariably pursues, which is fully appreciated by the ladies, and that is never to duplicate a hat or a bonnet, for they do not, as a rule, like their neighbors to be wearing exactly the same as themselves. Out of the many thousands of hats and bonnets which leave this establishment there will not be found any two alike.

The mantle department is largely stocked with the latest styles in capes and jackets. Some of these are very rich and beautiful and are of the latest fabrics and designs. In this department will also be found handsome garments composed of skirt and jacket, in covert cloths, tweeds, &c. Later on, in a few weeks, will be shown a large variety of costumes in washing materials.

The other departments in the house are as usual filled with all the new things for season. Special attention has been given this spring to the house furnishings, such as carpets, curtains, tapestry hangings, art draperies, &c., &c.

SINCLAIR & OSTROM.

This enterprising young firm are making a bid for a large share of trade. Their store presented a busy scene when a reporter called this morning. Of course the millinery parlor, which is in charge of Miss Johnson and a large staff of able assistants, was the centre of attraction. The spring hats are made in a large variety of shapes, but the newest is the Napoleon, a neat little shape in all colors of straw. The Napoleon crown is also inserted in Leghorn brims, with pleasing effect. Another pretty hat is made with a crown of flowers and a Leghorn brim. The Gainsboro is another popular shape, and the reporter was shown a beauty, edged with violets and trimmed with the same flower, rosettes of straw, tips and jet ornaments. Flowers will be very much used for spring and summer, the violet being very popular for spring hats and bonnets, while roses and the larger flowers will be used for summer. A great deal of jet is also to be used. Amongst the popular shades in trimmings are the bluette, mentelot, purple and pink in combination, with green. In ribbon, the plain satin will be largely used, but some very pretty work is done with lace taffetas. The bonnets are small this year. The firm also show a large stock of very pretty children's hats and bonnets. The display is a credit to the firm and to the young ladies who have arranged it.

In their mantle department they have a splendid array of capes and spring mantles. The capes this spring are much shorter than those worn last year.

The dress goods department embraces many of the newest and latest fabrics of English, German and French manufacture. In cotton dress stuffs, muslins, crepons, piques, and crinkle cloths will be much worn this year and the firm have a large variety of shades and patterns in these lines. Miss Conway, late with J. P. Thompson & Co., has charge of the dress-making department, which is a guarantee that all work turned out will be satisfactory.

The firm have just opened a full line of spring parasols imported from Germany, in all shades to suit costumes. The handles of these goods are short and slight and made in a variety of shapes and colors.

All the other departments of this house are filled to overflowing with new and stylish goods, which it is a pleasure for the firm or its employes to show.

MRS. S. EUSTACE.

This bright little millinery show room was particularly attractive this morning in its dress of beautiful new goods. Here, as elsewhere, flowers are used in great profusion. The trimmings consist of Dresden, brochie, Francais ribbons, feathers and chiffon. Amongst the popular shapes shown are the Ondine and Marquise. Mrs. Eustace has always made a specialty of children's goods and she has an unusually fine display this spring. The taste displayed in every article shown is refreshing.

MISS ROBLIN.

Miss Roblin, Bridge St., made an excellent display of millinery and fancy work to-day. Her display of pattern hats is particularly meritorious, the trimming being most tastefully done and the blending of the colors artistic. She also shows some very pretty bonnets, which attracted universal attention from the numerous customers. The goods displayed are equal to any in the city.

James Hall Dead.

James Hall, for many years employed in Burrell's axe factory and a member of the old volunteer fire brigade, died at his home in Gowanda, N. Y., this morning from consumption. Deceased, who was about thirty-five years of age, married the only daughter of John Stevenson, Wharf st., and she with one child survives him. Deceased was a member of the I. O. O. F. It is not known whether the body will be brought here for interment or not.

TRUE LIBERTY.

Irish Protestant Benevolent Society's Sermon at Toronto.

(Mail and Empire, March 18.)

Yesterday being the anniversary of the death of Ireland's patron saint, the annual sermon of the Irish Protestant Benevolent Society was preached to the members of the order. The service was held in the afternoon at the Church of the Redeemer, and was a special short form suitable for the occasion. The society was well represented, among others being present the President, Mr. James Hunter, Mayor Kennedy, ex-Mayor Clarke, Messrs. R. C. Hamilton, Thomas Sanderson, Frank Somers, Robert Moon, and H. O'Hara. The Sons of Ireland and the Orange order were also represented. The musical programme under the direction of Mr. W. H. Robinson, was particularly fine and well executed.

Rev. A. H. Baldwin, Rector of All Saints', preached the sermon, taking for his text 1 Peter, ii., 16, "As free, and not using your liberty for a cloak of maliciousness, but as the servants of God."

True service could not be obtained save where the heart was, and it was foolish to expect otherwise. No heart knew better than the Irish heart the power of love. It was possible to crush and grind the heart, but it could never be altered save by this power of love. He hoped God would grant Ireland more of that true liberty which he believed she at present possessed under the blessed and gracious rule of her Sovereign Majesty Queen Victoria. Liberty was frequently misunderstood, as, for instance, when the boy strove to do the things his father did, to swear like father, to swear like a trooper, and be a man. Such was freedom with the boy, who, if he grew like his father, oftentimes would never go to church, or only on society occasions. He would not read his Bible or attend to his prayers or his Sunday School, but follow the world, the flesh, and the devil—just like father. This was what some men, as well as boys, thought liberty was, and this was the way many were living in the present day. He could not understand anything so wonderful as a man who had been brought up in Protestantism rejecting the blessed privileges vouchsafed to him, and yet it was possible. They constantly saw men doing that which God had said was injurious, and occupying positions which He never intended them to occupy. There were people to-day whose social position was such that they could not imagine themselves occupying an inferior position in the world. It was a question whether some of those Protestants with open bibles who talked about about their liberty really had it or not. If, with the plan of salvation, and the open bible, and proper religious training, he neglected the means of grace, he was far less worthy of being freed than was the greatest sinner who had not these means of salvation. The liberty which Jesus Christ gave was contained in His words, "the truth shall make you free." It was when they began to understand their helplessness, and that God had sent His Son, who did it all, that they would seek the truth in all humility. God did not need their righteousness, He did not ask for any extenuating circumstances: He did not come as their lawyer to see what He could do, but he said, "My blood and My righteousness makes you free." They would know they were free by their victory over sin—by the crushing out of those things which would make them slaves. Their liberty should not be used as a cloak of maliciousness, to crush and grind down others. They should extend to others the commisseration they would have extended to themselves. When they understood that God so loved the world that He gave His Son for them they would feel that love for their fellow creatures which would not permit them to hurt one of them. The Irish Protestant Benevolent Society was a society whose object was the performance of works of love, and which did not pauperize, but helped the deserving poor of its fellow-countrymen in a practical way. Might God help the society and all societies who worked from the love of God. There was something in the Irish character which was especially susceptible to the influence of love. Their Irish mothers were the greatest powers for good on earth. There were no women on earth that were more pure. The books that other women would read they would throw into the fire, and when they saw these women they did not wonder at the race that Ireland had produced. In every sphere of life Irishmen were known for their grandeur, their valor, their gentleness, and their generosity and their hospitality. Might God grant that they might have a united Ireland, if not in this day, in a later day—an Ireland that would beat in one harmonious throb in its praise to God for His everlasting goodness.

THE ORANGE ORDER.

A Large Increase in Membership Reported—Officers of the Grand Black Chapter.

At the meeting of the Grand Orange Lodge for Eastern Ontario at Gananoque, Mr. F. M. Clarke, Grand Secretary, presented his yearly report, which dealt very fully and exhaustively with the business of the order since last Grand Lodge meeting. Eight new lodges had been opened, namely, 420 and 1,211 in Lennox and Addington, 210 and 1,381 in Frontenac, 202 in Lanark, 423 in Grenville, 880 in Stormont and 169 in Renfrew. Some of lodges which had become dormant have been revived. The report gives a complete list of lodges in the jurisdiction of Ontario East. These number 380, with more than 13,000 members, and property which in value exceeds $100,000.

A party of about twenty young people drove to the city this afternoon from Shannonville and stopped at the Anglo. They announced to Mrs. Coyle that two of the party wished to get married and she allowed them the use of the private parlor for the ceremony. Rev. J. Faull was sent for and at 3:30 he joined Mr. Burton Rupert, of Stirling, and Miss Minnie Leverton, of Shannonville, in the bonds of wedlock. Miss Maud Leverton, sister of the bride, acted as bridesmaid, and Mr. S. Cooley, of Thurlow, assisted the groom. After the happy couple had received the congratulations of accompanying friends they left on the 5:05 train for Port Hope. After their return they will take up their home at Howick, Quebec, where the groom has control of a cheese factory.

Pains in the Joints

Caused by Inflammatory Swelling

A Perfect Cure by Hood's Sarsaparilla.

"It affords me much pleasure to recommend Hood's Sarsaparilla. My son was afflicted with great pain in the joints, accompanied with swelling so bad that he could not get up stairs to bed without crawling on hands and knees. I was very anxious about him, and having read so much about Hood's Sarsaparilla I determined to try it, and got a half-dozen bottles, four of which entirely cured him." Mrs. G. F. Leake, Oshawa, Ontario.

Hood's Sarsaparilla Cures

SPORTING TALK.

Kingston had a successful ice regatta on Monday afternoon.

The printers of Brockville have formed an Amateur Athletic Association.

All persons interested in the formation of an amateur athletic association for the city will please meet at the Mechanics' Institute Hall, on Friday evening the 22nd inst., at 8 o'clock. The President of the Ramblers' wheel club requests all members, and those who propose to become members, to attend this meeting, as matters affecting their interests will be discussed. Let there be a large turnout and the association will go on.

The admirers of fast horse flesh in Eastern Ontario have formed a trotting circuit to take place in the month of June in the towns of Lancaster, Cornwall, Wales, Iroquois and Prescott, beginning with the former and ending at Prescott just before the midsummer races at Ogdensburg, N.Y. Lancaster will hang up $800 in prizes, Cornwall and Wales $1000 each and Prescott and Iroquois will probably give larger purses.

SPRINGBROOK.

Court Springbrook No. 36 I. O. F. held their annual entertainment on the night of March 15th. These annual gatherings have become a permanent affair with this progressive Court. The concert was opened by a selection on the bagpipes by N. MacSwayed, of Toronto, followed by a short and stirring address by Bro. W. S. Martin, Warden of the County; High Chief Ranger Bro. H. A. Collins; High Inspector, Bro. C. C. Whale, and Junior Inspector, Bro. R. R. Elliott was then introduced and received a right royal welcome. Miss Sutherland and Mrs. Boyd rendered a duet in a charming manner. Master Archie McEachern, of Stayner, champion Scotch dancer, then gave one of his artistic dances which was hailed with delight. The boy, although but eleven years of age, gave four dances viz., Highland Fling, Shan Truis, Sword Dance and Jack Tar Horn pipe. He also showed his ability as an elocutionist by reciting, in good style, Bruce at Bannockburn and a Bachelor's Woes. Bro. C. Thompson, of Stirling, gave an address. Bro. J. S. Carstairs, B. A., of Stirling, gave a couple of his Scotch songs, which were well received. Taken in all, it was one of the best entertainments ever held in Springbrook.—Quite a number from here attended the Conservative convention held at Madoc last Thursday. The selection of Mr. John Caskey as candidate appears to give universal satisfaction in this locality. —David McComb, Sr., died on Sunday, 17th inst., aged 87.

Removing to New Quarters.

Some months ago Messrs. Green & Harwood, butchers, secured a lease of stalls Nos. 2 and 4 in the meat market and they have had them thoroughly renovated, preparatory to moving into them to-morrow. The new quarters are bright and cheerful, there being windows on three sides. Besides this saloroom, there is a refrigerator and a neat little office. The firm think their new stall will be as handy for their old customers, and that they will also be brought into contact with many new ones. As usual they will have the best of everything in their line.

Safe, Sure and Painless.

What a world of meaning this statement embodies. Just what you are looking for is it not? Putnam's Painless Corn Extractor—the great sure-pop corn cure—acts in this way. It makes no sore spots; safe, acts speedily and with certainty; sure and mildly, without inflaming the parts; painlessly. Do not be imposed upon by imitations of substitutes.

Dangers of Delay.

If we were allowed to look into the future and see the fatal consequences that follow a neglected cold, how differently would our course be; could we realize our danger, how speedily we would seek a cure; but with many it is only when the monster disease has fastened its fangs upon our lungs that we awaken to our folly. What follows a neglected cold? It is not diseases of the throat and lungs, bronchitis, asthma, consumption, and many other diseases of like nature. Is it worse than madness to neglect a cold, and it is folly not to have some good remedy available for its frequent complaint. One of the most efficacious medicines for all diseases of the throat and lungs, is Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup. This medicine is composed of several medicinal herbs, which exert a most wonderful influence in curing consumption and other diseases of the lungs and chest. It promotes a free and easy expectoration, soothes irritation and drives the disease from the system.

CHAPTER II.

"You said yourself once that you would tackle any subject if you were allowed half an hour to read it up."

"Certainly, but this is the one subject that you can't read up. You can't get it out of a book, because any book upon the subject would be out of date before it could be published."

"Can't you get it out of other papers?"

"Even then you can't be certain of being up to date. I tell you—and you can believe it or not, as you like—that the shape of a sleeve has been known to change completely in a single night. Of course, the other papers would give me the right vocabularly—words like 'selvedge,' and 'ruching' and things of that kind."

'M'yes. They wouldn't tell you what they meant."

"No. There you are again; the thing's too difficult."

"Look here," I said, "you must know some good-natured woman of the world—one of the kind that likes young men—one of the kind that believes that journalism is connected with authorship, and authorship is connected with romance. You had better go to her, tell her frankly what your position is, and ask her—"

He interrupted me. "You are being perfectly useless to me," he said, with clenched teeth and studied calm. "If you know me at all, you must know that I would sooner be boiled alive in non-corrosive ink and have my blue black carcass eaten by half-caste Kaffirs, than let any woman of my acquaintance know that I had been even asked to do anything so presumptuous and immodest. If I attempt this article at all, it will be to prove to the editor that I really am an all-round journalist, and you must understand that I don't want it talked about."

"I'LL GIVE YOU A SOVEREIGN," HE REPLIED.

"Certainly. But if you're going to write the article, how do you propose to get your information?"

"I can't say exactly. I shall look in the windows of the big shops, and take notes of the people in the Park. Then the managers of the shops would tell me something in return for a gratuitous advertisement. I thought, perhaps, you might have some other notion."

"No," I said, "I'm afraid I am not of much use. However, I can say that I am sincerely sorry for you."

He shook my hand warmly on leaving, and thanked me. "If anything should happen," he said, hopelessly, "it will, at any rate, be a consolation to me that I have had your sympathy. Good night." He had no sooner shut the door behind him than he opened it again and put his head in. "You don't happen to know what a basque is, do you?" he asked in a melancholy voice. "No? Well, it doesn't matter. It's only one thing out of many. Good night again." He looked very depressed, as if he had some presentiment that he had undertaken a task beyond his powers, and evil would come of it.

Three times on the following day I saw Salemaker. The first time was in the morning, outside the law courts. He was walking very fast in the direction of the west, and seemed more energetic than on the previous day. He came up to me, and said at once in rather a peremptory way: "What's accordion plaiting?"

I confessed that I didn't know.

"That's just like you," he said, impatiently. "You never do know anything. I can't stop."

He hurried on. I noticed that he was carrying under his arm two or three of the feminine journals.

Later in the day I found him staring into the windows of a big shop in Regent street where they sold bonnets. As for his appearance, I can only say that he looked like a desperate man. "I am glad to see you," he said gloomily. "If you'd come a minute later, it would have been all over. I should have broken that window, thrown the bonnets and things into the street and trampled on them. I have been thinking about doing it for the last five minutes."

"Look here, Salemaker," I said, "you've been overworking yourself. You wouldn't get yourself into this condition, if you didn't take things so seriously."

"I'll give you a sovereign," he replied, "to stick your foot through that window. Go on, do it. Nobody's looking. I can't do it myself, because it would injure the paper if I got into the police courts. You've got no position to speak of, and it wouldn't matter if you did it. If you don't want the sovereign, do it out of friendship. There's a hat at the back trimmed with two shoe buckles and a split hummingbird. If I could tear that in half and throw it under an omnibus I should feel better."

Control yourself," I said, firmly. "I'm going to take you to the club and give you tea, and, so far as it is humanly possible, stop you from behaving like a lunatic. What have you been doing all day?"

"I have been collecting material for an article entitled: 'The Height of Fashion.' That's what has brought me to this. You won't do this little thing to oblige me? Just what I thought. You call yourself a Bohemian, and as a matter of fact you're eaten up with respectability."

With some difficulty I persuaded him to come with me to the club. There I gave him tea and consolatory cigarettes. When he was a little calmer I pressed him to tell me his experiences. He did do so, with some reluctance.

"I began," he said, "by going to Bond street. I found a window there with just the right kind of clothes in it. They were so ugly as to be almost indecent. That was why I knew they were all right; they couldn't have been exhibited at all if they hadn't had style. They must have been simply saturated with style. Besides, Bond street's always all right, anyhow. So I pulled out my note-book, and it was just then I saw her with her green eyes fixed on me."

"What her?"

"Miss Catling. Didn't I mention it? I believe she must have been lying in ambush there. She saw, of course, what I was doing, saw it at a glance. I was doing her work. She just bowed, and came at me like an angry cow. I took off my hat and walked quickly away. She pursued. I quickened my pace, and got on to an omnibus immediately behind it. I waited a few seconds, and then stepped off my 'bus. So I got clear away."

"But how? When she saw you get off the one 'bus, why didn't she get off the other, if she wanted to catch you?"

"Because she had paid her penny and couldn't bring herself to take less than the full pennyworth. Women mostly like value for their money. I had counted on that. As I say, I had got clear off, but I believe the incident spoilt my nerve. After that I had no intention of going anywhere in particular, but I found myself in front of another big shop window in Oxford street. I pulled myself together. I decided to go in, say that I wanted the latest news about the fashions and offer in return for the information a gratuitous advertisement of the firm. Well, I went in. Inside there was a tall stately man. He smiled at me just as if he wanted to be a friend to me, and yet all the time his stateliness seemed to be a kind of bar between us."

The Disadvantages of Bank Life.

There is a mistaken idea which is not wholly confined to our young people as to the superiority of the work of the bank clerk. This idea leads too many of our young men to make every effort to secure a bank appointment, the supposed advantages which tempt them being the comparatively light hours of work and the social position which is associated to bank employes, but there are a few disadvantages in the bank clerk's life which it is well should be brought forward at the time when the choice of a work in the world is before our young men. There is little chance for a bank clerk to rise in the world. It has been carefully estimated that ninety-five per cent. of all bank clerks fail to obtain a salary higher than $800. This salary, while ample for the young unmarried man does not go very far for the man who is blessed with a wife and children. The salary given to the young bank clerk who is just beginning his work is seldom more than $200 per year, and it is not until after the fifth year of consecutive service has been passed that the salary is raised to $600. The social side of the bank clerk's life presupposes money, and the apparent ease with which money may be appropriated from the funds which are always on hand, have wrecked many a bright young man. In many cities the bank clerks are under a strict surveillance. They may not board except in houses chosen by the bank—they may not frequent theatres, pool rooms, and they must be scrupulous as to the characters of men with whom they associate. They must not marry without permission, nor until their salaries have reached a certain standard. It is but right that these restrictions should exist; the young men are certainly none the worse for them, but nevertheless the loss of freedom must at times be galling. The great positions in banks are open to the men who have more than ordinary ability and usually great influence which they can bring to bear, and, unlike other professions, there is little room at the top for the patient climbers. The training which a lad receives in a bank is an excellent one, but as a rule it fits him for a life which he has no opportunity to lead, and the more ambitious men who see that the upward way is blocked, usually step into merchantile life. We recommend the careful consideration of these facts to the intelligent young men of the Province.—Halifax Critic.

PIPE SMOKING.

The Difference Between the American and the English Methods.

"There is no doubt," said a prominent Broadway dealer in cigars and tobacco the other day, "that pipe smoking is on the increase in this country, but I don't think there is any likelihood, in my time, at least, that it will ever become as popular here as in England. It isn't adapted to the national temperament. Pipe smoking, to be enjoyed, ought to be done slowly. It is the hardest thing in the world for an American to do anything slowly. When the average American tackles a pipe he puffs away at it as though the one object he had in view was to get all the tobacco in the bowl consumed as speedily as as possible.

"The Englishman acts differently. He doesn't puff at his pipe any oftener than is necessary to keep his tobacco burning. Consequently, he makes a pipeful last about twice as long as an American usually does, and probably gets twice as much genuine satisfaction out of it. Some of my customers tell me that after a month or two's sojourn on the other side they soon get the 'hang,' as they call it, of pipe smoking, because they became imbued with the spirit of taking things easy which prevails there, but they speedily lose it after they return to the land whose real motto is 'Hurry up.'

"There is a growing class of young swells here who, having inherited all the money they need, have no other object in life than to get all the satisfaction they can out of the spending of it. They have cultivated the art of indolent existence with some success, and in their own homes or clubs manage the pipe just as well as the Britisher does, and rather pride themselves on it, because 'it's English, you know.' But the number of persons thus fortunately situated must always of necessity remain limited. As long as push and energy are the trade marks of the typical American cigars will have the call over pipes, and I am glad of it. There's a heap more money in cigars."—New York Herald.

Everybody Knows.

A Dinner Pill.—Many persons suffer excruciating agony after partaking of a hearty dinner. The food partaken of is like a ball of lead upon the stomach, and instead of being a healthy nutriment it becomes a poison to the system. Dr. Parmelee's Vegetable Pills are wonderful correctives of such troubles. They correct acidity, open the secretions and convert the food partaken of into healthy nutriment. They are just the medicine to take if troubled with Indigestion or Dyspepsia.

THE change from the extremely delicate coloring of the past few years with such monotonous effects, to the stronger, richer colorings of today, is not so much a change in fashion as an improvement in taste. When a decorator was timid or inartistic, he avoided strong colors as a child avoids the fire. He had little or no conception of how to use them; hence he remained in the cold montony of whites and grays. If now and again he tentatively ventured in colors, the results were so awful that he would shrink in horror from another such attempt. Some bolder and more callous spirits made picturesque and kaleidoscopic effects which they urged upon innocent and amiable people as artistic; but that sunflower æstheticism did not last. It had the merit of garish effect or of artistic sensationalism only. It could not last. Good taste, like good sense, will always prevail. As a sort of protest against the sunflower sensationalism, the dainty period of creamy-white timidity came into vogue. Many decorators knew that oddities of form and color could not be used in marble halls and maidens' boudoirs, but they did not have the independence to risk an open defiance of the prevalent style. They found a sort of refuge under "A Milk White Flag" of nonentity. The wall-paper manufacturers assumed the risk of putting colors into their papers for this season. The results are beautiful in the products and profitable to the consumer. Strong, rich colors are precisely what the people were waiting for; employed judiciously, they are precisely what they should have. This is an era of strong colors. It is also an era of good taste. It is the period of the golden mean between the eccentricities of the sunflower sensationalism, of riotous vulgarity, and the dreary daintiness of whitey timidity. It is not only philosophic to use strong colors, but it is artistic, æsthetic, and delightful—the climax of all things true, good, and beautiful.

ONTARIO PARLIAMENT

The Question of Assisting Butter Makers Discussed.

PATRONS OPPOSE THE MOTION.

Sir Oliver Secures a Majority of 39 on the Question of Assisting Dairy Farmers—Proposal to Facilitate Shipment of Butter to England—Hotelmen Have Many Wants.

Toronto, March 21. — The Opposition in the Local Legislature are still devoting a large portion of their time to the Patron party. So far their clever tactics have been rewarded with success, and the members of that body are placed in a very awkward position with their supporters in the province. On four different occasions they have been put on record as having voted against the planks of their platform. What the farmers will think of the action of the Patrons yesterday is a matter of much speculation. With the exception of one member they voted against favoring the action of the Dominion Government in purchasing at 20 cents per pound all creamery butter made between Jan. 1 and Aprill, 1895. The result of the coalition was that Sir Oliver Mowat was given a majority of 39—the largest he ever had.

The question came up on two motions of Mr. Whitney. The first was accepted by the Government, and carried. It read:

> That in the interests of the people of this Province, and, in order that the producers may secure the full benefit of the sums annually expended to aid the Dairy interests thereof, the Butter Trade deserves to be encouraged.

On the second motion, however, there was a long and interesting debate, in which all parties took a hand. The resolution was as follows:

> That this House, having regard to the Butter Trade in this Province and the depressed condition thereof, has observed with satisfaction the announcement of the intention of the Government of Canada to provide for the immediate shipment of fresh-made creamery butter to Great Britain, and to purchase at twenty cents per pound all creamery butter of fine quality made between 1st January and 1st April, 1895; and, bearing in mind the expenditure already incurred by the Governments of the Province and Dominion to improve and foster the Dairy interests of the country, respectfully urges upon the Government of Canada the advisability and necessity of providing such further or other aid as may be found to be necessary from time to time, in order that the producers of fresh-made creamery butter may secure the full benefit of such expenditure.

Mr. Whitney, in making his motions, explained that, had the rules of the House permitted, he would have made them more definite—he would have suggested that the Provincial Government do the same. He quoted the resolution passed by the Ontario Creameries Association at the convention recently held asking for Government aid to place Canadian butter on the English market. It was, he contended, a right, a proper thing, for the Provincial Legislature to encourage the agricultural interests; but what they had to look to was that the money should be expended in the most advantageous manner.

Hon. Mr. Dryden, in reply, expressed the opinion that the Dominion Government had not adopted the best means of encourgaing the butter industry. The Government, he considered, had gone outside its legitimate functions in undertaking the sale of butter, and furthermore, the action was altogether unnecessary. The farmers of the country were perfectly competent to look after their own business and get their articles into the best market, providing the obstacles were removed; and he urged that the step which had been taken by the Dominion Government was merely a party move to influence the general elections and not to benefit the butter industry. Two reasons there were, said he, why we had so small an export trade in butter. In the first place all the best butter manufactured was consumed at home, the glut on the market being caused by inferior produce which it did not pay to send abroad; and in the second place the butter, which was exported, was sent out in too stale and old a condition. If we were to send our best butter to England it was necessary that we should have better shipping facilities than we had, and he contended that the Creameries Association referred to this in their resolution in convention. Another cause of depression in the trade, he argued, was owing to the fact that butter manufactured in the summer was held until the winter. There were to-day 100 creameries in operation, which were quite sufficient to fill the market all the year round, and, therefore, we had no use for the summer butter held over and speculators had been bitten. He moved this amendment:

> That this House approves of any reasonable and efficient arrangement that may be made to facilitate the carriage in cold storage of the dairy produce of the province to ports of shipment in Great Britain, and whereby ample cold storage for such products shall be provided in such cities of Great Britain as may be necessary in the interests of trade.

Messrs. McPherson, Bush, McDonald, Carnegie, Ross, Howland and Middleton also spoke.

The division on the amendment was taken a few minutes after 6 o'clock, with this result: Yeas 60, nays 21; Government majority 39

The Patrons voted solid with the Government, with the exception of Mr. Kidd, who supported the Opposition. The P.P.A. members also registered against the Opposition.

The Opposition immediately took hold of the amendment, and Mr. Whitney gave notice that he would ask whether it is the intention of the Government to give financial aid to facilitate the carriage in cold storage of the dairy products of the province to the ports of shipment in Great Britain, and to supply cold storage for such products in such of the cities of Great Britain as may be necessary in the interests of the trade

A bill introduced by Hon. Mr. Dryden for the prevention of fraud in the sale of fruit was read a first time. The bill provides that every person packing fruit shall mark on the crate the words "No. 1" or "No. 2," according to the grade of fruit, or the word "Ungraded," as the case may be, and also his postoffice address. Grade 1 is to consist of well-grown specimens of one variety, as nearly as possible uniform in size, and throughout of good form and color, sound and whole and free from worms, bruises or disease. Grade 2 is to consist of well-grown specimens of one variety, which, on account of inequality of size, lack of color or other defects, cannot be included in grade 1. All other fruit offered for sale in bulk is to be classed as "Ungraded." The person receiving fruit for sale in bulk on commission is compelled to notify the consignor within one week of the price received therefor and the name and address of the purchaser.

Mr. Hardy's bill respecting road allowances in the Rainy River survey was read a third time.

Mr. Crawford introduced a bill providing for the inspection of steam boilers and the qualifications of persons in charge of same. Provision is made for the appointment of a chief inspector and not less than 8 or more than 12 other inspectors, who will constitute a board of inspection.

Mr. Biggar introduced a bill to amend the law, which at present allows persons whose assessment amounts to more than $50,000 to call an additional judge to associate with the County Judge in trying an appeal from the Court of Revision. The new bill provides for the calling in of two outside judges, making a court of three, and that the decision of the majority shall prevail.

Replying to Mr. Ryerson, the Attorney-General said that for professional services two members of the Dominion Parliament had received moneys or fees from the Ontario Government in 1894, namely, Hon. David Mills, who received $250, and James L. Lister, who was paid $249.

Mr. Matheson asked whether it was the intention of the Government to introduce during the present session an act to amend the Succession Duty Act, by extending the amount of legacies exempt from duty beyond the sum of $200; or, by providing that the duty on real estate may, at the option of the heir or devisee, be payable in annual or semi-annual instalments, at a moderate rate of interest; or, by providing for the registration of discharges of real estate from claims for succession duty. In reply, Sir Oliver said that the Government was considering some questions relating to the succession duties, and this might be amongst them.

Mr. Stratton's important bill to amend the Municipal Act passed the second reading. The bill provides that the council of any town having 4000 inhabitants or over may with the assent of the electors abolish wards and elect councillors by general vote.

Mr. German's bill to tax, as personal property, telegraph and telephone lines and lines for the transmission of electric light and power and exempting personal property of banks and trunk line railway companies, but not income from shares, was read a second time after some discussion. Hon. Mr. Hardy and Mr. Whitney thought that the bill went too far.

These bills were read a second time: To amend the act respecting coroners—Mr. German; to amend the Registry Act—Mr. O'Keefe; to amend the Municipal Act—Mr. McKee; to amend the Assessment Act—Mr. Little; to amend the Municipal Act—Mr. Haycock; to amend the Municipal Act—Mr. Richardson.

The House adjourned at 10 o'clock.

A deputation from the License Holders' Protective Association waited upon the Government with a long string of wants. They asked for a universal hour for closing bars throughout the province; reduction of licenses to be in the hands of the Government; the removal and transfer of licenses to be in the hands of the License Commissioners; permission for holders of shop licenses to sell cigars, cigarets and tobacco on their own premises in unbroken packages; tavern license holders to be permitted to sell liquors to guests, boarders and lodgers during prohibited hours; holders of licenses to be eligible for membership in municipal councils; opening of bars in licensed premises on election days, except during election hours; license holders to have the same powers as police officers on their own premises; prohibition of druggists selling liquor except for dispensing purposes; that for offences under the License Act defendant should be a competent but not compellable witness; that shopkeepers be allowed to sell bottled liquors in sealed packages of not less than one-half pint. Sir Oliver replied that no interference with the Liquor License Law would be made this session.

A deputation from the Toronto Board of Trade waited upon the Government to ask for an amendment to the Assignment Act—so as to prevent the making of preferential assignments to the detriment of the creditors. The deputation were asked to present a statement in writing, which will be done forthwith.

The Public Accounts Committee threw out Col. Matheson's resolution, calling for more details in the public accounts on the lines of the Auditor-General's report. The Ministers declared that it would necessitate a complete change in the system of bookkeeping, and involve great expense with little benefit.

Mr. Hobbs will introduce a bill to exempt goods stored in warehouses from seizure for overdue taxes on the warehouse.

THE WELLS MURDER CASE.

The Hyams Brothers Committed for Trial.

Toronto, March 21. — Harry P. and Dallas T. Hyams were yesterday evening committed for trial by the Police Magistrate on a charge of having wilfully murdered William C. Wells in their warehouse in Colborne-street, on Monday, Jan. 16, 1893.

Mr. E.F.B. Johnston, counsel for defence, made an unsuccessful plea for the discharge of Dallas T. Hyams on the ground that there was no evidence to implicate him in the crime.

In declining the application Police Magistrate Denison said: "I don't wish to review all the evidence and argue the points discussed, but my impression is that, from the evidence adduced, there is enough to place the accused on trial. There is no doubt that the evidence is not so strong against Dallas Hyams as against the other prisoner. But the evidence has convinced me that the death of young Wells was not due to accident. There has been ample testimony to show that the weight could not have come off the hook and killed the deceased as alleged. Some one killed him, and these two men were the only persons present when he met his death. Anyway, I don't want to argue the case and show the strong points against the prisoners. I will commit both for trial."

While the argument for his discharge was in progress, Dallas Hyams became extremely nervous. He moved about his seat in the dock, and gave evidence of suffering from the most intense excitement. Several times it looked as if he was about to drop from his seat in a faint. His twin brother was more composed. He sat with his head turned to the right and never removed his gaze once from the east wall of the court room.

The defence had intended to put Dallas Hyams in the box to tell his story, but after hearing the medical testimony counsel altered their minds, and decided to introduce no evidence. There was a little spat between the lawyers before the court was dismissed over a charge made by Mr. Johnston that the Crown had interviewed a witness for the defence to get his story, and it was charged that the prosecution had become acquainted with the story of this witness in consequence of a detective having been present when the prisoners were interviewed by Attorney Wellman. This witness, by the way, is a barber in Leader-lane, who shaved Dallas Hyams the morning of the tragedy. Mr. Curry denied that the information had reached the Crown through the interview between the twins and their counsel, and Deputy-Chief Stuart corroborated him.

It was arranged Detectives Slemin and Burrows should accompany prisoners' counsel to the Colborne-street warehouse to-day, where experiments with the weight and rope will be made.

Havana, March 21.—It is expected that at least 10,000 troops from Spain will reach Cuba before April 12. Two thousand Spanish soldiers will be landed in Santiago on March 22. One battalion will be stationed in Havana. The Government is confident that the troubles in Santiago will be completely suppressed within a week after the arrival of the troops.

PRIVY COUNCIL'S INSTRUCTIONS.

It is Ordered "That the Recommendations and Directions" "be Punctually Obeyed and Carried Into Effect"—The Order to be Signed in the Same Manner a Orders Made by the Imperial Privy Council.

Ottawa, Ont., March 21.—His Excellency the Governor-General this morning signed the minute of Council recommending the issue of a remedial order in the Manitoba school case. It was expected that the order would be sent to Winnipeg to-day, but it appears that the intention is to allow the practice that prevails in the Imperial Privy Council. When an order is issued by Her Majesty in Council it is done with the Queen and a quorum of her ministers present, and, therefore, when the formal remedial order on the Manitoba Government is itself finally signed by Lord Aberdeen, it will be with members of his Cabinet with him. This meeting would have been held this afternoon and the order finally passed, but for the absence from the city of the Secretary of State, custodian of the Great Seal. Mr. Dickey will be home from New England to-morrow.

A strong point in connection with the finding of the Judicial Committee in the Manitoba appeal is contained in the specific declaration attached to the judgment and sent to Canada. It reads as follows: "And Her Majesty, at court at Osborne House, in the Isle of Wight, on the 2nd day of February, 1895, after taking the said report (i.e., the report of the Judicial Committee) into consideration, was pleased, by and with the advice of Her Majesty's Privy Council, to approve of the said report of the lords of committee and to order that the recommendations and directions therein contained be punctually observed, obeyed and carried into effect, in each and every particular, whereof the Governor-General for the Dominion of Canada for the time being, and all other persons whom it may concern, are required to take notice and govern themselves accordingly."

It is expected that the order upon the Manitoba Government will close with somewhat similar phraseology.

The Government have decided to call for tenders for a mail service between Canada and Antwerp, for a period of five years, commencing July 1 next. The service is to be fortnightly in summer and monthly in winter, vessels calling on all voyages at either Havre or Boulogne, or both. The carrying capacity of the steamers is not to be less than 2500 tons, and the speed of vessels not less than 13 knots per hour. Tenders will be received at the Department of Trade and Commerce up to May 1.

The Fisheries Department is arranging for a continuation of the work of oyster culture under the superintendence of Mr. Kemp, the English expert, who has been in the employment of the Department for the last three years. The first bed planted by Mr. Kemp at Shediac, N.B., has been most successful, and the oysters will be ready for gathering this year. It is in contemplation to put this bed in charge of a committee of local oyster fishermen, with a view to its being properly cared for hereafter. Applications are being received at the department for fixing by order-in-council a special date for commencing oyster fisheries. The present regulations provide that this fishery shall be commenced when the ice goes away.

Sir William Van Horne, president of the C.P.R., was in the city to-day. In connection with his visit to Ottawa the announcement is made that the Board of Directors of the company have decided in view of the depression in railway business to reduce the salaries of all officials from the president down. Those receiving over $2000 per annum will have to submit to a cut of 10 per cent., less than $2000 per annum 5 per cent. It is not expected that this order will apply to salaries of less than $700 or $800.

Mr. Schreiber, Deputy-Minister of Railways and Canals, has left for Cape Breton in connection with railway matters.

The argument before the Supreme Court in Collier v. Wright was concluded to-day, counsel for respondents not being called upon. The Chief Justice stated that the court thought the appeal should be dismissed, but it was desirable to have their reasons put in writing; formal judgment would not be given now. Mr. Justice King will prepare the judgment for the court.

Hamilton Bridge Company v. O'Connor was next taken up, Bruce, Q.C., appearing for the appellants and Stanton for respondent. Action against the company in this case was in consequence of an injury to respondent from a steam drill used by the company in their factory at Hamilton. The company deny negligence on their part, and allege contributory negligence by respondent. They also claim that there has been no finding by jury as to contributory negligence, they having found only that he used proper care, "according to his own judgment," which is alleged to be no finding at all. Argument in this case was proceeding when court adjourned.

A few weeks ago the announcement was made in the newspapers that Mr. Weeks of Chippenham, England, one of the tenant farmer delegates, who came to Canada in 1873, could send out about 1100 able-bodied young men who would accept positions in the Northwest as farm laborers. As a result of this statement the Interior Department is advised that Mr. Weeks has been inundated with letters from farmers in Canada desiring young farm hands. Mr. Weeks has now more applications than he can fill.

Ottawa Convention Repudiated.

Ottawa, March 20.—The Ottawa Citizen emphatically repudiates the result of last night's Liberal-Conservative convention as non-representative, and says that Mr. McVeity cannot be recognized as the nominee of the Liberal-Conservative party.

MANITOBA WILL NOT RECEDE.

After Again Resenting Interference Greenway Will Dissolve the House.

Winnipeg, Man., March 21.—The announcement that the Government had passed a remedial order in the school appeal is the chief topic of conversation here and throughout Manitoba. Members of the Provincial Legislature, which happens now to be in session here, were greatly interested in the Cabinet decision and in the Legislative chamber there was much speculation as to the outcome. Several supporters of the Greenway Government, being interviewed, said that if the order sent from Ottawa really required the Manitoba Parliament to adopt remedial legislation the Local House may, after debate, define its position and communicate the same to the Government at Ottawa. That position has been defined frequently before and will not be swerved from now. It is that Manitoba refuses to allow interference with her shool act, and will not suffer remedial legislation. It was reported that, after submitting its reply to Ottawa, the Local Government will ask confirmation of its action from the people by dissolving the House and going to the country on the question. Members of the Government will not talk on the matter until the order has been received from Ottawa.

Your correspondent to-day interviewed a number of prominent public men here on this new turn of affairs. Their views were divergent as to the wisdom of the Government's course, and they were not agreed on the abolition of Separate schools, but unanimous as to what course Greenway's Government would follow. The idea in political circles here is that the order will be brought before the Manitoba Legislature now in session. The Legislature, by an overwhelming majority, will reject the order, and again affirm its determination to stand by national schools, as established by the School Act of 1890. The Dominion Cabinet, receiving this answer from Manitoba, will at once summon a session of Parliament, and throw the responsibility of action on the House. The Parliament, having reached a decision and both parties being committed to some line of policy, an appeal will be taken to the country.

THE HOWE ISLAND SCHOOLS

Eastern Grand Orange Lodge Will Pay the Protestants' Expenses

Gananoque, Ont., March 20.—When the Eastern Grand Lodge opened, Bro. Capt. Gaskin brought up the Howe Island school case. A resolution was passed pledging the Grand Lodge to support Howe Island Protestants in retaining the schools of the Island as public schools, the Grand Lodge to send the case on for consideration of the Sovereign Grand Lodge of British America. This was finally settled in the afternoon, when a motion was passed that this Grand Lodge would pay all expenses in connection with the Howe Island school case over and above that paid by the Catholics.

The Manitoba school question, which was expected to raise quite a storm at the meeting, was finally settled without much discussion, as the Government had decided the matter, an dit was now in the hands of the Governor-General for ratification or until such time as the Government had made known the decision arrived at in council, and has received the signature of Lord Aberdeen.

QUERY.

How does "Free Trade as it is in England" benefit the workingman, if it gives him slightly cheaper foreign manufactures, but deprives him of employment and taxes his tea, coffee and sugar, which are now free?

A CURIOUS SPECTACLE.

The unity of the Grit party is beautifully exemplified by the utterances of Messrs. Joseph Martin, of Winnipeg, Boodler Tarte and Rip Van Winkle Joly.

The first is the father of the law passed by the Manitoba Legislature which abolished Roman Catholic schools in that province. The second assures his hearers that Mr. Laurier is in favor of Separate Schools. The third proclaims non-sectarian schools. And each declares that his view is the policy of his party.

What confidence can the public have in such a party?

APPEALS TO PREJUDICE.

While the Montreal Witness is seeking to show, though the facts are against it, that Sir Mackenzie Bowell paid for masses for the late Sir John Thompson, and is therefore as a Protestant unsound, says the Mail and Empire, Mr. Tarte is arousing Quebec with the cry that the Premier is an Orangeman, and is therefore too Protestant to hold office. "Mr. Devlin, who spoke before me," said Mr. Tarte to a Montreal audience, "told you that he did not attack Sir Mackenzie Bowell because he is an Orangeman. I here differ from him. I attack him because he is an Orangeman." Mr. Blake, it seems, detested Orangeism, and "our programme," declares Mr. Tarte, "is still the same." The appeals to prejudice are very unfortunate. But it is sincerely to be hoped that responsible citizens will not allow themselves to be moved by them.

"HAS THE N.P. MADE YOU RICH?"

The Liberal press of Canada are putting forth prominently the interrogation, "Has the National Policy made you rich?" and Mr. Laurier reached the climax of this fad at St. Jerome, Quebec, where he asked the same question, and advised those who were to vote for the Government, and in particular asking those who were not, to vote for his "Free Trade as it is in England."

Of course their object in doing this is not so much to get the farmers' votes, but the workingman's and artisan's, who have always been friendly to the National Policy. This latter class, though happy and probably the most contented of any people, never become very rich in any country—so Mr. Laurier promises them riches, and therefore believes that he is certain of their votes. They will not do any such thing. If they do, it will be a jump from the frying pan into the fire. With the N.P. gone, manufactured articles will drown out our own industries, which the artisan and operatives depend upon, and thus in turn the home market of the farmer is gone.

Mr. Laurier is now so loyal that he wishes to import into Canada British free trade, and his remarks at St. Jerome asking for the support of the poorer classes, would have been a hit had he been speaking in England, where a few thousand persons own all the land, and wealth is less evenly distributed than in Canada. If his "Free Trade as it is in England" would work in Canada as it does in England, woe, woe to Canada's poor. It is estimated that it will take £5,000,000 to keep the poor classes in England for six weeks. Agriculture there is at its lowest ebb, so low that a commission is enquiring into the cause—and another is about to be appointed to enquire into the cause of so many working men being idle in the cities. This does not speak well for the policy of Mr. Laurier, if it would work here as it does in England.

A MARKET OF SIXTY MILLIONS.

We read in the Hamilton Times: "Out in Western Kansas the sufferings of the farmers are great. In some parts people are resorting to horseflesh, being unable to get other food. Yet Kansas has all the blessings (?) of a protective tariff. If such a state of things existed in Free Trade England, what a howl would rise from the Tory press of Canada!"

We rub our eyes and look again to see if we can be mistaken, comments the Ottawa Citizen. Surely, this cannot be the condition to which the farmers are reduced in the market of sixty millions! Why, it is but a few years since Farrer, Hitt, Butterworth, Cartwright, Laurier, Charlton and other leaders of the Liberal party on both sides of the border were imploring Canada to barter her commercial and national independence in order to give the Canadian farmer an opportunity of sharing the blessings that thicken upon the head of his American fellow. Kansas! Why, Kansas was Blake's paradise, and the enterprising immigration agent of that state distributed pamphlets in tens of thousands bearing his intellectual countenance on the back. And yet the farmers down there are reduced to eating horseflesh! Alas, another of the cherished illusions must be relegated to the dustbin of exploded fallacies with the tale of Troy, and the identity of Shakespeare and the story of William Tell.

The market of sixty millions is not by any means the boon it was represented, but it is curious what a changeable and capricious kind of market it is. When a Grit paper wants to publish an item like the above from Kansas it points to the misery and suffering in many parts of the United States as the horrible results of protection. When Liberal statemen ask the electorate to support a policy which will make Canada a commercial annex of its neighbor they grow eloquent upon the fact that protection in the United States is only a deceptive name because there is free trade between the States, free trade across a continent. It is for the public to place these two stories beside each other and draw a conclusion.

THE GUNMAKER OF ILION.

(From the Springfield, Mass., Union.)

There isn't a gun manufacturer in the United States who does not know Jefferson M. Clough, and why? Because he has been intimately associated all his life with the development of the two best American rifles, the Remington and the Winchester. For years he was superintendent of F. Remington & Sons' great factory at Ilion, N. Y. After leaving there he refused a tempting offer of the Chinese Government to go to China to superintend their government factories, and accepted instead the superintendency of the Winchester-Arms Co., at New Haven, at a salary of $7,500 a year. Faithful, of untiring energy, and of extraordinary ability in his line of business, he did more to develop the Remington and Winchester rifles than any one. But he was forced to retire owing to failing health, and he is now located on his 500 acre country place at Belchertown, Mass., and while his old friends will be delighted at his recovery, he without doubt will not enter active business again, being 65 years old and very well to do.

During the summer of '93 and the winter of '94 it will be remembered he was confined to his house and bed with muscular rheumatism of a severe nature. But he began taking Dr. Williams' Pink Pills about the first of March 1894, and continued to do so until the first part of September following. The first effect noticed was a better appetite and he began to note more ability to help himself off the bed and to be better generally. Last August (1894) he was able to go alone to his summer residence and farm on Grenadier Island, among the Thousand Islands, in the river St. Lawrence; and now, instead of being confined to his bed Mr. Clough is and has been for some time able to be about the farm to direct to men employed there and is thankful for his recovery.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills contain all the elements necessary to give new life and richness to the blood and restore shattered nerves. They are for sale by all druggists, or may be had by mail from Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, Brockville, Ont., for 50 cents per box, or six boxes for $2.50.

TRULY ASTONISHING.—Miss Annette N. Moen, Fountain, Minn., says: "Ayer's Cherry Pectoral has had a wonderful effect in curing my brother's children of a severe and dangerous cold. It was truly astonishing how speedily they found relief after taking this preparation."

MME. EMMA EAMES.

The Great Soprano.

Very beautiful are the features of Mdme. Emma Eames, the great singer, whose art has delighted many thousands. Her presence is gracious, her intellectuality unquestioned and her voice a perfect delight. Praise from one so celebrated, then, has a high value, and this is what Mdme. Emma Eames says of "Vin Mariani," the famous tonic wine:—"Vin Mariani" is a most delightful and efficacious tonic, of inestimable value." All public characters, doing a great deal of brain work, feel the beneficial effects of this tonic-stimulant, which is a great nourisher of the brain, imparting at the same time to the body, debilitated or depressed, new vigor, so that it has been well called by Zola, the elixir of life. "Vin Mariani" is more tonic than iron or quinine, and does not produce constipation. Send your address to Lawrence A. Wilson & Co., Montreal, the Canadian Agents, and you will receive an album, containing the portraits of a large number of celebrities, who have spoken enthusiastically of this notable stimulant, prepared from pure grapes and coca leaves.

OPENING THEIR CELLARS.

Montreal Gazette says:

A very pleasant little affair was the inspection of the Bordeaux Claret Company's cellars by His Honor Lieutenant-Governor Chapleau. The manager has sent out invitations to several prominent citizens, who were in attendance to meet His Honor. Among those present were Hon. Peter Mitchell, Mr. Richard White, Lieut.-Colonel Hughes, Messrs. Henry Dalby, E. N. St. Jean, Q.C., J. P. B. Casgrain, J. M. Fortier, Geo. W. Stephens, jr., D. Z. Bessette, A. Terroux, S. S. Silverman, ex-Ald. Dufresne, Ald. Préfontaine, Hon. A. Archambault, M.L.C., etc. After the visit of inspection to the cellars had been paid and the different arrangements for bottling, etc., highly commented upon, toasts were in order. A beautiful speech was uttered by the Lieutenant-Governor, who wished the Company success in their great enterprise. THE BLAKE'S SUCCESSOR.

Admiration Expressed for H. M. S Crescent.

HALIFAX, N.S., March 20.—The warship Crescent, which arrived at Portsmouth on March 2 from a China station, was paid off on March 11, and commissioned on March 12 for the North America station. Since commissioning, the Crescent has run over 55,000 knots, and has been exactly a half year under way. She has consumed in that period 14,000 tons of coal. She has been an object of envy on both the China and Australian stations. Admiral Fremantle expressed himself as most reluctant to part with her. During her stay in Chinese waters she was constantly with a flag and formed a valuable addition to the strength of the squadron. The Australians made repeated efforts to secure her as the flag ship, in lieu of the Orlando. While at Sydney the colonists were so much pleased with the Crescent that the Premier telegraphed Lord Rosebery, asking that she might be retained as the flagship. Capt. Fisher, who commanded her on the voyage out, described her as the "pearl of the ocean." The Crescent will be the flagship of Vice-Admiral J. R. Erskine on this station. The flag Lieutenant is Col. Halsey; Flag-Captain, Francis Powell, C. B.; Commander, T. B. S. Adair; Staff-Commander, J. C. A. Wilkinson. The latter served on the Blake on this station as lieutenant.

A Rawdon Wedding.

The home of Mr. and Mrs. John Bailey, of Harold, was a scene of pleasure on Wednesday evening, March 13th, the cause being the marriage of their daughter Carrie Amelia, to George T. Belshaw. About seventy invited guests were present, and at 7 o'clock the bridal party were summoned to appear before the Rev. Mr. Belfour, who performed the ceremony. The bride was becomingly attired and looked charming. Miss Abbie Belshaw, sister of the groom, acted as bridesmaid, her attire harmonizing beautifully with that of the bride. Miss Clara Bailey, cousin of the bride, attended as maid of honor. The groom was ably assisted by Mr. Charles Bailey, brother of the bride. After the ceremony and the usual congratulations had been offered, all repaired to the dining room, where a sumptuous wedding dinner was served, to which all did ample justice. The presents to the bride were numerous, handsome and useful articles, consisting of glass, china and silverware. The newly wedded couple have the best wishes of a large circle of friends for their future happiness and prosperity. On the following evening the young couple were given a reception at the home of the groom's parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. T. Belshaw, where about one hundred invited guests were present.. Supper was provided for all and partaken of to their satisfaction. Appropriate music was provided for the occasion. All appeared to enjoy themselves to the utmost. Happy to meet, sorry to part, anxiously awaiting the next meeting.

The Cup Defender.

The Boston Herald, a good authority, publishes a long article devoted almost entirely to general news regarding the dimensions and construction of the new defender. Her length over all is 125 feet, extreme draught 19 feet, extreme beam 22 feet plus inches. The Herald figures the sail plan of the new boat approximately as follows: Mainsail 7,000 square feet, foresail 1,500 square feet, jib 1,450 square feet, topsail 1,200; total 11,150, or a gain of 2,400 feet over that of the Colonia.

A comparison with the dimensions of the Vigilant, Colonia, Jubilee, Pilgrim and Valkyrie, which will be found below, will undoubtedly prove of interest:

Vigilant—Length over all, 126 feet; length on water line, 86 feet 7 inches; beam, 26 feet; draught, 13 feet 3 inches; total sail area, 11,312 square feet; lower sails, 8,700 feet (approximately).

Colonia—Length over all, 126 feet; length on water line, 85 feet 6 inches; beam, 24 feet; draught, 15 feet 4 inches; total sail area, 11,340 square feet; lower sails, 8,700 square feet (approximately).

Jubilee—Length over all, 122 feet; length on water line, 84 feet 6 inches; beam, 22 feet 6 inches; draught, 13 feet 9 inches: total sail area, 11342 square feet; lower sails, about 8,700 square feet.

Pilgrim—Length over all, 120 feet; length on water line 85 feet 3 inches; beam, 23 feet; draught 22 feet 6 inches; total sail area, 10,261; lower sails, about 7,800 square feet.

Valkyrie—Length over all, 133 feet; length on water line, 85 feet 8 inches. beam, 22 feet 7 inches; draught, 17 feet 3 inches; total sail rrea, about 10,160 square feet; lower sails, about 7,700 square feet.

The sail area of the Ailsa is alleged to be 11,500 square feet.

The Women's Globe.

Canadian women are already noted for many graces of person, character and heart, and now they propose showing that they also possess mental powers of a high order, combined with business qualities. They have undertaken to assume charge of an entire issue of the Toronto Daily Globe (for April 18th, next). The regular editorial and reportorial staffs, certainly all the male members thereof, will be displaced for that issue by a staff of ladies who will cover every department of the paper—business, editorial, local and general. The issue will be a very large one, both as to the number of pages and as to circulation, and will also be non-political and non-sectarian. The result of this unique undertaking will, we are sure, be watched with keenest interest, not only by the fair sex of the Dominion, but also by the, on this occasion, more curious male element.

ROSSMORE.

MARCH 19th.—Mr. Abraham Post, who has been ill for the past three months, passed away on Sunday night. The funeral, which was held on Wednesday, was largely attended by the friends of the old gentleman, and the community join in the sorrow of the bereaved family.—Mr. W. W. Post, of Hawkesbury, is home attending the funeral of his father.—Mrs. Geo. DeField is visiting friends at Trenton.—Mr. Geo. Swenor, who has been away for the last two years at Parry Harbor, is home again and intends to work his father's farm, this year. —Mr. Watson Gerow is home again to old Rossmore.—Ice boating seems to be the sport of the day.

Why Contemplate Suicide?

It is like tempting Providence for consumptives to ignore the remarkable remedy known as Miller's Emulsion of Norwegian Cod Liver Oil. For any person to die of consumption without trying this remarkable flesh and blood maker, after knowing of its existence, is suicide pure and simple. All that the consumptive patient needs is new blood with which to battle against the destructive forces of the disease. Miller's Emulsion provides new blood in abundance. It is a combination of Norwegian Oil and hypophosphites of lime and soda—a triumph of science. Miller's Emulsion is the great nerve strengthener and blood maker, and cures Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis, Scrofula and all lung affections. In Big Bottles, 0c. and $1, at all Drug Stores.

—Mr. Laurier is reported to have much improved in health. He is expected in Montreal to-morrow or on Saturday, and will then proceed to Ontario.

Safe, Sure and Painless.

What a world of meaning this statement embodies. Just what you are looking for. Is it not? Putnam's Painless Corn Extractor—the great sure-pop corn cure—acts in this way. It makes no sore spots; safe, acts speedily and with certainty; sure and mildly, without inflaming the parts; painlessly. Do not be imposed upon by imitations of substitutes.

Murray Leaves for Newfoundland To-Day

Ludon, March 21.—Herbert Murray, formerly chairman of the Customs Department, will start to-morrow for Newfoundland to distribute a relief fund for the Imperial Government. Gladstone to Reappear in the House

London, March 20.—It is announced that Mr. Gladstone will return to England at the end of the present week, and it is expected that he will deliver an address in the House of Commons as a tribute to Right Hon. Arthur Wellesley Peel, the retiring Speaker. The leaders in the House are in hopes that the ex-Premier will act as mediator in the Speakership deadlock.

Several London newspapers, in articles on the condition of Lord Rosebery's health, advise the Premier to make a sea voyage, in the belief that such a trip would be of benefit to him.

Venezuela Complications.

Washington, March 20.—The prospect of serious complications which threaten the United States through probable European encroashment on Venezuela and Nicaragua has assumed a phase of such danger to the principle laid down in the Monroe doctrine that a special Cabinet conference was held at the White House this afternoon to consider the subject. There is no doubt that a misstep may plunge the Government into embarrassing complications wit hnot one, but several of the principal European nations. It is said that Mr. Bayard has failed to arrange the Mosquito troubles with the British Government in a satisfactory manner to the United States.

Great Britain's ultimatum to Nicaragua, demanding an indemnity for the expulsion of Mr. Hatch, the British Consular Agent, from Bluefields, and the erport that a British war ship is on her way to enforce the demand, is the last known serious phase of the diffisulties growing out of teh Bluefields affair, and as action by this Government may involve a new construction of the Monroe doctrine, it can be seen how carefully the president and his advisers are obliged to feel their way to prevent any possibility of blunder, or to neglect any advantage that might weaken the practical sponsorship which the United States Government holds over the South American and Central American republics.

In the Venezuelan affair the United States Government finds itself opposed to such strong adversaries as Great Britain, FrGnce and Germany with Belgium as an incidental factor. The settlement of the claim of Great Britain to certain Venezeulan territory as the main cause for alarm and to this is added the prospect that Geramny will send warships to collect a large amount of money guaranteed German contractors for the construction of the Central Venezeulan Railroad. France and Belgium have a common ground for action, disturbing to the peace of the little South America n Republic, namely the expulsion of the French and Belgian Ministers from that country. Both Governments have protested against the expulsion and France will send a naval vessel to take the envoys home. The Monroe doctrine and its ramifications contain ample authority, it is said, for the United States to display an active interest in the threatening attitude of Great Britain and Germany, and while the probable action of France and Belgium does not seeminglyl come within the scope of the doctrine it is understood to be the belief of this Government that all four of the powers involved will join issue in opposition to the United States to secure their several ends and such amalgamation is likely to beget a desire on the part of all to extend their dominions.

A LADY'S THANKFULNESS!

Rescued From Fatal Diseases.

She Says: "I Thank God For the Wonders Paine's Celery Compound Accomplished For me."

Another Proof of the Value of the Great Spring Medicine

The following letter from Mrs. H. Harbour, of Winnipeg, Man., should give strong encouragment to all who suffer from heart disease, kidney trouble and general weakness. Such sufferers should take warning of the dread results that are sure to follow if disease is neglected in the Spring season. Now is the time to cleanse and put away loads of disease; a month or two later your case may be a hopeless one. Paine's Celery Compound is the only cleanser and disease-banisher that can meet successfully the worst cases. It succeeds when all other medicines fail; it is the only true health-restorer, and our best Canadian people testify daily to its virtues and wondrous health-imparting qualities.

Mrs. Harbour says:—

"It is with great pleasure that I write to thank you for your wonderful medicine. Paine's Celery Compound. A month ago I was very sick and happened to see one of your publications, in which I read of others being cured. I concluded to try Paine's Celery Compound myself, and I now thank God for the wonders it accomplished for me. I was suffering from heart disease, kidney trouble and general weakness, and some days was not able to stand without experiencing great pain; my appetite was also very poor. Since I used the Compound I am able to get about the house and work, and can now eat anything put before me.

"I trust my testimony may lead many to try your valuable remedy."

Small Change.

Small change is indispensable in going about the city. To have only a five-dollar bill in one's purse when riding in an omnibus or car is almost as bad as to have no money. One requires small change, and the thoughtful husband supplies his wife with bright ten cent pieces and shining quarters just as regularly as with fresh greenbacks. A woman prefers new and fresh money to that which is greasy and soiled, if she can have her choice, and a certain good man, known and loved in a large circle, always makes a point of bringing home to his family the wherewithal for domestic expenses in a very dainty shape. He is deservedly a favorite.

Small change is as valuable in the commerce of life in other departments as in that of the exchequer. There are people who can talk extremely well on learned and serious subjects, but they have no small change. The quick jest and easy repartee of the drawing-room are not for them. Helplessly and hopelessly, with gloom settling over their faces, and depair in their souls, they sit by while less gifted people chat and laugh and have good times. The trouble is they are destitute of small change.

This puts them at a disadvantage in society, where there is not time for homilies and treatises, but where everything is froth and foam. The airy butterfly flight of their neighbors confuses and disturbs them. Their forces must, so to speak, be drawn up in order, and prepared to charge on the enemy, horse, foot and dragoons. All this takes time and thought, and the enemy is up and away, skirmishing triumphantly elsewhere, before the unlucky opponent has arranged his line of battle. By all means let those who would succeed in society carry about the small change of witty conversation.—Harper's Bazar.

"PATRONS ARE DEAD."

SECRETARY KIDD WEARIED WITH THE ACTION AND VOTES OF THE PARTY.

Gamey Would Not Vote With Them and Shore Sorry That He Submitted—Strong Evidence of a General Disruption of the New Party.

(Toronto Star, March 2nd.)

There is little doubt now but yesterday's vote may have a great influence on the future of the Patron party in the Ontario Legislature.

Mr. T. C. Kidd, member for Carleton, and Secretary of the order, did not vote. He was in the House at night, and said that business had detained him, and that he had not expected a vote.

"I am very sorry that I was not able to be present," he told me this morning, "for I was most anxious to support that amendment of the Opposition, and I would have spoken in favor of it.

"I would have voted against the Patron members, for I believe the Patron party is desirous, first that the patronage be taken from the Government, and that officials be chosen from the counties. It is a matter of small importance whether the officials are elected or appointed.

"The Patrons are killing themselves by these votes. They are dead already, and their influence in the Dominion election will not amount to anything. They have gone too far."

"McNicol had no right to speak for the party," said Mr. Shore, a Patron. "There was no caucus, and no decision. I voted with the Patrons because I was the only one to stand out, and I didn't want to stand out alone."

The remarks of these two members, taken with the action and remarks of Gamey, who though he would not vote against the Patrons, would not vote with them, seems to indicate a disruption in the party.

CALLED TO DETROIT.

DETROIT, March 21.—A special meeting of the congregation of the Central Presbyterian church was held last night to decide upon a pastor to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Rev. James Dickie to accept a call from Berlin, Germany.

Six or seven candidates were in the field at the opening, but this number was reduced to two, Rev. Marcus Scott, of Campbellford, Ontario, and Rev. Duncan Cameron, of Canisteo, N. Y. The fight on these two candidates was decidedly warm. Mr. Scott was the candidate of the older people, while Mr. Cameron was championed by the young people. Mr. Scott was finally chosen, the vote being ninety-one to forty. The salary was placed at $2,000.

Mr. A. Dulmage's Spring Opening.

Mr. A. Dulmage's spring opening of millinery and ladies' and children's white wear took place yesterday and to-day. The display surpasses any previous attempt made by this house. The skilled trimmers employed by Mr. Dulmage have made the most of the new shapes, delicately tinted ribbons and pretty flowers and they have produced some dazzling effects. The very latest shape in straw has a high crown, with a moderately broad brim. The reporter was shown some exquisite pattern hats with flower crowns, dainty toques and stylish bonnets, the latter having the appearance of the spread wings of a large butterfly. Mr. Dulmage shows a great variety of flower trimming, as well as jet and ribbon. He makes a specialty of ladies' and children's white wear and children's headgear. The whole display shows skill and artistic taste.

The Negotiations are Off.

The Kingston News of yesterday says: Mayor Wright and Ald Gaskin, Richardson and McKelvey met the representatives of the Dominion Steel Company last evening. The conference resulted in a disagreement, and it is said that the negotiations have been broken off. This ending was the result of the action of Ald. Gaskin and McKelvey, who, it is stated, would not agree to the terms of payment of the instalments of the loan which was to have been given the firm. The iron men left for Belleville at 1.40 this morning.

This much has been learned from outside sources, but the members of the committee refuse to talk on the subject.

To which we add that the members of the company did not stop at Belleville.

The Weather.

This is the first day of spring—the vernal equinox. Still the ice on the river and bay is as firm as it was a month ago and sleighing, although by no means good, is still in vogue after having lasted for eighty days. Lowest temperature last night, 12; at 8 a. m., 18; at noon, 30.

PROBABILITIES.

Fine weather; stationary or a little higher temperature.

A MAN OF AFFAIRS.

Sketch of the Life and Busy Career of Our Candidate in North Hastings.

John Caskey, who has been selected by the Conservatives of North Hastings as their candidate for the House of Commons, has had a busy life and has filled many positions of trust and responsibility with credit and honor, as the following sketch of his career will show:

His parents were Irish, who came from the north of Ireland and in 1834 settled in the township of Hungerford on a wild lot about two and a half miles from the village of Tweed, where they both died. His brother Robert lives on the old homestead at the present time. The subject of our notice was born on the 26th of August, 1837, and has three brothers and two sisters living, namely, Thomas Campbell Caskey, who lives at Blairton; James, in the County of Bruce; Robert, as aforesaid, at the old home. Of the sisters, Mary Ann is the wife of Wm. J. Allen, of the Allen settlement, Madoc, and Margaret Jane is the wife of Henry O. Foster, of the County of Bruce. Mr. Caskey married a daughter of Wm. Coulter, of Huntingdon, on the 17th of July 1861, and moved to lot 30 in the 10th con. of Madoc in the Allen Settlement in the same month. While in that settlement, which was about 20 years, he was a member of the School Board for 9 years, and treasurer for 6 years, and also took an active part in the cheese industry. He was a director of the Allen Settlement company from the start of it, and was subsequently appointed President and salesman, which position he held for about two years. He sold out there and purchased the farm he now lives on, near Madoc village, and has been President and salesman of the Alexandra Cheese Manufacturing Company some time, which position he holds at present. In the two different cheese companies he has held the position of president for nearly 24 years. He is a member of the village School Board at present and has been for six years, and also held the position of Chairman of the Board. He is now, and has been for four years, Treasurer of the Township of Madoc. Mr Caskey served the township in the capacity of Councillor, Deputy Reeve and Reeve for eleven years. He was a candidate for the Wardenship against J. C. Hanley, and was defeated by one vote. He is a member of the Presbyterian church and his wife and son are also members. He has two daughters married, one to Robert Reid and one to John D. Ketcheson. Is Past County Master of the Orange County Lodge for Central Hastings and also Treasurer of District No. 2, Central Hastings.

MR. JOHN CASKEY.

Mr. Caskey is in all respects a worthy member of the community and is esteemed and respected by a very wide circle of friends in all parts of the county.

HAMILTON IRON WORKS!

AS SEEN BY THE GREATEST AMERICAN AUTHORITY ON IRON.

Some Description of the Works—The Advantages of the Situation—The Advantage of the Canadian Tariff—The Market for the Output.

In view of the coming negotiations with the parties who are proposing to establish a steel plant and possibly an iron smelting furnace in this Province, the following details as to the smelting furnace which is now being erected in Hamilton, will be found of great interest. We copy from the Iron Age—the highest American authority on the subject:

For a country which has a population of more than 2,000,000, which possesses rich resources of soil, timber and minerals, including iron ores, which sustain varied industries, and which has large amounts of capital invested and seeking investment, much of it employed in the neighboring states, the province of Ontario is singular in being almost alone among the great commonwealths of our continent without a blast furnace for the production of metallic iron. So wrote Archibald Blue, the able and energetic director of the Ontario bureau of mines, in his official report for 1892. Ontario, however, is now in a fair way of being deprived of this unenviable distinction. While Mr. Blue was penning the above words in 1893 a number of gentlemen were considering the advisability of establishing a pig iron making plant at Hamilton. The result of their discussion was the formation of the Hamilton Iron and Steel Company, and the commencement early in 1894 of work on the foundation of a blast furnace to be 75 feet high and 16 feet in diameter at the bosh. Various little matters contributed to delay the work, among them being a difficulty with officials of the Grand Trunk Railway company, whose tracks had to be crossed in hauling stone for the furnace foundations. The railway, whose traffic would be increased by the furnace operations, apparently preferred to retard rather than further the new enterprise. In consequence the foundations were not completed until the fall of 1894. Rail connection was made later with the Grand Trunk, and the iron work, which is under contract to the Philadelphia Engineering works, began to arrive before the close of the year. At the present time, the three stoves, which are to be 60 feet by 20 feet, are nearly completed, the furnace stack is almost finished, and the cast house is ready for the roof.

The prosecution of this furnace enterprise at Hamilton is largely due to American energy, the president of the company, Wm. Foster, jr., the secretary, H. N. Curtis, and two of the directors, are New York men, while J. J. Morehouse, the treasurer and general manager, and his brother, James Morehouse, who is supervising the building of the furnace, are both well known in connection with the management of charcoal blast furnaces in New England and in New York state. Robert Jaffray, a Toronto banker and newspaper proprietor, and five prominent Hamilton gentlemen are also on the directorate of the company.

The city of Hamilton is aiding the enterprise to the extent of providing the site (which comprizes 170 acres valued at $35,000), free of charge and granting a money bonus of $40,000, originally stipulating that the furnace should be completed and ready for operation by Dec. 31, 1894 (which time has now been extended to July 1, 1895), that when completed it shall be capable of turning out at least 150 tons of pig iron per day and that the sum of $400,000 shall have been expended upon the works at the time of completion. In passing this by-law the city at the same time made provision for a further bonus of $60,000 for the construction of a steel plant at the close of 1896, but, of course, the enlargement of the works will depend upon the successful operation of the furnace now under way.

The situation of the furnace is an excellent one in many respects. It is just outside of the southeast limits of the city of Hamilton, and close to the harbor, while the track of the Grand Tunk railway is but half a mile away, connection with which has already been made. Hence, when the furnace docks are completed, ore and fuel can be dumped close to the stack from ships or from cars, and the pig iron can be shipped to the chief consuming points by an all water or an all rail route. About 60 acres of the 170 acre tract given by the city is solid ground with no obstacles to furnace operations; the remainder is swampy and can be filled in as needed.

The Hamilton furnace will have several advantages over all prospective competitors, which comprise the coke furnaces of Nova Scotia and of the United States, the competition of American iron having practically driven out Scotch iron from Ontario. In Hamilton itself there is a large quantity of pig iron consumed, and the town lies within about 100 miles of most of the other places in Ontario which afford an important market for this commodity. Hence, in freight on the pig iron shipped there will be an average of about $5 per long ton advantage for the Hamilton plant over its Nova Scotia competitors. It will also have an advantage in freight charges over its nearest American rivals, although a small one. But against American competition it will have the more substantial advantage of the duty and bounty of $4 and $2 per short ton, respectively, or, together, $6.72 per long ton. The sum, in itself, is almost equal to the whole cost of making pig iron in some sections of the United States at the present time. There is still another advantage which a blast furnace in Ontario is offered, or at least will have an opportunity in sharing over other pig iron establishments, not only in foreign lands, but in all other provinces in Canada. This is the bounty offered by the Ontario Parliament at its last session. This bounty is payable to the miners or producers of iron ore in the province, but as the conditions require that, in order to secure the bounty, the ore shall also be smelted in the province, it will be seen that the furnacemen's position will enable him to obtain much, if not all, the benefit, especially if there be competition in the production of the ore. The sum of money appropriated for these iron bounties is $125,000, and is available for a period of five years from July 1, 1895. The miners or producers are to be paid the equivalent of $1 per short ton of the pig metal produced from their ores, but not more than $25,000 is to be paid in any one year. If more ore is mined and smelted than the $25,000 at $1 per ton of pig would be sufficient to meet, the payments are to be on a pro rata basis per ton. Consequently, if 25,000 short tons of pig iron be made in one year from Ontario ores, the makers will possibly enjoy in the reduced price of ore the equivalent of a bounty of $1 per short ton of pig iron; if 50,000 tons of iron be similarly produced in one year, the bounty would be equivalent to 50 cents per ton of smelted iron.

From the foregoing, it will be seen that it is possible for the Hamilton furnace to enjoy for several years the equivalent of a protection of $7.84 per long ton on its product against British and foreign competition, and of $1.12 per long ton against Nova Scotian iron, besides the additional great advantage over the latter in freight for Central Ontario markets. Great as these advantages seem to be in these days of keen competition, they are offset more or less by the conditions attaching to the supply of ore and fuel. With regard to the latter article all its important competitors are more favorably situated than the Hamilton furnace. It will have to depend on Pennsylvania coke, which at the lowest prices can scarcely be delivered at Hamilton at $4 per ton. (Coke is in the free list of the new tariff.) But the important matter of ore supply has yet to be settled. That there are extensive deposits of rich iron ores in Ontario has long been known. Many of the deposits have been worked, and when prices were high thousands of tons of ore were shipped to the United States, the users bearing testimony to its excellent quality. But nearly all the discoveries and the mining have been of magnetite. To obtain a sufficient supply of hematite to mix with the magnetite in order to produce good foundry iron will probably be the first difficulty to be overcome by the completed Hamilton furnace. As iron ore is also on the Canadian free list, it may even be found profitable at the extremely low prices prevailing for Lake Superior ores for the Hamilton company to use the product of the Michigan or Minnesota mines in whole or in part, at least until more extensive ore developments are made in Ontario. But these questions will have to be answered with regard to the conditions prevailing some months hence. It is scarcely necessary to add that when the Hamilton furnace is completed and started the results of its operation will be watched with keen interest by Canadian iron men and metallurgists, and by some American furnacemen near the border, who marketed 24,951 short tons of pig iron in Ontario in the fiscal year 1894.

The Presbytery of Kingston met Tuesday afternoon and evening in the lecture room of Cooke's church, Kingston.

The following members were present: S. Childerhose, (Moderator), W. T. Wilkins, (Clerk), Principal Grant, Dr. Mowat, Prof. Ferguson, D. McEachern, S. Houston, H. Gracey, J. Gandier, J. Fairlie, A. Binnie, ministers; and W. MacIntosh, H. Scott, J. Adams, J. O'Hara, C. E. Jones and Geo. W. Maxwell, elders.

After some routine business was done, commissioners to the General Assembly, which meets in London in June, were elected. The following members were appointed by rotation: Revs. J. Cumberland, J. L. George, John Moore, S. Childerhose. George Lang; and by election, Principal Grant, S. Houston, James Binnie, H. Gracey. The elders appointed were Messrs. Hudson, Horne, MacIntosh, Hinch, O'Hara, Prof. Dyde, Urquhart, Gillies, Adams.

The reports on the state of religion and on home missions were under consideration as the Presbytery adjourned.

The Weeks' Meetings.

Last evening Rev. W. W. Weeks held another of those deeply interesting services that have been creating so much favorable comment for the past week. His subject was "The relation of the law of God and the grace of God. He showed the law of God to be the schoolmaster to bring man to know of his sinfulness and so teach him to turn to Christ as his Saviour. The law came that sin might abound, but when sin abounded grace much more abounded, from this proving that the grace of God appearing to all men in the person of Christ was what men had to look to for their salvation. The law never saved any man, but turned him from sin to the Lord for salvation.

This evening's meeting will be the last conducted by Mr. Weeks, as he has to leave to fill other engagements.

BELLEVILLE MARKETS.

INTELLIGENCER OFFICE,
Belleville, March 20, 1895.

There is very little grain of any kind being offered here, with prices nominal.

During the week prices of wheat in Chicago have been firm with a better feeling, May wheat having advanced from 52c to 58c, dropping back again a cent, to 57c.

The stock of flour in Montreal is 46,800 bbls. less than a year ago, whilst nearly 100,000 bushels of wheat have been shipped west to Ontario from Montreal, where No. 1 hard spring is quoted at 75c.

Millers in this city have No. 1 hard Manitoba wheat quoted to them at 78c and Midland, equal to 85½c here, which is from 15c to 20c higher than it could be purchased some time since. Provisions in Chicago have been strong, pork having advanced over two dollars per bbl. The firm feeling is reflected here, where live hogs are selling at 4½c, and dressed at 5½c. The warm weather has weakened the price of butter and eggs. Good fresh butter is selling at 17c, and eggs 10c to 11c.

Timothy and clover seeds are very scarce. Dealers having to secure their stock principally abroad.

Mr. Thos. Stewart has a particularly fine stock secured principally abroad. For timothy dealers are paying $2.75 to $3.25; clover, $5.50 to $6.25; alsike, $4.50 to $5, and millet, 50c.

GOOD PROFITS ON APPLES.

The English market has recently proved a profitable one for shippers on good sound Canadian apples, among the latest sales cabled from Liverpool being that of 311 bbls. netting the forwarder $313 in Montreal, or equal to about $4.90 per bbl. There has also been a good demand for Canadian apples from the United States, a Montreal firm having disposed of about 2,000 bbls. at prices ranging from $2.25 to $3.50 per bbl. f. o. b. at Ontario points for shipment to Chicago and other centres in the Western States. Good to choice are selling here at $3.00 to $4.50 in a small jobbing way; but for round lots, of course, lower figures would have to be accepted. Poor to ordinary stock is slow sale.—Montreal Trade Bulletin.

HOP PRODUCTION A LOSING GAME.

Brewers being pretty well all supplied with sufficient Canadian hops to keep them going for the next twelve months at least, it goes without saying that the market is exceptionally dull, with prices in favor of buyers. Still, once in a while, when a very attractive sample is found offering on the market suitable for a special brewing, it is picked up at a very low price. One of these bargains was met with this week, consisting of a few bales of prime Eastern Townships, which was placed at 7½c, showing a loss to the grower of 3c per lb. In New York, however, there has been a little better speculative demand, and quite a few parcels of State hops changed hands there at 8c to 10c.—Montreal Trade Bulletin.

Dangers of Delay.

If we were allowed to look into the future and see the fatal consequences that follow a neglected cold, how differently would our course be; could we realize our danger, how speedily we would seek a cure; but with many it is only when the monster disease has fastened its fangs upon our lungs that we awaken to our folly. What follows a neglected cold? It is not diseases of the throat and lungs, bronchitis, asthma, consumption, and many other diseases of like nature. Is it worse than madness to neglect a cold, and it is folly not to have some good remedy available for its frequent complaint. One of the most efficacious medicines for all diseases of the throat and lungs, is Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup. This medicine is composed of several medicinal herbs, which exert a most wonderful influence in curing consumption and other diseases of the lungs and chest. It promotes a free and easy expectoration, soothes irritation and drives the disease from the system.

CHAPTER III.

I said: "What next?"

"I lost my pluck suddenly. I tried to speak about Home Happiness, but I couldn't. He asked me what he could have the pleasure of doing for me, and I stammered out something about elastic. It was the only thing I could think of. He took me up to a counter with a proud, beautiful girl behind it, and I said: 'Elastic, please.' The girl said: 'How many yards would you require?' I didn't know anything about that, and so I said twopennyworth. Then I thought that seemed rather a poor thing to say to a girl in that position, and so I altered it to sixpennyworth. She said: 'Certainly, and what kind of elastic?' How was I to know that there were two kinds of elastic? However, I said: 'The kind they use for catapults.' She went behind a sort of desk and stopped there patiently for some time. She may have gone there to laugh or she may not. After a few minutes she came back and remarked: 'Elastic you said, I think?' Then she began to measure it out. I took it away in a whitey-brown paper parcel, and everybody stared at me. When I got outside the shop I threw the parcel down on the pavement, in a fit of irritation, I suppose. A boy picked it up and handed it back to me again. Then I went on to the park. I thought I might make some note of the dresses there and also get rid of the parcel. I sat down on a chair, paid my penny and got out my note-book. I made notes of three dresses that I saw. These are the notes:

"THE KIND THEY USE FOR CATAPULTS."

"It struck me then that I was not getting enough detail. I had only jotted down the general effect. A woman was sitting opposite me with a good many things on; so I began to sketch them. I I was absorbed in my sketching, but I remember that I did have a shadowy idea that the woman was beginning to look uneasy. Presently she got up. It was out of sheer absentmindedness (I was only thinking of the sketch) that I said to her: 'Sit down again. I've not done with you yet.' A policeman was passing near, and she went to speak to him."

"Well?"

"Oh, I didn't stop. There didn't seem to be anything to stop for. I was out of the park and into a hansom before the woman had finished with the policeman. I told the man to drive fast to Charing Cross. In my hurry and confusion I had forgotten to leave the elastic behind me, and when I had paid the cabman I found that I was still grasping the parcel in my hand. That didn't matter. I left the elastic in a flower-pot at a restaurant where I lunched."

"But this thirteenth column. What have you done towards it?"

"I've read the fashion papers, but that's about all. Since luncheon I've been doing nothing but stare into shop windows. They muddled my head more than you can possibly understand, and they caused in addition a distinct amount of nervous irritation. Perhaps you noticed it when you met me just now."

A POLICEMAN WAS PASSING NEAR AND SHE WENT TO SPEAK TO HIM.

"Look here," I said, "you'd better give up the whole thing. You can't possibly do this column, and you'd better write to your editor and say so."

He would not take my advice.

"A good all-round journalist can write an article on anything," he said obstinately. "I'm going off to write my article now—this minute."

"But do be reasonable," I said. "Why attempt the impossible?"

"It's not impossible," he answered, as he picked up his hat. "Observation is no good. I've found that out. Study is also no good. The male man can find out nothing about the female fashions in those ways. But I have just thought of a third course—thought of it while I was talking to you—and I am now going to try it." He put on his hat. "On the whole," he added, "it is perhaps as well that you refused to smash that window for me. You may have been right; and I daresay I spoke too harshly when I said that you were respectable. I was much worried at the time, and you must make allowances. I shall bring you the article to look at to-night. Au revoir."

He did bring me the article, and it was the last time that I ever saw Charles Backerton Salemaker. Possibly, as he said in a subsequent letter, I shall never see him again. That night he looked radiant, triumphant, happy in the pride of achievement. He brought with him several typewritten sheets. They were the article in question, which he had just completed.

"First of all," he said, "let me explain the theory on which the article is written. The novelist works both from observation and imagination. He overhears some chance remark in the street, and from that with the help of imagination he constructs a character—even an entire novel. I've worked on the same lines. I've taken as my starting-point the little that I remember of the fashion papers and the shop windows, and I've allowed my imagination to play all around it."

He began to read the first sheet. It was to the effect that the season would soon be at an end, and that the autumn would follow with its beautiful foliage, and subsequently he and other high bred English girls would give themselves up to a round of country-house visiting.

"That's all very very well," I observed, "but it's not fashions."

"No; that's the introduction."

"Well, cut the introduction."

He turned over a few sheets and read as follows:

"'In the meantime the park every Sunday looks very gay and smart. One of the best dressed women that I have seen there lately is unquestionably Lady B. She wore a coat and skirt of Irish guipure of a dull bronze color, with tabs of eau-de-nil silk bordered with passementerie. The same color was repeated in the accordion-plaiting on the pom-pom, and the whole was surmounted by a hat of vieux rose surah, trimmed with skunk.' What do you think of that?"

"I must confess that it sounds just like the real thing."

"Quite so. And it's all imagination. Here's another bit: 'An equally tasteful confection was worn by a lady of a rather more matronly type. The skirt, cut after the present approved fashion, was of petunia face cloth, shot with bombazine; this was suitably allied with a cape of Roman satin of a somewhat deeper tinge, edged with brown Siberian dachshund, and having a deep empire collar of amber velvet cut V-shape.'"

I did not care to hear any more. I thought then, and still think, that it sounded all right. Apparently it was not all right, as the following extract from a letter I received from Salemaker two days later will show:

"You will never see me again. It is all over. The editor apparently showed my copy to his wife, and has written to ask me what I mean by sending a cowardly and offensive parody in place of the work that he ordered. He has told me to call and, if possible, explain. I shall not do so. I do not think that I can look him, or anybody else, in the face again. I feel that I am rightly punished for my presumption. It was wrong of me, in my pride in my own versatility, to have undertaken that thirteenth column. Everything is against me now. I went into a restaurant the other day, and there was Miss Catling lurking behind some tea and a large bun. I dashed out, jumped on to a 'bus, and found that the woman whose clothes I had so mistakingly attempted to sketch in the park was sitting opposite to me. I cannot escape from my unspeakable shame. Fate reaches out a long arm of coincidence and collars me at every turn. That attempt to write the thirteenth column seems to have swelled up and filled my entire life. Before the sun has set I shall probably find myself in the same railway carriage with the proud girl who sold me so much elastic. But I must risk that. England has become too small for me, and I must go."

The remainder of the letter was purely personal. That week Home Happiness announced that its fashion article was unavoidably crowded out, but would appear in the next number. There never was a next number. In the following week the whole of Home Happiness was crowded out, and it never appeared again.

Meanwhile the friends and relations of Charles Backerton Salemaker are getting very anxious, and any information as to his whereabouts would be thankfully received.

To Rival the Waldorf.

Among the many interesting designs at the tenth annual exhibition of the architectural league now being held at the fine arts building, is the original design for the new Astor hotel to be built at the corner of Thirty-fourth street and Fifth avenue, adjoining the hotel Waldorf. The design has not been accepted by the millionaire landlord, owing it is said to the tower in the center, which he has requested the architect to remove.

John Jacob Astor's idea is to have the greatest and grandest hotel in the world. It is to be located on the same block with William Waldorf Astor's hostelry, The Waldorf. The interior decorations are ordered to surpass those ot any structure now in existence, and plans for the accommodation and entertainment of several parties at one time, without any clash are also a feature of the construction of the new building.

The hotel will front on Thirty-Fourth street and will have a depth of 350 feet on that street. The main dining-room will front on Fifth avenue and will have a seating capacity for nearly 1,000 guests. The large ball-room will be on the second floor on the Thirty-fourth street side. In addition there will be several smaller ball, reception and assembly rooms and private dining-rooms. The smoking-room, lounging rooms and cafe will be on the first floor. In the rear of the hotel about 100 rooms will be specially fitted up for the exclusive use of bachelors, for which there is a great demand.—New York Evening World.

Patti as a Child.

One day I was sitting on our front stoop with my big wax doll in my arms. I was only allowed to have her to play with when I had been very good indeed, and she was the biggest, most beautiful doll in the neighborhood, or that I had ever seen, even in shop windows. As I sat there Adelina came toward me with her doll in her arms. She stopped and said, show me your dolly." I held her up and expatiated upon her beauties. I confess now that I felt a keen and wicked satisfaction that her doll had only a plaster head, and I knew, from sad experience, that it was the kind that got grimy and had to be washed off with sweet oil occasionally, and very often had a cracked head, and that she was altogether of an inferior class from my dolly. "She's pretty, isn't she?" said Adelina. "She beautiful," I said, hugging my treasure, for she was my very own child to me. "How much did she cost," said Adelina, "I don't know," I said, "a lady sent her to me from London. See, her eyes open and shut," and I gave a vigorous yank to the long wire which was concealed under her petticoats. "Show me how her eyes go," said Adelina. And after opening and shutting those very inexpressive black eyes several times she handed her back to me and said, "I shall have one like her to-night." My own eyes opened wide at this, and I said, "How will you get her?" "Oh, if Max don't give her to me quick I'll scream."—Katherine B. Foot, in Ladies' Home Journal.

The Chinese Servant.

"I have had a good deal of experience with Chinese labor," said Judge Worden of Denver, "and my belief is that the Chinese make the best servants in the world. They will do just what you tell them to and in the way that you tell them to do it. A combination of three virtues constitutes their principal fault—they are industrious, obedient and frugal. Hence they will do more work, do it more willingly, do it cheaper, and save more money than any other race of people. The difference in wages is not so great as is generally represented, and the coolies on the fruit farms in southern California, where I have seen more of them than any place else, are paid as well as similar labor is elsewhere. As house servants they are par excellence. They will obey the rules of the household, and do not draw the lines as to what their duties shall or shall not be. They can be relied upon, and are not given to changing employers."

Irish Viceroys are stripped of their sovereign attributes so soon as they reach English waters. The following story is told of Lord Houghton and a lady with whom he was acquainted. They both found themselves on board the Holyhead packet. During the voyage from Ireland the lady treated the Viceroy with ceremonious respect. So soon, however, as the packet entered Holyhead harbor she said to him: "Now, Bobby, you are no longer a Viceroy, so take my bag and make yourself useful."—London Truth.

THE change from the extremely delicate coloring of the past few years with such monotonous effects, to the stronger, richer colorings of to-day, is not so much a change in fashion as an improvement in taste. When a decorator was timid or inartistic, he avoided strong colors as a child avoids the fire. He had little or no conception of how to use them; hence he remained in the cold montony of whites and grays. If now and again he tentatively ventured in colors, the results were so awful that he would shrink in horror from another such attempt. Some bolder and more callous spirits made picturesque and kaleidoscopic effects which they urged upon innocent and amiable people as artistic; but that sunflower æstheticism did not last. It had the merit of garish effect or of artistic sensationalism only. It could not last. Good taste, like good sense, will always prevail. As a sort of protest against the sunflower sensationalism, the dainty period of creamy-white timidity came into vogue. Many decorators knew that oddities of form and color could not be used in marble halls and maidens' boudoirs, but they did not have the independence to risk an open defiance of the prevalent style. They found a sort of refuge under "A Milk White Flag" of nonentity. The wall-paper manufacturers assumed the risk of putting colors into their papers for this season. The results are beautiful in the products and profitable to the consumer. Strong, rich colors are precisely what the people were waiting for; employed judiciously, they are precisely what they should have. This is an era of strong colors. It is also an era of good taste. It is the period of the golden mean between the eccentricities of the sunflower sensationalism, of riotous vulgarity, and the dreary daintiness of whitey timidity. It is not only philosophic to use strong colors, but it is artistic, æsthetic, and delightful—the climax of all things true, good, and beautiful.

PARLIAMENT CALLED.

The House Summoned to Meet On April 18.

TEXT OF THE REMEDIAL ORDER

Minute of the Council Which is the Basis of the Remedial Order—The Order Signed and Forwarded to Lieutenant-Governor Schultz.

Ottawa, March 21.—Parliament is to meet on Thursday, April 18, that is the Thursday after the Easter holidays. This will undoubtedly be news to your readers, as they have been led to suppose that a dissolution was impending. Circumstances have happened, however, within the last day or so which led the Government to-day to reach the conclusion mentioned.

This afternoon, in the presence of his Ministers, Lord Aberdeen signed the Remedial Order upon Manitoba, and immediately this had been done the decision was reached to call Parliament together. When Sir Mackenzie Bowell vouchsafed this information to your correspondent he seemed in high spirits, but offered no reason for the change in the position of affairs. In official circles it is said the object which the Government has in calling Parliament together is that the country may have a better opportunity of understanding the terms of the Remedial Order. The more it is examined and studied the more will people realize the fairness of the declaration in favor of justice to the Catholic minority of Manitoba. The Remedial Order was mailed to Lieutenant-Governor Schultz to-night.

The Cabinet met at 3 o'clock, all the Ministers being present except Sir Frank Smith and Mr. Ferguson. His Excellency the Governor-General was also present.

The minute of Council on which the Remedial Order is based is a lengthy document, comprising the entire history of the case, from the passage of the Acts by the Legislature of Manitoba in 1890, at the instigation of the Greenway Government, the petitions for redress, the hearing before the Privy Council, its subsequent reference to the Supreme Court, the appeal to England, and finally the hearing before the Privy Council of Canada two weeks ago. Having recited these facts, the minute proceeds: The committee therefore recommends that the said appeal be allowed and that Your Excellency in Council do adjudge and decide that by two acts passed by the Legislature of Manitoba on the first day of May, 1890, intituled respectively, "An Act Respecting the Department of Education" and an "Act Respecting Public Schools," the rights and privileges of the Roman Catholic minority of the said province in relation to education, prior to May 1, 1890, have been affected by depriving the Roman Catholic minority of the following rights and privileges, which previous to and until May 1, 1890, such minority had, viz.:

(a) The right to build, maintain, equip, manage, conduct and support Roman Catholic schools in manner provided for by said statutes, which were repealed by the two acts of 1890 aforesaid;

(b) The right to share proportionately in any grant made out of public funds for purposes of education;

(c) The right of exemption of such Roman Catholics as contribute to Roman Catholic schools from all payment or contribution to support of any other schools;

And the committee also recommends that your Excellency-in-Council do further declare and decide that for the due execution of the provisions of section 22 of the Manitoba Act it seems requisite that the system of education embodied in the two acts of 1890 aforesaid should be supplemented by a provincial act or acts which would restore to the Roman Catholic minority the said rights and privileges, of which such minority has been so deprived as aforesaid and which would modify the acts of 1890 so far, and so far only, as may be necessary to give effect to the provisions restoring the rights and privileges in paragraphs (a), (b) and (c) hereinbefore mentioned.

The committee desires to add that: Their lordships of the Judicial Committee state in their judgment: Bearing in mind the circumstances which existed in 1870, it does not appear to their lordships an extravagant notion that in creating a legislature for the province, with limited powers, it should have been thought expedient in case either Catholics or Protestants became preponderant and rights which had come into existence under different circumstances were interfered with, to give the Dominion Parliament power to legislate upon matters of education, so far as was necessary to protect the Protestant or Catholic minority as the case may be.

In the opinion of the committee, the Manitoba Act, as construed with regard to the present case by the Judicial Committee of Her Majesty's Privy Council, so clearly points to a duty devolving upon Your Excellency in Council that no course is open, consistent with both the letter and the spirit of the constitution, other than that recommended. To dismiss this appeal or grant a smaller measure of relief would be not only to deny to the Roman Catholic minority rights substantially guaranteed to them under the constitution of Canada, but in truth such a course might involve a declaration on the part of Your Excellency in Council that this provision of the constitution for the protection of the rights of certain of Her Majesty's subjects in Manitoba should not in any case be acted upon, and, further, the committee do not perceive upon what principle consistent with a declaration that effect is not to be given to this appeal, the Protestant or Roman Catholic minority in Quebec or Ontario could make corresponding provision of section 93 of the British North America Act in case of any provincial act or decision affecting their rights or privileges.

If Your Excellency should see fit to approve of the foregoing recommendation the committee desires to state that it follows that refusal or neglect on the part of the Legislature of Manitoba to enact remedial legislation, which to Your Excellency in Council seems requisite, will confer upon Parliament authority to pass such a law. In this connection it was urged by counsel on behalf of the province that should Parliament legislate under these circumstances, its enactment would be absolute and irrevocable so far as both parties, both Parliament and Provincial Legislature, are concerned.

Your committee, without necessarily adopting this view, observes that section 22 of the Manitoba Act may admit of that construction. The committee therefore, recommend that the Provincial Legislature be requested to consider whether its action upon the decision of Your Excellency in Council should be permitted to be such as, while refusing to redress a grievance which the highest court in the Empire has declared to exist, may compel Parliament to give relief of which, under the constitution, the Provincial Legislature is the proper and primary source, thereby, according to this view, permanently divesting itself in a very large measure of its authority, and so establishing in the province an educational system which, no matter what changes may take place in the circumstances of the country, or views of the people, cannot be altered or repealed by any legislative body in Canada.

Your committee further, and for reasons hereinbefore stated, recommend that if Your Excellency in Council should be pleased to approve of this report, Your Excellency in Council do make an order in the premises, in the form and to the effect set forth in a draft order hereunto annexed, and that a copy of this report and of said order be transmitted to His Honor the Lieutenant-Governor of Manitoba for his information and that of his Government and of the Provincial Legislature; also that a copy of this report and of said order be transmitted to Mr. Ewart, Q.C., of Winnipeg, as representing the Roman Catholic minority of Her Majesty's subjects in Manitoba.

Respectfully submitted.

Text of the Remedial Order.

At the Government House at Ottawa, Thursday, the 21st day of March, 1895. Present, His Excellency the Governor-General-in-Council. Whereas, on the 26th of November, 1892, a petition by way of appeal under the provision of section 22 of chapter 3 of the acts of the Parliament of Canada, passed in the 33rd year of Her Majesty's reign, and intituled "An act to amend and continue the act 32-33 Victoria, chapter 3, and to establish and provide for the government of the Province of Manitoba" (commonly called "the Manitoba Act"), and continued by "The British North America Act of 1871," was presented to His Excellency the Governor-General of Canada-in-Council by and on behalf of the Roman Catholic minority of Her Majesty's subjects in the Province of Manitoba, passed after the Union, and by an act passed by the said Legislature in the 44th year of Her Majesty's reign, chapter 4, which may be cited as "The Manitoba School Act," and by the acts amending the same the Roman Catholic minority of Her Majesty's subjects in Manitoba acquired the rights and privileges in relation to education thereby conferred upon them, including the right to build, maintain, equip, manage, conduct and support Roman Catholic schools in the manner provided by the said statutes, the right to a proportionate share of any grant made out of the public funds for the purpose of education, and the right of exemption of such members of the Roman Catholic Church as contribute to such Roman Catholic schools from all payments or contributions to the support of any other schools.

That subsequently in the 53rd year of Her Majesty's reign two statutes were passed by the Legislature of the Province of Manitoba relating to education, which statutes came into force on the first day of May, 1890, and are intituled respectively, "An Act respecting the Department of Education" and "An Act respecting public schools," and that the effect of the two last-named statutes was to repeal the previous acts of the Province of Manitoba in relation to education and to deprive the Roman Catholic minority of the rights and privileges which it had acquired under such previous statutes; and by the said petition the said Roman Catholic minority prayed among other things that it might be declared that the said last-mentioned acts did affect the rights and privileges of the said Roman Catholic minority of the Queen's subjects in relation to education.

That it might be declared that, to His Excellency the Governor-General in Council, it seems requisite that the provisions of the statutes in force in the Province of Manitoba, prior to the passage of the said acts, should be re-enacted in so far at least as may be necessary to secure to the Roman Catholics in the said province the right to build, maintain, equip, manage, conduct and support their schools in the manner provided for by said statutes, to secure to them their proportionate share of any grant made out of the public funds for the purposes of education, and to relieve such members of the Roman Catholic Church as contribute to such Roman Catholic schools from all payment or contribution to the support of any other schools; or that the said acts of 1890 should be so modified or amended as to effect such purposes. And that such further or other declaration or order might be made as to His Excellency the Governor-General in Council should under the circumstances seem proper and that such directions might be given, provisions made and all things done in the premises for purpose of affording relief to the said Roman Catholic minority in the said province as to His Excellency in Council might seem meet.

And whereas the 26th day of February, 1895, having been appointed for the hearing of the said appeal and the same coming on to be heard on that day and on the 5th, 6th and 7th days of March, 1895, in the presence of counsel for the petitioners (the said Roman Catholic minority of Her Majesty's subjects in the Province of Manitoba), and as well for the Province of Manitoba, upon reading the said petition and the statutes therein referred to and upon hearing what was alleged by counsel on both sides His Excellency the Governor-General in Council was pleased to order and adjudge and it is hereby ordered and adjudged that the said appeal be and the same is hereby allowed in so far as it relates to rights acquired by the said Roman Catholic minority, under legislation of the Province of Manitoba, passed subsequent to the union of that province with the Dominion of Canada, and His Excellency the Governor-General in Council was pleased to adjudge and declare, and it is hereby adjudged and declared, that by the two acts passed by the Legislature of the Province of Manitoba on May 1, 1890, intituled respectively "An Act respecting the Department of Education," and "An Act respecting Public Schools," the rights and privileges of the Roman Catholic minority of the said province in relatrion to education prior to May 1, 1890, have been affected by depriving the Roman Catholic minority of the following rights and privileges, which previous to and until May 1, 1890, such minority had, viz.:

a The right to build, to maintain, equip, manage, conduct and support Roman Catholic schools in the manner provided for by the said statutes, which were repealed by the two acts of 1890 aforesaid.

b The right to share propportionately in any grant made out of the public funds for the purpose of education.

c The right of exemption of such Roman Catholic schools from all payment or contribution to the support of any other schools.

And His Excellency the Governor-General in Council was further pleased to declare and decide, and it is hereby declared that it seems requisite that the system of education embodied in the two acts of 1890 aforesaid, shall be supplemented by a provincial act or acts which will restore to the Roman Catholic minority the said rights and privileges of which such minority has been so deprived as aforesaid, and which will modify the said acts of 1890, in so far, and so far only, as may be necessary to give effect to the provisions restoring the rights and privileges in paragraphs (a), (b) and (c) hereinbefore mentioned.

Whereof the Lieutenant-Governor of the Province of Manitoba for the time being and the Legislature of the said province and all persons whom it may concern, are to take notice and govern themselves accordingly.

(Signed) JOHN J. McGEE,
Clerk of the Privy Council.

EXCITEMENT IN WINNIPEG.

A Mass Meeting To Be Held To Denounce Interference.

Winnipeg, March 22.—The Remedial Order on the school case is still the chief topic of conversation here, and the order is awaited with much anxiety. It is understood that the Provincial Legislature will lose no time in replying to the order. The belief is general that Premier Greenway will reject the order and affirm that his Government will resist any attempt to interfere with the schools, and will then immediately dissolve and bring on the provincial general elections.

The Tribune, the organ of the Greenway Government, says to-night that a monster mass meeting will be held on receipt of the Remedial Order from Ottawa, at which resolutions will be passed condemning the Government's action and declaring that no interference will be tolerated. Many prominent public men here, however, are refusing to express any opinion until the contents of the Remedial Order are known.

The Conservative convention for East Assiniboia held at White Wood yesterday resulted in the turning down of McDonald, the present member. McCurdy, barrister of Moosomin, was chosen candidate.

F. W. Haultain, Premier of the Northwest Territories, has been chosen Conservative candidate for Alberta.

Charles Braithwaite, president of the Patrons in Manitoba and Patron candidate for the Macdonald constituency, has stirred up a row by declaring in a public address that he "considered the officers of the volunteer forces a lot of overpaid cowards, who would not be seen for dust if the enemy appeared."

BRITAIN AND ARMENIA.

The Government Questioned As To Its Co Operation in Aiding Suppression of the Atrocities.

London, March 21.—In the House of Commons to-day Mr. Charles Ernest Schwann, advanced Liberal member for the North Division of Manchester, asked if the Government would co-operate with Russia and France in bringing to an end the barbarous misdeeds perpetrated in Armenia by agents of the Porte. Sir Edward Grey, Under Foreign Secretary, replied that the object desired would not be attained by the raising of such questions. Already, he added, several representations had been made to the Porte regarding cases of hardships and ill-treatment, which had been brought to the attention of the British authorities.

James F. Hogan (Anti-Parnellite), member for the Middle Division of Tipperary, asked the Government what truth there was in the statement made in one of the last letters of the late Robert Louis Stevenson that ex-King Mataafa of Samoa, after submitting to the authorities, had been brought to Apia on board a British ship, the captain of which, pointing to the British flag, declared that he would be safe thereunder. Notwithstanding this assurance, according to Mr. Stevenson, Mataafa was sent to the Marshall Island.

Sir Edward Grey said that the captain of the British ship had only promised Mataafa that his life would be safe, and had not taken any part in his deportation. The latest advices from Samoa, Sir Edward said, conveyed the information that all of the deported chiefs were well treated, and that arrangements had been made for their families to join them.

Librarian Lancefield Scores Petitioner Conway in Good Style.

London, March 21.—The Times will publish to-morrow a letter from Mr. Lancefield, who has charge of the Public Library in Hamilton, Ont. He writes under the date of March 9. He replies to the letter which Chairman Conway of the Committee of the Society of Authors wrote to The Times in February, denouncing the Canadian Copyright. Mr. Lancefield says: "I suggest that our English friends be perfectly fair in the statements they make to the press in this controversy. When Mr. Conway says Canadian reprints will flood the United States market and calls for the signature of the petition largely on that account, it is an open question whether every signature secured is not secured under false pretences."

The writer cites instances to prove that reprints cannot and never were intended to flood the United States market.

"Canadians resent and protest," he says, "against such a misleading statement, as it places their case in a false light."

G.T.R Shareholders Tired of Tyler.

London, March 21.—A conference of Grand Trunk bondholders was held to-day, with Mr. Gladstone presiding. It was resolved that "since Sir Henry Tyler's management had brought the company into a disastrous position, and owing to the suppression of important matters which ought to have been communicated to the shareholders, confidence could not longer be placed in his management." The meeting pledged itself to endeavor to secure a change. A committee was formed to notify the shareholders and obtain their opinion for the next semi-annual meeting.

ANOTHER CHURCH BURNED.

The First Methodist Church in St. Th oma Destroyed—Loss Fully $25,000.

St. Thomas, Ont., March 22.—Yesterday the First Methodist Church, situated on the corner of St. George and Surtis-streets, was burned to the ground. The building was the finest Methodist church in the city and cost $25,000, and was re-beautified two years ago at a cost of $5000. The fire is suppposed to have originated in one of the furnaces. The loss is estimated at fully $25,000. The building was insured for $15,000. The pastor is Rev. James Hannon, D.D., formerly of Queen's-avenue, London, which church was also recently destroyed.

STRUNG UP AND BEATEN.

Incredible Cruelty of Parents to Their 13-Year-Old Girl.

Hepworth, Ont., March 21.—Information was laid yesterday before P. Anderson, J.P., Amabel, against T. W. Henderson and his wife for maltreating their daughter, a child 13 years of age. It appears from the information laid that the accused have been in the habit of tying the child's hands and suspending her from a beam overhead and brutally beating her with a black snake whip and a leather strap, to which a buckle is attached.

The child is one mass of bruises and partly-healed sores from the severe beatings she has received. The whole community is in a red-hot state and lynching is freely talked of.

Clarence Sentenced For Life, His Wife To Twenty Years.

Buffalo, March 22.—Clarence Robinson has been found guilty of murder in the second degree, and Sadie Robinson of manslaughter in the first degree.

PATRONS AND PASSES.

A Bill To Make Their Use a Misdemeanor.

THE PARTY RETURN ALL PASSES

The Medical Profession Up in Arms Against the Proposed Patron Medical Bill—Dr. Baxter Introduced to the House—Woman Barristers.

Toronto, March 22.—The Patrons in the Local Legislature will return all the railroad passes which they have received from the companies as members of the Ontario Assembly. The party decided upon this action in caucus yesterday. Phillips Thompson, the sessional writer allotted to the party as secretary, was instructed to collect the passes and give a receipt to each member for the same. These receipts are treasured by the members and when spoken to on the question of passes they show them with pride. The bill respecting this matter has been finally decided upon, and it will be introduced in a few days. It will provide that it shall be a breach of the Independence of Parliament Act for any member of the Legislature to accept a pass from any railroad company on account of his election to the Assembly. This rule is also to be made to apply to cheap rates. Mr. Pardo raised an objection. This gentleman says he has for a long time been in possession of passes in connection with his business and he absolutely refused to give this up. To meet this difficulty the Patron bill will allow members to retain passes that they have held prior to their election.

When the Patron medical bill comes up for discussion there will be a hard fight. Professional men will oppose it tooth and nail, while with equal ardor the Patrons will press for legislation.

Dr. Ryerson has issued a strong appeal to the profession in the columns of The Medical Review to oppose the passing of the measure, which, he says, "seriously threatens" their rights. In the course of his article, he says: "The Medical Act, which has been built up for the protection of the public, is threatened with destruction. The bill, if it should come into force, means practically free trade in medicine. It means a retrogression to a state compared with which the condition of the profession, prior to 1850, was order itself. It means that the competition and pressure of to-day will, if this bill becomes law, be redoubled. A calling which has at all times required much self-sacrifice on the part of its practitioners will cease to return an income for the time and labor expended."

The session yesterday was devoted to Government orders and the estimates, but nothing of a very interesting nature occurred.

Dr. Baxter was introduced to the House by Sir Oliver Mowat and Mr. Gibson of Huron, and he took his seat as member for Haldimand amid loud applause, in which both the Government and Opposition joined. The Patrons remained perfectly silent.

Orders in Council were ratified bringing the following institutions under the Charity Aid Act: General Hospital, Sudbury Rescue Home, and Children's Shelter, Ottawa, and the Haven and Prison Gate Mission, Toronto.

The House went into committee on and reported the Attorney-General's bill relating to leases, sales and mortgages of settled estates. The law in this country is similar to that introduced in England in 1865. Important amendments have been made in the English law, however, rendering it simpler and better. The object of the new bill is to modify the existing law in Canada and make it more applicable to present circumstances.

The House in committee also reported Sir Oliver's bills respecting dower in mortgaged and other property, and convictions under municipal bylaws.

Mr. Gibson's bill for the further protection of children and Mr. Hardy's respecting the election laws were read a second time.

A bill introduced by Hon. Mr. Ross to amend the Pharmacy Act was read a first time. The bill provides for a continuation indefinitely of the present law as to the sale of drugs.

Mr. Wood's bill, allowing women to practice as barristers and plead in the courts, was read a first time.

Mr. Chapple introduced a bill to amend the Assessment Act, in order to fix the value that farm lands shall be assessed at within a town or city. The present act provides that these lands shall be assessed as "farm lands" where they are in plots of five acres and over, but makes no provision as to value. The new bill intends to remedy this by having them assessed, as nearly as may be under the circumstances, as lands in the adjacent municipalities are assessed.

The House went into Committee of Supply at 5 o'clock.

Replying to Mr. Howland, Mr. Harty stated that negotiations were under way with the city authorities to acquire possession of the land in front of the buildings to the Macdonald monument. Should this arrangement be made he intended recommending the appointment of a landscape gardener to lay out and take charge of the grounds.

On the item of $96,920 for colonization roads, Mr. Marter asked if there was any truth in the report that a certain lumber firm in the north had for some time systematically defrauded the Government, and whether an investigation was being made. Mr. Hardy replied that a prima facie case had been shown to exist and an investigation was in progress, but the firm in question had made a deposit of $5000 to protect the Government in the meantime. Asked who was the ranger, Mr. Hardy answered: "It is in the Parry Sound District."

The House adjourned at 9.40.

A good many personalities were introduced into the proceedings of the Public Accounts Committee yesterday. Bursar James Cochrane of Mimico Asylum was the witness. He stated that he could have saved 50 to 75 cents per barrel on flour bought if he had been allowed to purchase it himself instead of by tender. There was a breezy ten minutes when Mr. Crawford took him in hand. "How long were you in the grocery business?" asked Mr. Crawford. "Forty years," replied the witness.

"How did you stand at the end of that time?" was the next question. Witness answered, "I was worth $100,000, but I lost my money in the manufacture of machinery."

Mr. Crawford's following remark caused a hubbub. "Then," said he, "after 40 years in business you are an admitted failure?" Every Liberal protested and words were high. The bursar wanted to make a statement and give references as to his business qualifications; but Mr. Crawford protested that he did not want to cast any opprobrium upon the witness.

Scarcely had this "scene" subsided when another cropped up. When Col. Matheson was cross-examining witness, Mr. Garrow interpolated something, whereupon Mr. Matheson alluded to him as "Counsel for the Government." "I think you have had long experience to venture upon such a remark as that," retorted Mr. Garrow, and again there was much cross-talking. Finally the Colonel withdrew his remark.

When the bills from municipalities asking for exemption from the provisions of the act prohibiting the granting of bonuses to manufacturers come before the House they will, in all probability, give rise to considerable discussion. Yesterday the Private Bills Committee had under consideration a bill in which the town of Gananoque sought permission either to grant a bonus of $10,000 to "The Thousand Island Carriage Company," or to guarantee the interest upon a loan of that amount. Those asking for this legislation do so on the ground that an industry which formerly existed in the town had been drawn away to Brockville by the granting of a bonus of $50,000. It was agreed to report the bill; but Hon. Mr. Gibson complained of the frequency of such requests. The bill of the Hamilton Iron and Steel Company was passed with the exception of the clause granting powers of expropriation. The company will be allowed to construct a tramway from their smelting works to an adjacent limestone quarry. The bill respecting the Stormont Electric Light and Power Company, who are asking for permission to extend their charter to enable them to supply gas and water as well as electricity, was also reported.

The Railway Committee have appointed Hon. E. H. Bronson to the chair. Two bills have been fixed for next Tuesday, that concerning the Hamilton Electric Radial Railway and the act respecting the Irondale and Bancroft Railway.

RAINY RIVER GOLD FIELDS

Rich Beyond the Wildest Dreams of the Prospectors.

Chicago, March 22.—John J. Macintyre of Niagara Falls and W. B. Pelton of Appleton, Wis., capitalists, and Dr. A. J. Thibodeau of Baker City, Oregon, a mining expert, are at the Sherman House, fresh from the new gold region about Rainy Lake, Ontario, They brought with them six trunks full of gold-bearing rocks, as samples of a three weeks' prospecting, and the deeds to $250,000 worth of property bought in the region.

Messrs. Pelton and Macintyre represent a syndicate which purposes to work the land for all the gold there is in it.

Dr. Thibodeau, speaking of the Rainy Lake region, said: "The most sanguine gold prospector in the country would not believe the true story of the region. When I was informed of the character of the discovery made a year ago, I smiled at the credulity of the people who were making such extravagant claims. After three weeks of prospecting, I must confess that the whole story has not been told. Never in my 35 years' experience as a gold mining engineer have I seen such a find.

"The territory in which the gold exists is about 40 miles north of Itasca County, Minn.

"It is the most picturesque spot on the continent. It consists of a number of lakes, with timbered islands, more numerous than the Thousand Islands of the St. Lawrence. The banks and lakes and the islets are precipitous, rising from 35 to 300 feet. All the region is underlaid with granite and slate. The gold veins run through both. We made dozens of blasts at different points, and all the rock we dislodged was full of free gold."

The land is in the hands of private individuals, and the three men say there will not be the rush to the fields that has marked similar finds, on account of private ownership of the lands.

Liberator Society Officers Committed.

London, March 21.—Six weeks ago summonses were issued for Francis M. Coldwell, M.P., Henry Grenville Wright, the solicitor, who is now in prison for forgery in connection with the Liberator Building Society funds, Messrs. Dibley and Brock, directors of the society, and Mr. Theobald, the auditor of the concern, upon accusations of conspiracy and fraud. To-day the magistrate who issued the summonses fully committed the accused for trial, and fixed their bail at £4000 each.

I immediately sent (fifty miles) and purchased four bottles, and with only two applications I was able to get around, and although I have not used one bottle, I am nearly well. The other three bottles I gave around to my neighbors, and I have had so many calls for more, that I feel bound to relieve the afflicted by writing to you for a supply."

BELLEVILLE, FRIDAY, MAR. 22.

A SESSION TO BE HELD.

After, no doubt, giving due consideration to all the reasons for and against another session of Parliament previous to a general election, the Government have decided to summon Parliament for the 18th of April, This decision will be satisfactory to the country, as there are, no doubt, subjects upon which legislation is desirable at an early date.

The general impression is that the session will be a short one, and that the election will be held within as brief a period as possible after its close.

QUERY.

How will it help the Canadian farmer to admit Yankee wheat, oats, pork and other products of the farm, under Mr. Laurier's policy of "Free Trade as it is in England ?"

The Grit campaign shouters answer that our neighbors will reciprocate.

This is a mere assumption, and a false one, as is shown by the fact that, although following the abrogation of the reciprocity treaty in 1866, our market was left open to the farmers products, of the United States, excepting cheese, yet the rulers of that country refused to give us reciprocity.

It does not seem likely that the United States will again enter into a treaty of reciprocity with Canada, but it is apparent to the meanest comprehension that we will never get it unless we have some favor to give in return, in the form of taking off customs duties on their products.

THE MARKET QUESTION.

The Patrons want to abolish market fees on butter, eggs and poultry, and prevent the imposition of fees on farmers selling from door to door. This would be all very well if the County Councils purchased the toll-roads and made them free.—Ottawa Citizen.

Not so, friend Citizen. In this County the roads have been free of tolls for thirty-five years, Belleville giving $20,000 towards the freeing of the roads. Moreover, the city has spent many thousands of dollars in providing market buildings and a market ground for public use, and many more thousands in their maintenance. That the vendors of produce, &c., in this city wish to avail themselves of the accommodations furnished them at the expense of the tax-payers of Belleville, is evidenced by the small falling off in the receipts since the law permitting peddling about the streets beyond a certain distance from the market was enacted.

So far as we can learn, the people who sell their wares upon the local market are well satisfied to pay the small fee exacted, in return for the conveniences and comforts of the market. It must, therefore, be some busybody who is moving in this matter, and we hope that he will receive the treatment usually accorded to those who thrust their noses into other people's business.

Should the attempt to abolish market fees, as above specified, be successful, the cities might abolish their markets, and in such case those who have stuff to sell would lose very much more in money than the market fees, by the depreciation in prices caused by the lessening of competition, and would, as well, suffer in person by the lack of a comfortable place of business in the extreme cold of winter and the glowing heat of summer.

It will, therefore, be true wisdom on the part of the Legislature, to "go slow" in this matter.

EDITORIAL BREVITIES.

The trouble with the National Policy is that it has made a great many people poor. —Globe.

Whom ? Is the general condition of the people worse to-day than it was in 1878 ? asks the Independent Toronto Star.

Are there more poor people ; Do not the people as a whole enjoy more comforts, more luxuries than they did 20 years ago ? The Globe cannot prove its statement, but it should be aware that the present depression is due to the hard times which are felt all over the world, and nowhere less they are in Canada.

Among the signs of the times the Ottawa Citizen notes the following : "Tarte has declined to contest Laval ; Mr. Geoffrion will not face the music in Vercheres ; Hon. A. G. Jones has refused a nomination in Halifax ; Hon. L. H. Davies has moved out of Queen's county into what he considers a softer seat ; Mr. Fielding will not enter Dominion politics, and prominent Liberals like Mr. A. F. McIntyre, of Ottawa, Mr. Cameron, in the Eastern Townships, and Mr. Gibson, in New Brunswick, are leaving the Opposition." It should also be noted, adds the Mail and Empire, that Mr. Laurier, in order to be sure of securing a seat in the House, will run in several constituencies, and that Sir Richard narrowly escaped losing the nomination in the constituency that he has represented for so many years.

Floor Covering From Old Footgear.

A new use has been found, it is said, for old boots and shoes. This is how they are treated in the process of conversion into a novel kind of house carpet.

The shoes are thrown promiscuously into an immense tank, into which steam and dissolving compounds are run, thereby causing the old shoes to take a thick liquid form. Certain proportions of tallow, borax and glue are then introduced, and the pulp is run into moulds.

The moulds are shaped after the plan of a regular sand mould, and may have the form of flowers, leaves, figures or geometrical designs. The pulp is run into these moulds and the figures harden in the cold air. These casts are arranged in the proper figure or design, when a cementing process begins. The cement is a compound made from leather pulp and glue, and it is run between the figures. The figures soften a little with the compound, and the whole hardens together.

In the casting of each figure a different colored pulp is used—red pulp for red roses, white pulp for white flowers, green for leaves, and so on. Thus elaborate designs may be carried out. Then comes the pressing by the use of rollers and polishing with varnish.

The result is a nice looking floor covering, the cost of which is less than straw matting, and less than oilcloth ; in fact, an economical and durable carpeting.—Shoe and Leather Facts.

The Cute Japs.

The Japanese played a pretty trick to find out the condition of the Chinese fleet that was so knocked around by the Japs at the naval battle of the Yalu river. The Chinese fleet was anchored at Wei-Hai-Wei. The Japanese war ship Yoshina-Kahn was repainted and then hoisted the Chinese colors and started for Wei-Hai-Wei, pursued by a Japanese man-of-war. The pursuing vessel fired several shells at the disguised steamer and the people in Wei-Hai-Wei, deceived by the strategy, signaled the flying steamer to enter the port. She availed herself of the invitation long enough to ascertain that the Chen Yuen, Fing Yuen, Tsing-Yuen, Chi-Yuen, Kwan-Pink, Chen-Tung, Chen-Pia, Chen-Nan and Chen-Pop were lying at anchor within, and then she fled. The ruse was discovered as she was leaving the harbor and several shots were sent after her, but not one struck her.

The Modern Way

The Three Fads of the Year.

"The three fads of the year," summed up a bright young woman in a cable car the other day, "are Napoleon, Trilby and violets." She was not far wrong, particularly as to the latter, for lovely woman lately, in the street, the shop, the theatre, the drive, at teas, balls and operas wears nothing in the way of flowers save violets. In deference to their extraordinary popularity, it is even permissible to wear artificial ones, in places where the natural ones are usually seen, and many women pin a mock bunch to a jacket lapel and leave it there indefinitely. The imitation blooms are very successful, and, for occasions, are quite as effective.

A Secure Barrel or Cask Holder.

The illustration shows a handy framework for holding full barrels while being carried to or from one's home in a wagon or cart. With this contrivance there is no moving about of the barrel, while if the trucks are placed below the framework the whole can easily be moved without rolling the barrel or cask —something at times desirable. The sides fot he framework may be of soft wood, the two crosspieces of firmer stuff.

IF SICK HEADACHE IS MISERY, what are Carter's Little Liver Pills if they will positively cure it? People who have used them speak frankly of their worth. They are small and easy to take.

PAIN FROM INDIGESTION, dyspepsia, and too hearty eating, is relieved at once by taking one of Carter's Little Liver Pills immediately after dinner. Don't forget this.

THERE IS NO ONE ARTICLE IN THE LINE OF medicines that gives so large a return for the money as a good porous strengthening plaster, such as Carter's Smart Weed and Belladonna Backache Plasters.

But one opinion prevails through the world and that is most strongly in favor of Perry Davis PAIN-KILLER, that no other article ever attained so wide spread popularity. 25 cents buys a big bottle.

TRULY ASTONISHING.—Miss Annette N. Moen, Fountain, Minn., says: "Ayer's Cherry Pectoral has had a wonderful effect in curing my brother's children of a severe and dangerous cold. It was truly astonishing how speedily they found relief after taking this preparation."

A CABINET CHANGE.

Hon. J. C. Patterson To Retire From the Ministry.

DR. MONTAGUE TO GET A PORTFOLIO

Hon. A. R. Dickey Mentioned As the New Minister of Militia—Commutation of a Polite Burglar's Sentence.

Ottawa, March 21.—It is currently reported here to-night that Hon. J. C. Patterson, Minister of Militia, will shortly retire from the ministry. He will be succeeded by Hon. Arthur R. Dickey, Dr. Montague becoming Secretary of State. The official announcement of these changes is expected in two or three days.

The writs for Antigonish, Sir John Thompson's old constituency ; Quebec West, vacated by the death of Hon. John Hearn, and Vercheres, Hon. Felix Geoffrion's former constituency, will probably be issued to-morrow. The polling in each case will take place before April 18.

The Minister of Justice has remitted three years of the sentence passed on John Simpson at Victoria, B.C., recently by Judge Crease. Simpson was one of a bad gang of burglars who had been infesting the province. He was sentenced to five years' imprisonment by the judge and immediately remarked in a sneering tone, "Thank you, sir." The judge thereupon tucked on three years more. In his report to the minister the judge says the additional sentence had a most salutary effect, but now favors remission of the sentence.

The executive of the Dominion Rifle Association meets on Monday, April 1, to make arrangements for the departure of the Bisley team and the consideration of its annual report.

Waldie Chosen By Halton Reformers.

Milton, Ont., March 21.—The Halton Reform Association held a convention here to-day, nominating a candidate for the Dominion. Mr. John Waldie was tendered the nomination, but stated that his time was so fully taken up with business engagements that he was not prepared to say if he could comply with the wishes of the convention, and asked that he be given until Tuesday next to consider.

SIXTY-TWO KILLED IN A MINE.

Disastrous Explosion in a Wyoming Mine Thirty-Eight Missing.

Salt Lake City, March 21.—The explosion at Rocky Mountain coal mine No. 5, situated at Red Canyon, Wyo., is believed to have killed 80 men, who are imprisoned in the mine, in addition to 10 who were in the power house above ground or near the shaft openings. The slopes and entrances to the lower workings are all blocked by wreckage, and it is thought at least three days will be required for rescuing parties to reach the bodies.

The horror occurred at 5.45 yesterday afternoon at No. 5 Central Pacific mine, Red Canyon, five miles north of Evanston. The explosion in the mine shocked the whole country around, wrecked the power plant, a fan house and several other buildings, entailing heavy loss, but the death-roll far overshadows other considerations.

Edwin Cox, the outside carpenter ; James Bruce, outside boss ; James W. Clark, William Sellers, jr., and James Gerally, an Austrian, were killed in the power house, while O. Maltby, foreman ; Jerry Crawford and Andrew Mason were injured and died soon afterwards, the last three being about the power house at the time of the explosion.

A great throng of people gathered around the mine, anxiously enquiring regarding friends known to be in the mine. Hope of any of them being alive is gone. No one after seeing the ghastly spectacle presented by the two bodies brought out of the slope could have any hopes of anyone in the mine being alive.

It is now thought that 62 men perished in the disaster. Fifty-one of them were married men, with large families. About 30 of the men killed belonged to the A.O.U.W., and were insured for $2000 each.

The work of recovering the bodies goes steadily on, night and day, rushed forward by volunteer squads of miners and citizens. The work is attended with grave peril, and the first group of miners which ventured to brave the dangers of gas, fire damp and crumbling walls were overcome and had to be rescued by others. The terrific force of the explosion in finding vent at the mouth of the slope blew the heavily-timbered shed over the mouth of the slope and over the passageway leading out to the tipple, clearing into space, mowing down the tops of the power house, tipple shed and other buildings at the mouth of the slope more effectually than chain shot could have done.

The explosion blew out or loosened all the timbering and supports, and cracked and shattered the walls and roof so that the work of recovering the dead is difficult. It is thought the 38 men who have not been found were gathered on the seventh level to await the coming of the last man trip of the day, which was to take them to the surface.

Remodeling an Old Saw.

Check the teeth with a cod chisel, the saw being held in a vise to prevent cracking the plate and breaking the teeth. Joint straight with a file and make new teeth, seven to the inch, or about like an ordinary handsaw. File the teeth until they hook and are well sheared. The work will require two or three hours' time, but the saw will do better work more easily and rapidly. The steel in our old grandfathers' saws was far better tempered than the soft-tempered steel in modern saws, and will hold a keen edge much longer.

MANAGING THE HOTBED.

What Must be Done to Secure Good Results—How to Make One.

To make the hotbed, select a warm location, excavate six feet wide, 24 inches deep and the desired length. Set stakes at each half board length and enclose tightly. The north side should be from 12 to 18 inches above the surface of the surrounding ground, the south side six inches. A layer of partial fermented horse manure and half its bulk of dry leaves should be packed tight, filling the bed two-thirds full. Put on the sashes, allow to ferment, tread it down and put in about six inches of soil. After the glass is on, let it stand two or three days Put in a thermometer. If the heat of the bed rises above 80 degrees do not sow till it goes down. More seeds are lost by the first heat of the bed than in any other way.

I wold not advise a farmer in this latitude to sow before the middle of March. Lettuce and radishes will be the main crop. Sow a little space of cabbages another in tomatoes, perhaps a few peppers, eggplants, etc. Get your seed at some good seed house. Do not sow a mongrel, something your grandmother handed down. Sow early scarlet radishes, Extra Early Jersey Wakefield cabbage, Dwarf Champion tomatoes, and Ruby King peppers. Radishes should be sown in rows six inches apart. Lettuce the same, but broadcast the other seeds. As fast as you sow firm the soil by laying a broad plank on it and getting on top of the plank. Make the bed very smooth and even. Now take your prepared soil and cover the seeds one-half inch. I sift it on. Cover the bed with old carpets or papers and put the glass on. Do not let that soil see the sun for two days, then remove the carpets. Do not let the thermomenter get over 75 degrees under the carpet. Keep the soil moist all the time, never muddy. Keep the temperature near 35 degrees in the day and near 55 degrees at night. Cold currents injure warm plants as well as warm men. The more air they get the better. Air them every day, if only for a few minutes. Close the hotbeds early in the evening.—American Agriculturist.

Hothouse for Starting Seedlings.

For the construction of a small hot house for use on a farm, be it large or small, and one easily made by any farmer handy with tools, set a row of posts 4 ft high. If a stovepipe flue is to be used the house should not be over 40 ft long and 10 ft wide. The posts are boarded on the outside, the boards covered outside with heavy building paper and another layer of boards nailed over the paper. Beds for the soil should be 6 in deep and strongly supported by frequent posts along the aisle. For heat, make an arch of brick and clay or use a box stove, running the pipe on an incline under the bed to the opposite end of the house into a chimney. Sashes 3x6 ft may be bought ready-made. The rafters for supporting the sashes should be of 2x4 scantling, sized and coated with linseed oil. The sashes may be with two boards or a strip of leather laid on the ridge piece, securely fastened in place on the scantling and covered with two boards or a strip of leather or scantling may be nailed from the ridgepole to the sides, as far apart as the width of the glass and the glass then puttied in place.—Farm and Home.

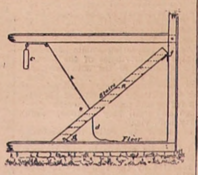
HOTHOUSE FOR GARDENERS.

Disease and Watercress.

Attention has been drawn by the health official of Lambeth, England, to the connection between watercress and typhoid fever, diphtheria, and some other ailments, the fact having first been observed in several cases of typhoid which had there occurred after the victims had eaten some watercress. It was found, on tracing the matter, that the watercress beds occupied a superficial area of 20,000 to 25,000 square yards in extent, and through the length and breadth of the farm, which is terraced and sub-divided into sectional beds, a gentle current is maintained through the steady inpour of a stream presenting the appearance of having traversed the peatty soil ; the stream enters the beds lying at the highest level and finally empties itself into a wayside stream. A sample of water was taken from the stream, at the upper beds, where the foliage was thickest and the growth most luxuriant, and, upon analysis, the fluid showed all the chemical characteristics of liquid sewage, containing innumerable colonies of micrococci and bacteria. The result tends to the belief that the connection between sewage and watercress is a prevalent one, and that many cases of typhoid fever, diphtheria, and other diseases of obscure source derive their origin from the noxious elements of sewage that must be ingested, at times, when this green stuff is eaten.—New York Tribune.

Folding Skeleton Stairs.

It is often desirable to have the stairs in the wagon house or barn so arranged that they could be removed quickly. As this is not often practicable, the next best plan is to have them so constructed as to fold up out of the way. A good method of doing it is shown in the accompanying sketch, in which "a" shows one side of the stairs, the dotted ines represnting the various steps. The steps should not be less than three feet in length and eight inches wide. The upper end of the lower portion of each side is hinged to the side of the building at "f," while the lower end is hooked to the floor at "g." A rope, "b," is attached to the stairs, passes over two pulleys, and is there fastened to a weight, "c," which is just heavy enough to raise the free end of the stairs up to the ceiling. When the lower end of the steps is released the whole folds up closely against its upper floor and is entirely out of the way. Two or three feet of rope are allowed to dangle, as seen at "d," by which the whole apparatus is again pulled down into position. The weight, "c," should slide up and down close to the side of the building, so as to be entirely out of the way.



SIDE VIEW OF FOLDING STAIRS.

Farm Items.

One of the experiments that every farmer should make for himself and on different fields, is that of comparing level culture with hilling. There is much to be gained in the proper mode of cultivation, but as farms and crops differ, each one should experiment and determine on his own farm.

Wall Paper

THE designs of our spring wall papers are beautiful and the colorings exquisite. The effects they produce upon the wall have been studied with intelligent sympathy and the "long-felt-wants" of a few years ago have been provided for with cultivated taste. A judicious employment of any of our papers leaves little to be done in a room. A few ornaments, according to the taste or wealth of the occupant, are all that is necessary to contribute to its beauty and comfort. Our papers thoroughly represent the standard of the prevailing taste in Interior Decorations.

Mr. Cameron Brown entertained the members of the Sun staff at his residence last evening. All present spent a pleasant evening, and greatly appreciated the hospitality of Mr and Mrs. Brown.

The remains of the late James Hall, who died at Gowanda, N.Y., will arrive here on the 12:40 train to-morrow. They will be met by the local Oddfellows and removed to the cemetery for interment.

You are too young, no matter what your age, to lose your hair. Save it by the use of Ayer's Hair Vigor. It removes dandruff, prevents baldness, restores gray and faded hair to its original color, and makes it soft, glossy, and abundant. No toilet is complete without it.

Already preparations are being made for the season's work at the cheese factories in Seymour. "Brae" factory throws its doors open on Monday, 1st of April. "Plum Grove" at Wellman's corners, starts the same date. The creamery will cease operations on Saturday next.

An old lady in Campbellford is in possession of a wedding ring which was in use one hundred and twenty-five years ago. It was worn by her grandmother when a young married woman, in Cornwall, England, and has been in use ever since. To-day it is so thin that it can be bent like wire.

A Horticultural Society has been formed in Napanee. The officers were elected as follows: President, Mrs. Wilkison; Vice-President, T. M. Henry; Directors, Mrs. R. Mill, Mrs. R. G. Wright, Mrs. F. S. Richardson, Geo. Lloyd, Jas. Harmer, Jas. Bowerman, Chas. Stevens, W. S. Herrington and Dr. Ward.

[In these days of keen competition no merchant is likely to mark too much profit on his goods. But the man who buys low is the man that can sell low, that's why Haines & Lockett's prices are lower than others. They are able to deal direct with the factory for large lots for their four big stores. You buy from them and you get the benefit.

A new cheese company has been incorporated in Tweed, under the name of the Murphy Cheese and Butter Manufacturing Company. A factory is to be built in the 7th concession of Hungerford. Mr. Patrick Murphy is President, and the Board of Directors is composed of Messrs. D. S. Larkin, William Healey, Thomas Murphy and John Gartlin.

Cholera and all summer complaints are so quick in their action that the cold hand of death is upon the victims before they are aware that danger is near. If attacked do not delay in getting the proper medicine. Try a dose of Dr. J. D. Kellog's Dysentery Cordinal, and you will get immediate relief. It acts with wonderful rapidity and never fails to effect a cure.

H. Corby, M.P., W. B. Northrup, M.P., A. C. Millar, M.P. and Uriah Wilson, M.P. have been urging the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to extend the hoop net fishing on the Bay of Quinte until the first of May, owing to the lake opening up some 10 days or two weeks earlier than the Bay of Quinte. The Minister states, "While I am adverse to such extensions generally, I recognize that there are special grounds which might be urged by the fishermen of the Bay of Quinte for some consideration and I have therefore decided to grant for this season such extension till the first of May.

A Pleasant Evening.

A very pleasant evening was spent in the Royal Templar's Hall last evening, it being the occasion of a visit from a number of the students of Albert College, who are members of the Royal Templars of Temperance in other parts of the Province. The party consisted of Messrs. Brette, Walters, Crosby, Stokes, Fulsom, Noice, and Higgs, and all enjoyed themselves immensely. A good programme was prepared and presented, the students taking an active part. They tendered Belleville Council a very hearty vote of thanks for the kind reception they had given them, and signified their intention of repeating their visit.

Got a Bath.

A resident of the city who crossed the bay in a cutter last night from Prince Edward, made the serious mistake of attempting to land near the mineral spring. As there had been a considerable current flowing from the spring during the winter, the ice was weak, and the horse and vehicle broke through. The driver, whose involuntary bath in a mixture of mineral and bay water was decidedly too cold for comfort, shouted loudly for assistance, and a resident of the neighborhood, bearing with him a lantern and a rope, went to the aid of the unfortunate one. A rescue was effected, but not until the cutter had been damaged, and the rescuer had spoiled a pair of trousers in his philanthropic labors.

Rascally Work.

A beagle hound owned by Mr. W. H. Scholes, Bridge st. West, was poisoned yesterday near its master's home, and it took several hours to counteract the deadly drug—probably arsenic or strychnine—which the animal had swallowed. The dog will live, but three other dogs which were poisoned in the same neighborhood a short time ago were not so fortunate, death resulting from the poisoning. Who is the dog fiend who perpetrates such dastardly work? There is a strong suspicion as to his identity, and it will not be well for him should suspicion be resolved with certainty.

A Pleasant Party.

About sixty ladies and gentlemen assembled in the Foresters' Hall last evening, and had a most enjoyable time at pedro and dancing. Prof. Chalaupka's orchestra furnished delightful music. Caterer Fleming served a light supper at midnight, after which dancing was resumed, and continued until four o'clock this morning. The whole affair was gotten up and successfully carried out by Messrs. Den Donnelly and Fred. Calloway, and all present were delighted with every arrangement.

Fatigue of Mind and Body.

Ambrecht's Cocoa Wine is a powerful nerve tonic and stimulant. It restores the functions of the digestive organs, strengthens the mental and physical powers, and relieves the intense headaches of nervous debility. In case of sleeplessness it is invaluable, producing a sound and refreshing sleep, without the distressing sensations common after opiates or bromides. Sold by L. W. Yeomans & Co.

The Best Dressed People.

You see well dressed men on the streets and naturally suppose they are wearing custom-made clothing. No doubt some of them are, but a good share of them are wearing Oak Hall clothing. The difference cannot be told, the cloth is the same, the fit the same and the trimmings the same. The only difference is in the price. Surely a saving of from $5 to $7 is not to be despised. Take a look at our $10 suits and overcoats.

Will Have a Contest.

Fred Sero, Belleville, was in the city yesterday, says the Kingston Whig, arranging with C. Carey for a match in heavy lifting. It was arranged that a contest occur. Sero is much heavier than Carey. They will also spar. A side bet of $200 will be made. The contest will take place in the City Hall, Kingston, on April 2nd.

DEATHS.

HOUSTON.—DAVID G. HOUSTON, born in Kirkcudbright, Scotland, Aug. 19th, 1812. Died at his residence in Thurlow, March 21st, 1895.

Funeral, Saturday, 23rd, from his late residence, 2nd con. of Thurlow, at 10 a.m. Services at Presbyterian church, Shannonville.

Have you seen the new "Eudora?" It might have been thought that the Priestleys could do no better. They had made the best black dress goods in the world. And now they have brought out the new "Eudora." The Henriettas seemed perfection. But with the Priestleys it is ever onward. The "Eudora" has a softness, a richness, all its own. It has extra width and weight, it fits beautifully, and gives long service, while the glow upon its surface gives it the character which ladies like. It is wrapped on "The Varnished Board," and Priestley's name stamped on every five yards.

A BOLD BURGLARY.

Officer Cook Detects a Man With a Lot of Goods From John Panter's Grocery.

At 1:45 this morning as Officer Cook was making his round of the back doors on Front St. to see that all were secure, he saw a man coming from the rear of John Panter & Son's grocery store carrying a sack of flour under each arm. He gave chase, but the thief dropped his plunder and, being a young man and fleet of foot, soon out-distanced the policeman.

When the officer found he could not catch the burglar he began to look about to see what he had attempted to steal, and this is what he found outside the back door, besides the two sacks of flour: A ham, two cans of tomatoes, a can of corn and one of salmon, a roll of butter, about two dozen eggs, a few pounds of sugar, some lard, a paper bag of currants and raisins, citron peel and a quantity of dried apples.

The intruder had entered through a back window that had been left insecure and, after gathering together what he wanted, had made his exit through the back door, which is barred from the inside. Judging from the selection of the articles it would seem that the burglar wanted something to eat rather than to steal for gain.

The police think, and Mr. Panter shares this opinion, that the man has been in the store before in the same way, as he had arranged to fasten the back door on leaving so that no clue of his visit would be left behind. The police have a strong clue to the identity of the party and have hopes of securing his arrest.

The above facts should be a lesson to many other merchants on Front st., whose back doors are, in many instances, a standing invitation to burglars.

WORK OF THE COMMITTEES.

James Zebedee to Light the Coal Oil Lamps—Other Business.

The following civic committees met last evening and transacted a large amount of business:

WATER AND GAS.

The Water and Gas Committee passed a few accounts. They also opened the tenders for lighting the coal oil lamps of the city: Following are the tenders: John W. Vandervoort, Murney ward, $10 per lamp per year; Robt. McCoy, Murney ward, $8.75; James Orr, Murney ward, $8.50; James Zebedee, all the lamps of the city, $8; Joseph Duboe, Bleecker ward, $11; Charles Lang, jr., Murney ward, $8.50; Charles Lang, sr., Murney ward, $10; James McCoy, Foster ward, $12; H. J. Stratton, whole city, $8; Jas. Zebedee, Murney and Coleman wards, $9. It was recommended that James Zebedee's tender for the whole city be accepted and that the solicitor be instructed to prepare a contract, term to begin the first of April, and the present lamplighters then notified to cease.

PUBLIC WORKS.

The Public Works Committee passed the following accounts: Pay sheet $59.47, public works proper, $57.07; water and gas, $2.40; Harris & Walton, $5.75; Hy. McIninch, $10.55. They recommended that the use of the waiting room of the G. T. R. on Pinnacle st. in the meat market be given to the City Surveyor. That the matter of the screen for the stone crusher be left in abeyance till the crusher is started.

HARBOR, PARKS AND PRINTING.

This committee recommended that the following accounts be passed: Cameron Brown, $17.25; T. S. Carman, $26.75. Moved by Ald. W. H. Gordon, that we do not accept any tender for city printing but as it is required, and all printing and supplies be obtained through the Committee on Printing.

MARKET.

This Committee recommended that a deputation be appointed by the Council to proceed to Toronto if necessary, to oppose the bill to abolish the market fees. They passed the following accounts: Thomas Stewart, $37.25; Jas. Peck, $1; Frank Bruseau, 75c.; M. Loscoskinsky $3.

ALBERT COLLEGE.

What Cobourg Gave to Victoria—A Noble Example for Belleville.

Principal Dyer has received the following letter from Chancellor Burwash of Victoria University:

TORONTO, March 20th, 1895

MY DEAR DR. DYER,—Your welcome note has been received and I congratulate you on Mr. Massey's kind offer. I can scarcely tell you now how much Cobourg contributed to Victoria first and last. There was the original contribution in land and subscription in 1830, the record of which is lost.

2. The gift of land, $4,000.

3. Contributions to the Punshon endowment about $2,000.

4. Subscription to Faraday Hall about $16,000. First and last I should think about $25,000 would represent the contributions of Cobourg to Victoria. This does not include subscriptions to the Faraday Hall fund by the professors or outside parties.

With kind regards,
Yours
N. BURWASH.

It will thus be seen that Cobourg always gave generously to the support of Victoria College.

Belleville is well able to do liberal things for Albert College. It is already evident from subscriptions received that Belleville has learned to appreciate the College and in the present effort to enlarge the College will do a liberal thing. Let us place our college on a splendid basis and make Belleville more than ever an educational centre.

From Principal Dyer we learn that, in addition to other generous subscriptions from friends of the College, Sir Mackenzie Bowell has subscribed $1000 to the fund.

Albert College Notes.

We expect one of the best programmes of the season to be given in the College Chapel this evening. A number of readings and recitations will be given by Prof. Shephard's senior pupils. These will be interspersed by music in which several of the College students will take part. The musical part will consist of the following:

1 Selection - - - Glee Club
2 The Minute Gun at Sea.
3 Mixed quartette - "Come where the Lilies Bloom,"
Miss Gardiner, Mrs. Massey, Messrs. T. H. Gorman and F. B. Stafford.
4 Trio "Little Farm well Tilled,"
Messrs. Moses, Noice and Stafford.
5 Male quartette - "The Gospel Ship,"
Messrs. Toll, Noice, Moses and Stafford.

This will be a rare treat, so don't miss it. No fee. Everybody welcome.

AN UNSATISFACTORY ENDING

Kingston News.

If general opinion counts for anything it would appear that the smelting works which the Messrs. Hamilton, of Youngstown, Ohio, proposed establishing here will not become a reality, for some time to come at least. The aldermen are divided as to where the responsibility for this lies. Some of them criticize the action of two of their number who left the meeting called to confer with the men from the United States before it was brought to a conclusion, and were consequently not present when the final offer was made to the city. The remainder of the Committee would not take action without the two missing ones and the offer was neither accepted or rejected. In fact nothing has been done about it since.

In addition to the free site and exemption asked for by Messrs. Caulfield and Hamilton, a condition was made that the city should advance $100,000 to the proposed Company—reimbursement to be protected by a lien on the Government bounty which would accrue to the Company for pig iron turned out.

The only objection raised was regarding the time and division of the money to be advanced. One of the two Aldermen who could not be found at the close of the meeting did not want the money to be paid until the entire plant was erected. Finally the committee made a compromise offer of $50,000 when the work was three-quarters finished and $50,000 when completed. This the iron men would not agree to, and after discussing the matter between themselves a contra offer was made in which they expressed their willingness to accept $50,000 when the work was half completed, and the remainder when quite finished.

Then it was that the two big guns of the Council were discovered to be missing. A search was made about the building for them but no trace was found. The visitors were anxious to get away on the night train and eventually left without having received any answer whatever to their last proposal. No communication has been received from them since and the whole affair is still in this unsatisfactory position.

THE SUMMER CARNIVAL.

The General Committee Met Last Evening and Discussed It.

The Committee appointed at the public meeting of March fifth to discuss the Summer Carnival scheme, met last evening in Mr. Corby's office. The meeting was thoroughly representative. Among those present were Mayor Walmsley, Messrs. Thos. Ritchie, H. Corby, M. P., W. B. Northrup, M. P. Col. Lazier, U. E. Thompson, W. W. Lee, H. Pringle, L. W. Yeomans, Cameron Brown, Ald. Bogart, Ald Wills and several other members of the City Council.

Mayor Walmsley was appointed chairman and the question as to whether it would be advisable or not to hold a summer carnival was discussed by all present. The general carnival scheme was not looked upon with favor by a majority of those present, and a proposition was made that we have a two days sporting tournament. This proposition appeared to meet with more approval than the former.

Amongst the several attractions suggested for the two days was a rowing regatta in which Jake Gaudiar and other prominent oarsmen would compete; the annual canoe meet, which is generally held at the Thousand Islands; a bicycle meet, lacrosse and football matches, etc. After considerable discussion on these points and suggestions from those present the following sub-committee was appointed to make recommendations to the general committee: Mayor Walmsley, H. Corby, M.P., Thos. Ritchie, W. B. Northrup, M.P., H. Pringle and L. W. Yeomans.

This committee were asked to recommend on the following points: (1) As to a proper person for a permanent secretary; (2) whether the sports should comprise one or two days; (3) as to what character of sports they should have; (4) what the probable expense would be.

In the discussion of subscriptions and grants only one Alderman of those present favored a grant from the Council, but the others were of the opinion if the citizens subscribed liberally towards the scheme the Council would assist by extra lighting, decorating or in some other way. The meeting was the best held yet, as both sides of the question were brought out and thoroughly discussed.

WALKING AROUND THE STATES.

John Wilson Undertakes To Do It in Twelve Months.

From the Buffalo Express.

In December of last year, it is reported a wager was made between the Cincinnati Post & Chronicle and the Police Gazette of New York, that a man could not walk around the four borders of the United States and return to the place of starting in twelve months. Mr. Fox claimed that the feat was possible, and selected George Wilson, who has a record as a long distance pedestrian, as the man to do the walking. Wilson accepted, and without a cent he left the Cincinnati Post Office on Dec. 13, arriving in New York on Jan. 19. Last night he arrived in Buffalo and called at the Express office to get a letter, proving that he had been in this city.

Wilson is the picture of health, and said he was suffering from nothing but blistered feet. He walked 26 miles yesterday, and leaves for Dunkirk this morning. Said he last night: "After leaving Cincinnati, I went through Central Ohio to Wheeling, Va., to Frederick, Md., to Washington, D. C., to Baltimore, Md., to Wilmington, Del., to Philadelphia, Pa., through New Jersey to New York, registering at the World, Recorder and Police Gazette offices. From there I went through Connecticut to Providence, R.I, to Boston, Mass., through New Hampshire, Vermont and Maine. Then the return journey began and I have been walking ever since until I reached Buffalo to-night. I am 22 days ahead of time and it's a dead cinch I'll win."

He will now walk along the northern border to the Pacific coast, then south to Mexico and then east again. He has several pockets full of letters from various city and sporting editors, which he received in the towns he went through. Wilson claims that he is no novice at the game of walking and says that he has walked from New York to San Francisco twice before, and he has tramped from New York to Chicago the same number of times. Wilson says the most novel trip he has ever taken part in and one which he defies any man in the world to duplicate was riding deadhead on flyers from Boston to San Francisco and return in 17 days.

He makes his expenses on the trip by selling his photographs and doing odd jobs. He sends a postal card to the Police Gazette office from every place he passes through.

Like a Miracle

Consumption—Low Condition

Wonderful Results From Taking Hood's Sarsaparilla.

Miss Hannah Wyatt
Toronto, Ont.

"Four years ago while in the old country (England), my daughter Hannah was sent away from the hospital, in a very low condition with consumption of the lungs and bowels, and weak action of the heart. The trip across the water to this country seemed to make her feel better for a while. Then she began to get worse, and for 14 weeks she was unable to get off the bed. She grew worse for five months and lost the use of her limbs and lower part of body, and if she sat up in bed had to be propped up with pillows. Physicians

Said She Was Past All Help

and wanted me to send her to the 'Home for Incurables.' But I said as long as I could hold my hand up she should not go. We then began to give her Hood's Sarsaparilla. She is getting strong, walks around, is out doors every day; has no trouble with her throat and no cough, and her heart seems to be all right again. She has a first class appetite. We regard her cure as nothing short of a miracle." W. WYATT, 89 Marion Street, Parkdale, Toronto, Ontario.

SPORTING TALK.

Brantford, Owen Sound, Waterloo and Peterborough are competitors for the C.W.A. meet on Dominion Day.

The rechristened schooner Priscilla, built as a cup defender in 1885, and then rigged as a sloop, will leave New York about the middle of next month for Cleveland, coming by way of the St. Lawrence and the lakes.

A Football Club has been formed in Napanee. Following are the officers: Hon. Pres., F. Chinneck; Pres., Robt. Tate; Hon. Vice-Pres., Hugh Milling; Vice-Pres., J. F. McAlister; Capt., W. B. Haines; Vice-Capt., F. S. Scott; Sec., M. B. McDonald; Treas., H. Ashley.

Jake Gaudaur will likely leave next week for Austin, Texas, and commence training in order to compete in the Austin annual regatta, which is announced in the second week in May. The big Canadian will row in the single and double scull events. In the latter he will probably have Ed. Durnan for a partner.

The meeting this evening in the Institute hall for the purpose of organizing an athletic association promises to be a success. Every lover of field sports should attend and give the question a thorough discussion. All cyclists should attend, as the association will be of great benefit to that class of sport.

Hamilton's Experience.

A citizen of Hamilton to a Kingston Whig reporter said the blast furnace there is not yet in operation and it is not known when it will be commenced. Hamilton is bound to pay the bonus. The visitor says the corporation of Kingston will have to be very cautious in dealing with blast furnace men. If it is decided to accept the terms of the Dominion Steel Co. the corporation will have to be sure that the company does not value the patent for the furnace at $50,000 and include it in the capital, when as a fact the patent should not be so regarded. Said the Hamilton man: "We are sorry we started, but we will have to see the scheme through. The experience we are gaining will help us a great deal in future transactions. Our experience may be dearly bought, but it is very valuable. Canadians are not yet sharp enough for the wide-awake business men of the United States." He thinks the terms which Kingston offers are fair, but he does not think they will be accepted unless the strangers think they can make a big deal.

Re the Late John White.

The Tweed News says: Mr. T. J. Hammill, partner of the late John White in the lumbering business in British Columbia, was in town on Saturday en route to Roslin, where he spent Sunday at the residence of his late partner. In conversation with a representative of the News Mr. Hammill spoke in the most kindly terms of his late departed partner and friend. Speaking of their business affairs he stated that they were, up to the time of Mr. White's death, carrying on a most successful lumbering business, and that if the times were good they could easily dispose of their interests there for half a million dollars. At present they are renting their mills, Mr. Hammill living in Toronto. In conversation with Mr. Preston he stated that Mrs. White would realize about twelve or thirteen thousand dollars cash out of her husband's interests there.

Miss Gordon's Third Lecture.

Miss Gordon, Lady Superintendent of the hospital, gave her third lecture yesterday afternoon in aid of a city ambulance. Her subject was "Pneumonia and Peritonitis," and she gave practical illustrations of how to take care of a patient afflicted with either of these diseases. She demonstrated to the class the proper way of making poultices and gave general rules of treatment. There were about twenty-five ladies present and all took a very deep interest in the lecture.

Died in Thurlow.

One of Thurlow's old residents died yesterday in the person of Mr. David G. Houston. Deceased was born at Kirkcudbright, Scotland, on August 9th, 1812, and came to this country many years ago. He leaves a family, of whom one son is Dr. D. W. Houston, of Troy, N.Y. The funeral will take place to-morrow at 10 a.m. from his late residence, 2nd con. of Thurlow, to the Presbyterian church, Shannonville, where the service will be held.

IMPORTERS.

NONE OF THEM BEAUTIES.

Characteristics of People That Shine in History.

Charlemagne wore a long, tawny beard that almost concealed his features from observation, so that the impression gained by the beholders was that of a mass of yellowish hair, from the midst of which protruded a great red, hooked nose.

William of Orange was a consumptive, and showed the fact plainly in his face. His cheeks were thin, and had a hectic flush, but his voice was unnaturally strong. The most marked points in his face were his eyes and forehead.

Mme. De Stael was ugly, with rough, irregular features and bad complexion. She was very sensitive in regard to her looks and disliked being complimented on her intellectual powers, regarding the compliment as a slur on her lack of beauty.

Gibbon's face was full and red. Late in life he became exceedingly stout, and his features grew flabby. Only when interested in conversation did he show indications of the bright intellect that conceived and carried out the greatest historical work ever produced by the unaided labor of one man.

Mozart was very small, being only a little over five feet in height. His face was thin, and the size of his nose was apparently exaggerated by the attenuation of his features. He wore his hair long and done up in a cue, according to the custom of his day. His mouth was small, and his face clean-shaven.

Dante, in early life, was a singularly handsome man, but as age came on his face became wrinkled, and his complexion a dark yellow. He was an object of awe to the common people, who supposed he had been in hell and had thus acquired the dark complexion, that was one of his most prominent facial characteristics.

Cicero had a very thin face, which corresponded exactly to his tall, attenuated body. He kept himself thin by a system of dieting or rather of starving himself on the theory that all bodily ailments were caused by too much eating, and so, on every trifling indisposition he fasted from 24 to 48 hours.

Louis XVI. had a very heavy, red, sensual face, with a large Roman nose, full cheeks and lips and a double chin. There was no trace of more than ordinary intellect, either in his face or conversation, the latter being always commonplace, often dull. He gave his contemporaries the impression of a man who habitually ate and drank more than was good for him.

Peter the Great of Russia had the typical face of a Russian peasant. A short, thick nose, with large nostrils, heavy brows, full, sensual lips, wide mouth and high cheek bones were among his most prominent features. His head was almost round and showed by its width at the ears that combativeness of disposition was one of the leading points in his character.

Carbuncles Large as Hen's Eggs!

MRS. NANNIE GOULDMAN, of Beulahville, King William Co., Va., writes as follows: "For about eight or ten years my father, Col. T. U. Fogg, of West Point, Va., was laid up with carbuncles, the worst that I ever saw. He tried everything he heard of, his doctor could do nothing for him. Had six or seven carbuncles at a time, as large as hen's eggs. He got so weak and suffered so much he could not walk a step. In 1872 he had his bed put in the middle of his room and got on it to die. No one expected him to get well. He saw Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery advised for all blood disorders. Before he had taken half-a-bottle of 'Discovery' they began to go away. Two bottles entirely cured him. He is now 78 years old, and enjoys good health."

Dangers of Delay.

If we were allowed to look into the future and see the fatal consequences that follow a neglected cold, how differently would our course be; could we realize our danger, how speedily we would seek a cure; but with many it is only when the monster disease has fastened its fangs upon our lungs that we awaken to our folly. What follows a neglected cold? It is not diseases of the throat and lungs, bronchitis, asthma, consumption, and many other diseases of like nature. Is it worse than madness to neglect a cold, and it is folly not to have some good remedy available for its frequent complaint. One of the most efficacious medicines for all diseases of the throat and lungs, is Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup. This medicine is composed of several medicinal herbs, which exert a most wonderful influence in curing consumption and other diseases of the lungs and chest. It promotes a free and easy expectoration, soothes irritation and drives the disease from the system.

A DETECTIVE STORY

Now First Published. All Rights Reserved

CHAPTER I.

On the 17th of March 1878, Mr. Gustave Prineveau was shot and killed in his private conveyance while returning from a drive with his wife. It was about five o'clock in the afternoon, and the carriage at the time was between Sixty-sixth and Sixty-seventh streets on Fourth avenue, in New York.

Mr. Prineveau was seated to the left of his wife in the carriage, which was a two-seated phaeton, and was driven by their man, John Teedson, who sat on the seat in front of them. Mr. Prineveau, who was sixty-three, died almost instantly, and the post mortem, held the next morning a ten o'clock, showed that he had been killed by a pistol bullet that had entered his heart at the fifth intercostal space, glanced upward and severed the aorta. A small hole was found in his vest on the left side corresponding to the bullet.

The post-mortem examination was a long one. As it was impossible for either of the other occupants of the carriage to have got around to the left side of Mr. Prineveau so as to have inflicted the wound without accomplishing an unprecedented feat, that would have been seen, and as there was no assignable motive for such an act, the whole purpose of the examination was directed to finding out what incentive some other person might have had to commit the deed.

The following facts were then elicited.

Mr. Prineveau had been married a little less than five years to a woman who, previous to that marriage, had been known as the widow of a South American merchant who died while on a visit to Buenos Ayres. At the time of Mr. Prineveau's marriage he was reported to be very wealthy, having amassed a fortune in coal speculations in Pennsylvania and New York.

He, too, had been previously married, by which marriage there had been two sons, one of whom had died three years before the father, in California, and the other of whom was still living somewhere in Ohio. The only other relation that could be traced was a nephew, Jared Clarkson, about twenty-eight years old, who was a scapegrace, and had lived for several years upon the bounty of Mr. Prineveau, but whose whereabouts at the time of Mr. Prineveau's death could not be ascertained. It was shown that the deceased had been a man of singularly weak character in the management of his estate; that he gave away vast sums of money, was easily frightened or cajoled, and that from all accounts his wife's advice and influence alone saved him from many foolish speculations and his fortune in his old age. Among his papers were found receipts for over one hundred thousand dollars signed by unknown persons and covering the four years immediately preceding his death. His relations with his wife had always been of the most amiable and trustful kind. None of his servants knew of his ever having quarreled with her. Mrs. Prineveau looked after all his personal comforts, was continually solicitous about his health, accompanied him everywhere, and bore the reputation of being a discreet domestic woman with an obvious affection for a man who was twenty years her senior.

There was in his house on Fifth avenue a servant who had been with them for five years—her name was Rose Kenny, and she testified that about a week before the murder Mr. Prineveau had been visited at night by the nephew Clarkson, whom she had let in, and who was seen by Mr. Prineveau in the library, a small room in the wing at the rear of the house. From appearance she thought the man had been drinking. He wore a rough and soiled overcoat and an imitation astrakan cap pulled over his face. He stayed over half an hour in the library, and she heard him from the front parlor speaking in loud and angry tones. She admitted that she had listened, and swore that she heard him say: "Then look out for yourself, for you will not live to accomplish it." To which the old man in a soft voice made some kind of appealing reply.

HE WORE A ROUGH AND SOILED OVERCOAT.

This was about ten o'clock at night, and Mrs. Prineveau, who had gone to a concert at Steinway hall with a party of friends, had not returned. She came back at ten minutes of eleven, and, upon making inquiries of the maid, Rosy, learned these facts and showed a good deal of indignation because Mr. Prineveau had been subjected to the annoyance of a worthless and reckless scapegrace.

Mrs. Prineveau herself corrobated this statement explicitly, but could give very little information about the habits or antecedents of Clarkson, except that she had learned incidentally from her husband that he was a drunkard with a wife and two children, and, owing to his dissolute habits, had never been able to take care of himself or his family.

It was also learned that on the afternoon of the 14th of March Clarkson had been seen by the coachman hanging about the house, and the hall boy, who had been sent on an errand, encountered him on the corner and was there held in conversation by him, Clarkson asking him, among other things, if Mr. Prineveau did not take a drive usually in the afternoons.

These bits of testimony led to the police efforts to find Clarkson. Mr. Prineveau was buried in the Trinity cemetery on the CLARKSON WAS SEEN HANGING AROUND THE HOUSE.

19th. His funeral was attended by many old New Yorkers, and public attention was turned to the efforts made by Mrs. Prineveau to discover the perpetrator of the crime.

On the 21st Clarkson's wife and children were found in a miserable lodging place in Varick street. But Clarkson had disappeared. His wife promptly acknowledged that he had come home late on the afternoon of the 17th, had hurriedly changed his clothes and gone out. She had not seen him or heard of him since. But she strenuously denied that he had committed a crime, and refused to be influenced by any of the damaging circumstances.

Here the affair threatened to end, as so many others of its kind have ended, in idle curiosity, police inefficiency and ultimate forgetfulness. But on the 22nd Clarkson was discovered in hiding in Troy. He was brought here and lodged in the city prison, and then it became known to the public that the police had found in the rooms of Mrs. Clarkson in Varick street a small French revolver with five chambers, one of which was empty, and the bullets of this pistol corresponded in size with the one taken from the body of Mr. Prineveau.

CHAPTER II.

At this stage of the affair I was called into it, oddly enough. I received a note from that eminent lawyer, John Greve, with whom I had studied, asking me to call and see Mrs. Prineveau at her Fifth avenue home. He had taken the liberty, he said, of recommending me in a matter that would perhaps be of great service to me. Perplexed as I was at this, knowing that John Greve was Mrs. Prineveau's lawyer and did not need associate counsel, I nevertheless called promptly upon the lady. I found her to be a very handsome woman with great dignity of person, a charming self-possession and all the evidences of a refined and estimable character.

"This unfortunate affair," she said, "has perplexed me in more ways than one. That wretched man, Clarkson, as you doubtless know, is in custody and is now here. The circumstances appear to leave little doubt of his guilt. But he has a wife and two children. Their abject misery is made all the more acute by the wife's belief in her husband's innocence. It is a very dreadful state of affairs, but I shrink from the responsibility which justice imposes on me of hanging that helpless wretch without giving him a show for his life. He is not able to employ counsel, and I am at best only a woman. I propose to pay you to try and do the best you can for him, and, of course, I do not wish anything said about it. I took the advice of Mr. Greve, and he said that in any case the man was entitled to good counsel and advised me to employ you. It seems in such a foregone conclusion a small concession to give him the benefit of the law. At all events it will relieve me from the reproach of having been influenced entirely by a vindictive feeling."

I do not remember all that was said at this interview, but I recall that I was consciously affected by the woman's sympathy for a man that she saw had little or no chance for his life, and who wanted to soften her own share in the prosecution by not permitting him to say he had no chance to prove his innocence.

I promised her to go and see the accused man and to send her my decision as soon thereafter as was possible.

This interview was on the 25th. On the 26th I went to see Clarkson in his cell at the city prison. I found a woman in the warden's office who had also come to see him. It proved to be his wife. She was such a picture of abject misery that she arrested my attention. She must have been a very beautiful girl, although now she was at least twenty-five and suffering had drawn its lines across her white face. I could see that she was made of the finest material, was in fact one of those delicate, sensitive, emotional natures that shrink from the world, but are capable of the greatest sacrifices and measureless heroism when a crisis comes. She was wretchedly clad from the biting spring weather, and she stood with her face turned toward the wall, but through all her shabby integuments there was a proclamation of natural symmetry and even of character. When the warden told me who she was, I went to her and made myself and my mission known. She grasped my hand and with her long cold fingers almost convulsively and sweeping away the veil that had partly concealed her face looked at me so searchingly and imploringly with her sad gray eyes that I started a little.

"O, sir!" she said, "bad as my husband may be, he is innocent of this, and he has two children that he loves. You have come to save him. I feel it."

I patted her hand and tried to say something that was encouragingly non-committal. "We shall see, we shall see. Things are often not as bad as they look. I am going to have a chat with him. In the meantime, save your strength. You are not friendless."

She paid no heed at all to what I said. She was looking at me with those gray eyes very much as if she saw something behind me, and hanging to my hand like a drowning person.

"Yes, yes!" she said, with a sob; "you will save him," and she began to cry convulsively.

I had not the heart to tell her how hopeless it all looked. I wish that I had been spared this so that my judgment could come to the interview with the accused man unperturbed.

"I never knew before that you were a Russian," said the man in the chair. "And you spent fourteen years in Siberia, did you?"

"Yes, sir," answered the barber.

"Would I?" exclaimed the barber.

A "Failed Up Organist."

Miss Francis E. Willard calls herself "a failed up organist," from the circumstances which attended her musical education. She preferred combs and tissue paper in her youth, but finally centered her devotion on a melodeon, which preference did not please her father. He sold the melodeon and replaced it with a piano, but from that day her desire to become a musician ceased.

A Dinner Pill.—Many persons suffer excruciating agony after partaking of a hearty dinner. The food partaken of is like a ball of lead upon the stomach, and instead of being a healthy nutriment it becomes a poison to the system. Dr. Parmelee's Vegetable Pills are wonderful correctives of such troubles. They correct acidity, open the secretions and convert the food partaken of into healthy nutriment. They are just the medicine to take if troubled with Indigestion or Dyspepsia.

HANGED HIMSELF TO A TREE.

Why Duncan McLean Failed to Return From the Bush.

Toronto, March 23.—Duncan McLean, a young man aged 28, was found dead in the bush on Robert Anderson's farm, second concession of York, near York Mills, yesterday morning. Thursday afternoon McLean, who had been employed by Mr. Anderson, went out to work, but did not come home in the evening, and it was thought he had skipped out. Mr. Anderson's boys went back yesterday morning to see if he had done any work, and found him hanging to a tree with his feet touching the ground. He had taken a line with him and strung himself up with it. McLean has friends living in Markham, near Unionville.

Reeve Sylvester and Coroner Armstrong were notified, and will enquire into the case this morning.

The body was taken to York Mills Hotel by Undertaker Wilson of Thornhill. Mr. David Birrell of York Mills telephoned the facts to the friends of the young man last evening.

G.T.R. DISCRIMINATION.

Division Court Suit in Hamilton of Interest to All Shippers.

Hamilton, Marchh 23.—Great interest was taken in the Division Court case of Miles v. Grand Trunk Railway Company, tried before Judge Muir to-day. Miles & Co., coal dealers, brought action against the railway company for the refund of $15.63 alleged to have been overcharged on a consignment of coal. Plaintiffs claim to have been unjustly discriminated against, in order to coerce them into bringing all their coal in by rail instead of partly by water. Mr. Myles testified that his firm brought in 12,000 tons of coal annually by rail and 16,000 tons by water. They had always enjoyed the privilege of 10 cents per ton rebate which is paid to large shippers who have their own terminal facilities, but recently this advantage had been withdrawn from them. Several coal dealers testified that they were still allowed the usual rebate. Judge Muir gave judgment for plaintiff for the amount and costs. He said the company could not discriminate against a firm in this way. The case will be appealed.

G.T.R. RECONSTRUCTION.

Dissatisfied Shareholders Determined to Reorganize the Board.

Montreal, Que., March 23.—The Star special cable from London says: "Mr. Barker's report on the Grand Trunk has given rise to what impartial critics in the city say is the first really serious movement against the present Grand Trunk Board.

"A committee has been formed, representing half a million sterling bonds of the stock, appealing to the other holders to withhold their proxies from the board at the next meeting. At this meeting a motion will be made, 'That the proprietors no longer place their confidence in Sir Henry Tyler, the president, after having read Mr. Barker's disclosures of the disastrous results of the past policy.'

"The committee of dissatisfied shareholders refuse to disclose their case, based upon Mr. Barker's report, by which they intend to fight the board. But they say that they mean to carry it through earnestly, and also state that, having forced the board to accept Mr. Barker's enquiry, they will now reconstruct the board and the policy of the Grand Trunk Railway."

PERU INSURGENTS WIN.

The Government Forces Defeated After Three Days' Hard Fighting.

Barranco, Peru, March 22.—The rebels and Government forces have been engaged in battle in Lima for three days. The attack by the rebels began early Sunday morning. The rebels were commanded by their chief, Pierola, assisted by Durand, Ore and others. Communication with Lima has been cut off, and it is impossible to learn the strength of either force. It is known that there was a heavy cannon and musketry fire on Sunday and Monday. Two distinct explosions were heard Monday, but the place where they occurred is not known. There was a renewal of the firing at 5 o'clock Tuesday morning, and it continued for six hours. The fighting then ceased.

An armistice was arranged for 24 hours to give an opportunity to bury the dead and remove the dead horses from the streets. There was danger of pestilence from the dead bodies in the streets. They were collected in a pile and buried yesterday morning. As a result of three days' fighting more than 1500 combatants were killed and wounded on both sides.

Under the terms of the agreement by which hostilities ceased, President Caceres surrendered the reins of government and will retire to Ancon. Nicolas Pierola, the leader of the revolutionists and formerly president, will go to Chorillos. There was also an immediate re-organization of the Department of Lima.

The new Government has issued an order, releasing all political prisoners. Banks have loaned money and the troops have been paid and the forces disbanded.

Col. Pauli, chief of the revolutionists, directed the operations around Lima. He entered the city with Pierola, Isaias and other chiefs. Pauli was slightly wounded. But few of the revolutionary chiefs were hurt in the battle, but more than 100 of the Cacerist leaders were wounded.

Blinded Him With Lime

Lowell, Mass., March 22.—Yesterday the children of Thomas Richardson raised a white flag inscribed "A.P.A," in their yard. This morning Patrick Conroy threw two handfuls of lime into Richardson's face, saying: "Now, will you take down your —— A.P.A. flag?" Physicians think Richardson will lose the sight of one eye, and that that of the other will be injured. The police are looking for Conroy.

Barley—Trade is quiet and prices unchanged. No. 1 is quoted at 49c, No. 2 at 46c and feed at 43c to 45c.

TO TAX ALL BICYCLES

The Money to be Used For "Better Roads."

A BICYCLE PATH ON HIGHWAYS.

Mr. Stratton Will Introduce a Bill Empowering Municipalities to License All Cycles and Compel Wheelmen to Carry Gongs and Lamps.

Toronto, March 23.—Cyclists all over the province will be deeply interested in a bill which Mr. Stratton of West Peterboro yesterday placed on the notice paper of the Local Legislature. The most important clause in the bill is one which declares all cycles to be carriages, under the regulation of municipal councils, and permitting municipalities to license all such machines provided that the moneys obtained from the taxation are applied to improving roads and making pathways for persons using wheels. The bill also compels cyclists to carry lamps "during the period between one hour after sunset and one hour after sunrise." In addition it contains these clauses:

"Upon overtaking or meeting any street car, cart or carriage, or any horse, mule or other beast of burden, or any foot passenger, being on or proceeding along the carriageway or on any crossing, every such person shall within a reasonable distance from and before passing such street car, etc., by sounding a bell, gong or other alarm, give audible and sufficient warning of the approach of the carriage, such alarm to be rung not less than five seconds from any street or crossing, or before passing any street car or other vehicle.

"Any person summarily convicted of offending against the regulations made by this section shall, for each and every such offense, forfeit and pay any sum not exceeding ten dollars.

"The council of any city or town may, with the consent of any municipality within ten miles thereof, spend money in making paths or roads in or through such municipality especially adapted for the use of such machines."

The Conservatives are opposed to the pass legislation which the Patrons will ask for and there is every probability that the bill will be fought on the Government side as well. Mr. Marter's followers argue that if such a bill were passed it would cast a reflection on both the transportation companies and the members who have held railroad passes in the past. They repudiate the idea that the granting of free transportation in any way prejudices the attitude of members of the Legislature and contend that any man who could be affected by the paltry consideration of a few rides gratis has no right to act as a representative of the people. They say that legislators have never been approached by railroad corporations in the past and they scout the idea that they will be in the future.

The House only sat for an hour yesterday and the business was purely of a routine character.

A bill to prevent the docking of horses, introduced by Mr. Howland, was read a first time. The bill provides that any person convicted of cutting the bone of the tail of any horse, or of causing or knowingly permitting such cutting, shall be subject to a penalty of not less than $100 or more than $300, or to imprisonment not exceeding one year.

Mr. Meacham brought in a bill to amend the Registry Act to compel registrars to apply stamps to all instruments registered at their office, showing the amount received for such registration, the stamps to be supplied by the Provincial Secretary.

Mr. Awrey introduced a bill to apply the provisions of the Assessment Act respecting farm lands in towns and villages to cities as well, and also to make clear what is intended by certain expressions in the act.

These bills passed the second reading: To amend the Ditches and Watercourses Act—Mr. Gibson, Huron; to amend the Assessment Act—Mr. Reid; to amend the Municipal Act—Mr. Reid; to amend the Act respecting Fees of Counsel and other officers in the Administration of Justice—Mr. Davis.

The House went into committee on and reported four private bills.

Mr. Richardson's bill to amend the High School Act relieving County Councils from paying the shares now required of them for the maintenance of high schools in towns separated from the county was lost on a division, the bill receiving no support outside the mover.

Replying to Dr. Ryerson, the Minister of Education said that the cost of the departmental examinations in 1894 was $30,345, made up as follows: Examiners, $18,748; printing, etc., $4322; clerical service, $7275. The amount received in fees from candidates was $29,489, leaving a deficit of $856.

The bill to authorize the corporation of Hamilton to construct a road upon their waterworks lands, in the townships of Barton and Saltfleet, which was opposed by toll-road interests, was thrown out by the Private Bills Committee.

The Municipal Committee will hold its first meeting on Monday morning.

PUT GASOLINE IN THE KETTLE.

The Kettle Exploded, Burning a Child to Death.

Detroit, March 23.—A fatal gasoline explosion occurred this morning at No. 265 Third-street, where Mrs. Edwards and her son Robert, aged 2 years, lived with the former's mother, Mrs. Reading. Mrs. Reading left a two-quart pail filled with gasoline on the kitchen table. While her back was turned Mrs. Edwards came into the room. Supposing that the pail contained water, she carried it to the stove, raised the lid of the tea kettle and poured the gasoline into the kettle. An instant later it exploded, rending the kettle and throwing the blazing liquid all over the room. Little Robert was standing close to the stove, and was drenched from head to foot. Although he was blazing from head to foot, his mother succeeded in tearing off his clothes and smothered the flames, but not until the child was fatally burned. Mrs. Edwards was terribly burned about the arms, hands and face.

Hudson Bay Fur Sales.

London, March 22.—The Hudson Bay fur sales this year have been more favorable to the sellers than in 1894. Several grades showed enormous advances of prices. Marten was doubled in value and white fox brought 150 per cent. more. The rise of marten was owing to the popularity of the collarette made of a single skin. Nearly 105,300 of these skins were sold. The company must have netted £40,000 by them alone.

MUST SAY YES OR NO

Manitoba's Position Touching the Remedial Order.

OPINIONS OF THE POLITICIANS.

Winnipeg, March 23.—Everybody in Winnipeg is now engaged privately and through the newspapers giving their views and opinions on the Remedial Order in the school case, and nothing else is talked of. Premier Greenway was seen by your correspondent to-day, but wanted to wait until the order came before he gave an official interview.

The Premier, in reply to the question, admitted that if the Provincial Government refuses to do anything—will not accept the Remedial Order, that is to say—and submits that reply to Ottawa, then the Dominion Government, according to the Privy Council's decision, becomes vested with supreme authority to deal with the matter, and jurisdiction passes from the Provincial Government altogether. But, added Mr. Greenway significantly, "the Dominion Government has not passed the act yet."

The correspondent then put this question: "Supposing the Dominion Government passes an act restoring to Catholics their former rights, and that on appeal to the country the Liberals are elected to power it would seem that, according to the late decision of the Privy Council, the Dominion Government would not have power to repeal the act so passed by the Bowell Government?"

"Yes, they would consider it a part of the constitution," said the Premier, "but that has nothing to do with us. Manitoba can repeal her acts if the Government of Manitoba consider it advisable to do so."

"Will the Government entertain the idea of a compromise?"

The Premier answered there is nothing to do but to accept or reject a certain proposition. The Dominion Government has said: "We wish you to do so and so. Evidently there is no room for a suggestion here. Acceptance or rejection is all that is necessary. If the Bowell Ministry find Manitoba determined not to entertain the terms of the order they may possibly modify them before going to extremes and passing the act. That is to say, they may send up another modified order. Really one can't say what they will do down there. Perhaps they have no idea themselves."

Attorney-General Sifton was asked: "What do you think of the Remedial Order?"

"We expected that if the Remedial Order was made it would probably be such as to direct the restoration of those privileges that were taken away from the Catholics by the legislation of the Local Government in 1890. The fact that the order has been made makes it a straight issue now between the old and the new school systems."

"Supposing that the Dominion Parliament passes that order and makes it law?"

"The Dominion Parliament has no jurisdiction until we make our decision."

"When will that decision be given?"

"Can't say, I'm sure."

Hon. R. Watson and Hon. J. D. Cameron emphatically declared that their Government would not accept the order, and would consent to no compromise.

Mr. R. P. Roblin, ex-leader of the Opposition in the Manitoba Legislature, gave this statement: "I believe the Remedial Order is right and just, irrespective of its effect on political parties. I had to do with many matters and things connected with the Greenway Government in their early history. I accompanied Mr. Joseph Martin and J. W. Dafoe, now editor of The Montreal Herald, to a meeting at St. Francois Xavier, where Mr. Burke was appealing to the electorate for his return. We were authorized by Greenway and the leaders of the Liberal party to say to the French and Roman Catholic people of that division if they would vote for our candidate, Mr. Francis, who was an Englishman and a Protestant, and against Mr. Burke, who was a Frenchman and a Roman Catholic, that their schools and language would not be interfered with. Mr. Martin made this pledge, the people took his word, elected the Englishman and Protestant and defeated the Frenchman and Catholic. The Harrison Government was thereby defeated, Mr. Greenway being called upon to take office. Now, with these facts, I think any just man cannot help but think the people who have been treated so unjustly deserve redress."

Mr. John Ewart, Q.C., who appeared for the Catholics before the Privy Council, in an interview, was asked: "Suppose that the Dominion Parliament passes a law and Manitoba refused to recognize it?"

"If Manitoba refused to recognize the sunshine," responded Mr. Ewart, "it would be nothing but a childish performance; if Manitoba refuses to recognize Dominion legislation upon a subject within the jurisdiction of Parliament, it would have no more effect upon the law than upon the sunshine. Sunshine and Dominion laws require no recognition from anybody or any legislature."

"Did you observe that a Montreal lawyer is said to have stated that the New Brunswick minority have as strong, probably a stronger case, than the Manitoba minority?"

"Yes," was the reply, "that is one of the many instances of lack of knowledge of the situation. New Brunswick never had a Separate school system, either before the Union or after it. The Dominion Parliament has not, therefore, according to the constitution, any jurisdiction with reference to education in that province. No rights were ever interfered with in New Brunswick. It is absurd, therefore, to say that the New Brunswick minority have as strong a case as the Manitoba minority. The New Brunswick minority have no case at all, as was held by the same Privy Council that declared that Manitoba had."

Belgian Miners Strike and Riot.

Brussels, March 22.—The miners of the Liege district struck to-day, in accordance with the resolution passed at their meeting yesterday. They defied the police to enter the road leading to the Esperance colliery, and when the police tried to advance, attacked them with stones and revolvers. The police fired back and wounded several miners.

Sugar and Arsenic at Auction.

Philadelphia, March 22.—Nearly a million pounds of beet root sugar mingled with which there is a quantity of arsenic, said to be sufficient to poison the entire population of Philadelphia, are to be sold to satisfy the Government. The sale is to take place on Friday morning at a bonded warehouse, where the sugar part of the cargo of the German steamer Remus is stored. No mention is made of the fact that the sugar to be sold is mixed with arsenic, but an analysis shows the presence of a large quantity of the drug.

The cargo, which has been abandoned to the Government, was damaged in transit across the Atlantic, and was mixed with a quantity of arsenic that was also in the ship's hold.

NO PAYMENT OF MEMBERS

A Motion To This End Carried in the Commons

BY A MAJORITY OF EIGHTEEN.

Sir William Harcourt Approved of the Proposal As to the Logical Outcome of Extending the Suffrage—Mr. Goschen Alleged That Pay Would Taint Public Life.

London, March 23.—Mr. Alfred Webb, member for West Waterford, asked if it were true that all holders of United States securities must send to the United States authorities returns of their total income before April 15, under a penalty of 50 per cent. additional income tax.

Sir Edward Grey said that the announcement which the Foreign Office had caused to be published in The Gazette of March 19 gave the law as it was. As to details, enquirers should communicate with Her Majesty's consul in New York.

Mr. C. E. H. Vincent asked if Great Britain has asked any reparation from Nicaragua for her infraction of British territorial rights in the Mosquito reserve and her arbitrary action in regard to the British vice-consul.

Sir Edward Grey said that communication had been had with Nicaragua through the representative accredited by that country to the United Kingdom regarding the arrest of the vice-consul at Bluefields and the imprisonment and expulsion from Nicaragua of certain British subjects last August.

Until Nicaragua's reply was received he thought it would be undesirable to make any public statement of the terms of Great Britain's communication.

Sir Edward Grey, Under Foreign Secretary, announced that the Government had learned officially that all of the Armenian ecclesiastics now in prison would be brought to Constantinople and released upon taking an oath guaranteeing their future good behavior.

William Allan (Radical) moved that the members receive payment for their service. He reminded the House that a similar resolution was passed in the session of 1893, with the Government's approval, although no subsequent action had been taken.

Sir H. Stafford Northcote, Conservative for Exeter, offered an amendment to the effect that no further burdens should be imposed on the nation.

Sir William Harcourt, Chancellor of the Exchequer, said the payment of members was the logical outcome of the extension of the suffrage. The House was now too much of one class. He repudiated the suggestion that the payment of members would lead to corruption and election of unfit men. Democracy might be trusted, he said, to prevent such evils. The proposal was wise and expedient, and its execution would conduce to the honor of the House. He promised to advance it in every possible way.

Mr. Goschen opposed the motion. He was proud to be acquainted with the genuine labor members now in the House, he said, and he would welcome more, but the payment of members would lower the status of Parliament and taint the purity of public life, without increasing the number of workingmen in the Commons.

Sir H. Stafford Northcote's amendment was lost and Mr. Allan's motion was passed by a vote of 176 to 158.

Courtney for Speaker

London, March 22.—The Daily News says there is every reason to believe that after all Leonard Courtney, the advanced Liberal Commoner, will be the next Speaker of the House. "His candidacy," says The News, "gains in favor daily."

BRITISH DEFEAT IN INDIA.

The Khan of Jandol Attacks a Detachment and Is Victorious.

Calcutta, March 23.—The trouble in Chitral, or Little Cashgar, on the south slope of the Hindoo Kois, is on the eve of renewal. Umra, the Khan of Jandol, learning that a British expedition was coming to expel him from the territory which he invaded a few months ago, when he defeated the forces of the Mehtar of Chitral, recently collected 2000 mules to convey provisions to a strong fort where he intended to fortify himself against the British.

In the meantime Sher Afzul, uncle of the Rajah of Chitral, who was murdered last winter by his brother, Ameer Ulmulk, captured the town of Chitral and immediately sent a propitiatory offering in the shape of treasure to Umra, hoping by this token of friendship to avert further attacks from that chief. The Chitral troops recognize Sher Afzul as their ruler in preference to Ameer Ulmulk, who proclaimed himself Rajah.

News was received here to-day of the defeat of a Sikh companyy under Lieut. Ross by Chitralis. Lieut. Ross and 60 Sikhs were marching to reinforce the troops at Reshun. The natives who were behind breastworks near Karagh fusilladed them and forced them to retreat. They followed the company closely and eventually hemmed them in on all sides. There were about 1000 natives all firing steadily upon the Sikhs. Ross, 46 Sikh soldiers and eitht camp followers were left dead on the field. The rest escaped.

Another relief force will be started for Reshun with all haste.

A UNIQUE FATALITY.

Piece of a Broken Needle Embedded in a Child's Brain

Vinita, I.T., March 22.—Mrs. James Vaughan was sewing on her machine this afternoon, when a needle snapped and a part of it stuck in the table. She put in a new needle and continued her work. About 10 minutes later she noticed that her 2-year-old daughter sat rather quiet on the floor and called to her, but received no answer. She picked the child up and found that she was dead. A physician found that the cause of death was a small part of the needle, which had struck the eye and penetrated the brain.

Rev. Alex. McNab to Return to Canada

Omaha, March 22.—Rev. Alex. MacNab, for the last four years rector of St. Mathias Protestant Episcopal parish here, has resigned to become canon missionary of the Diocese of Toronto. Mr. MacNab was ordained in Toronto, and for 20 years was rector of the St. Barnabas Church, St. Catharines, Ont. The resignation takes effect on June 1.

The medical journals are discussing the interesting subject of bicycling, and they agree that when a man once falls a victim to the bicycle mania he does not recover until the period of three years has elapsed. There are exceptions to this rule, and these exceptions are those men and women who take up bicycling as a means of recovering and conserving their health. These people practice the exercise temperately and modestly; they are to be met with in the byways rather than upon the highway; they do not seek to acquire speed, and they unite with the physical delights of the exercise the keen appreciation of those beauties of nature which are presented in the course of their excursions into the country.—Chicago Record.

LOAN TO THE SEALERS.

An Answer from Britain Daily Expected.

Ottawa, Ont., March 23.—His Excellency yesterday signed the proclamation addressed to our beloved and faithful the senators of the Dominion and the members elected to serve in the House of Commons of our said Dominion, and to each and every one of you commanding, and by tenor of these presents enjoining you, and each of you, and all others in this behalf interested, that on Thursday, April 18 next, at our city of Ottawa, aforesaid, personally you be and appear for the despatch of business, to treat, do, act and conclude upon those things which in our said Parliament of Canada, by common council of our said Dominion, may by favor of God be ordained.

An answer is expected in a few days to the petition forwarded recently to the Imperial Government on behalf of the Canadian sealers, requesting a loan to cover the amount of the damages by illegal seizure in Behring Sea, which the United States Congress has refused to settle by the payment of $425,000.

"It is interesting," said a fisheries official to-day, "in connection with the refusal of Congress to acquiesce in the United States Government's proposal to settle our claim, to note how the grounds upon which Congress based its action square with the principle maintained by the United States itself in making similar claims against Great Britain. Senator Morgan opposed payment on the ground that the damages were purely prospective. In 1878 some Americans attempted to catch fish in Fortune Bay, Newfoundland, on Sunday. They were prevented by the natives and entered claims against Great Britain for this interference, although Sunday fishing was against the local law. The claims were based wholly on prospective profits, but Great Britain settled them off-hand by the payment of $75,000. The American Government made a similar claim last year because a sturgeon line, alleged to have been set in American waters, Lake Erie, was destroyed by a Canadian fishery officer. The claim was based on the prospective catch for the whole season. It turned out, however, that the line was set in Canadian waters and nothing was allowed. Otherwise the United States would have insisted on our paying the piper."

Captain Spain, Commandant of the Fisheries protection service, leaves for Owen Sound in a few days to make arrangements for getting the Government cruiser "Petrel," which was wintering at that port, into commission. She will leave port about April 15 and be engaged most of the season in Lakes Huron and Erie. The Dolphin, which is wintering at Port Dover, will go into commission about the same time and will be employed for the season in Georgian Bay.

It appears that the recent trip of Surveyor Ogilvie and his party to Alaska was far more arduous than newspaper reports have mentioned. Nearly all the members of the party were reduced to skeletons. From what your correspondent learns, the Taku route to Yukon, which Mr. Ogilvie went to survey, does not appear to be a very suitable one for the purpose of getting men and supplies into Alaska country.

Ottawa Board of Works has decided to call for new tenders for asphalt paving of Sparks and Bank-streets, Messrs. Heney & Smith having decided not to accept the contract awarded them. Evidently they realized that their prices were far too low.

Advices have been received from the High Commissioner that dried codfish from Canada, heretofore admitted into Cuba and Porto Rico free of customs duty, has been placed on the tariff of those islands at a minimum rate, that is, $1.80 in Cuba and 90c in Porto Rico per 100 killograms, gross, and that these rates apply to all fish entering those ports after the 1st inst.

Fighting for the State Capitol and State University.

St. Paul, March 22.—St. Paul will formally make an offer to the Legislature of Como Park as a suitable site for the state university. This offer will be backed by a bonus of $1,000,000 from the citizens of St. Paul. Como Park contains 300 acres of land and the property is worth $4,000,000. This action is to be taken in retaliation for the action of Minneapolis in offering Loring Park as a site for the state capitol. An amusing possibility of the whole affair is that the Legislature will accept both propositions, that to remove the state capitol from St. Paul to Minneapolis and that to remove the state university from Minneapolis to St. Paul.

A Tax on Bachelors to Maintain An Old Maid's Home

Springfield, Ill., March 22.—A bill to tax bachelors and establish an "Old Maids' Home" when the tax fund shall have reached $50,000 was introduced in the House to-day by Representative Walleck. The bill defines bachelors as single men of 32 years or over who have never been married, and exempts men who have reached 65 who are physically unfit, or who can prove to a board of unmarried women over 60 years that they have proposed marriage at least three times to marriageable females and been refused each time.

Paine's Celery Compound Restores the Victim to Perfect Health and Strength.

'Tis the Spring Medicine that Renews and Invigorates Life.

Mr. Porter Taylor, well known in Musquodoboit, Halifax Co., N.S., suffered intensely for a time from a severe strain in the region of the kidneys. His pains and agonies were terrible for three days.

Mr. Taylor, a year before his mishap, had used Paine's Celery Compound, and was thoroughly well aware of its healing virtues. He immediately procured a supply of the strength-giving medicine, and found himself cured and quite strong after the use of two bottles.

Every message of this kind should prove comforting and interesting to all who suffer from disease and general weakness. This is the time to put the system in healthy condition, and no medicine known to the medical world can so well do the work as Paine's Celery Compound.

Mr. Taylor, thankful for his speedy release from suffering, writes as follows:—

"I wish to inform you as to results received from your valuable medicine, Paine's Celery Compound. I strained my back across the kidneys while lifting a heavy piece of plaster rock. I fell to the ground like one shot down, and it was with the most excruciating pain that I crawled to my house. I fainted twice before I reached my door. I got to bed, and there suffered untold agony for three days, and could not move without the greatest pain. Knowing what Paine's Celery Compound had done for me a year before, my wife went to our merchant, Mr. Edgar Archibald, and procured a supply. I used two bottles and feel as strong and as well as ever before. I wish you continued success in your work."

QUERY.

Is direct taxation, as under Mr. Laurier's present policy of "Free Trade as it is in England," or independent taxation, as under the N. P., the easiest on the poor man? The answer is obvious. Under the direct system of taxation there is no escape from paying. Under the indirect system, the tax payer may lessen his taxes materially by refraining from buying articles which are taxed.

The delicious qualities of freshness and moistness are given to every cake that Dr. Price's Baking Powder leavens.

THE SCHOOL QUESTION.

In dealing with the Manitoba School question, the Government have pursued a straightforward course—such a course, indeed, as was to be expected from men of broad view, who disregard all considerations other than the general welfare and the best interests of the country as a whole. It is not to be expected that their action will be unanimously approved by all the electors, but we believe that a vast majority of our people will sustain them in fearlessly discharging the duty which was virtually required of them by the judgment of the Imperial Privy Council.

The Globe, which a short time ago declared against interference with Manitoba, had nothing to say with reference to the subject immediately following the issue of the remedial order. Has our contemporary received new light, as it did in the even more disturbing Riel case, when it turned the most awkward journalistic somersault on record? A very short time will tell.

The Mail and Empire, on the other hand, discusses the subject in so moderate a manner that we quote herewith its utterances in full:—The expected determination of the Governor General-in-Council on the subject of the Manitoba School Act, is made public to-day. A very complete statement of the case precedes the decision. It is pointed out that after the admission of Manitoba a system of Separate Schools was created. This system was abolished in 1890, and an appeal for the disallowance of the law destroying it was at once entered. The question of the validity of the statute meanwhile came before the courts, with the result that the Judicial Committee declared the law intra vires, seeing that it did not remove the rights or privileges enjoyed before the union. This step having been taken, the point as to the right to appeal to the Governor-General-in-Council, in virtue of the educational clauses of the Manitoba Act, arose. In anticipation of the issue, Mr. Blake, as far back as 1890, proposed that where such an appeal was contemplated, the right to prosecute it should be determined by the courts. This proposition became the law of the land in the following session. Under the new statute the appeal received the consideration, first, of the Supreme Court, and afterwards of the Judicial Committee. The latter tribunal, in its judgment, which of course governs, ruled that an appeal to Ottawa could certainly be made. It said:—"Bearing in mind the circumstances "which existed in 1870, it does not ap"pear to their Lordship, an extravagant "notion that in creating a Legislature for "the province with limited powers, it "should have been thought expedient, in "case either Catholics or Protestants be"came preponderant, and rights which "had come into existence under different "circumstances were interfered with, to "give the Dominion Parliament power to "legislate upon matters of education so "far as was necessary to protect the Pro"testant or Catholic minority, as the case "may be." It having been decided that there was an appeal, the next consideration was whether any rights had been affected. The Judicial Committee, in order to reach a conclusion, made a careful examination of the old system and the new, and decided as a result that, "in view of this compari"son, it does not seem impossible to say "that the rights and privileges of the "Roman Catholic minority in relation "to education which existed prior to "1890 have not been affected." The substance of the judgment was, in a word, that "the Governor-General-in-Council could hear an appeal, that the appeal in this case was well founded, and that the course to be pursued "must be "determined by the authorities to whom "it has been committed by the statute." Acting under the decision of the highest tribunal, the Governor-in-Council has heard the complaint, and has remitted the case as required by law, with accompanying suggestions, to the Manitoba Government for action. Failing action in that quarter Parliament, of course, will be free to take cognizance of the question, and to legislate upon it. It seems reasonable, however, to suppose that Mr. Greenway may now remove the issue from the Dominion arena. Mr. Laurier said in Parliament two years ago that if it could be proven that rights or privileges had been taken from the minority he would himself appeal to Mr. Greenway to do what is proper in the premises. An excellent opportunity for this appeal now present itself. It would be far more honorable in Mr. Laurier to carry out his promise than to continue his maledictions upon Protestants and Orangemen via Tarte, and his attacks upon Roman Catholics by way of Martin.

Death.

Herman Merivale.

Miscall me not! men have miscalled me much,
Have given hard names and harder thoughts to me,
Reviled and evilly entreated me,
Built me strange temples as an unknown god,
Then called me idol, devil, unclean thing,
And to rude insult bowed my godhead down.
Miscall me not! for men have marred my form,
And in the earthborn grossness of their thoughts
Have coldly modelled me of their own clay,
Then fear to look on that themselves have made.
Miscall me not! ye know not what I am.
But ye shall see me face to face, and know,
I take all sorrows from the sorrowful,
And teach the joyful what it is to joy.
I gather in my land-locked harbor's clasp
The shattered vessels of a vexed world,
And even the tiniest ripple upon life
Is, to that calm sublime, as tropic storm.
When other leechcraft fails the breaking brain,
I, only, own the anodyne to still
Its eddies into visionless repose.
The face distorted with life's latest pang,
I smooth, in passing, as with an angel's wing,
And from beneath the quiet eyelids steal
The hidden glory of the eyes, to give
A new and nobler beauty to the west
Belie me not! the plagues that walk the earth.
The wasting pain, the sudden agony,
Famine and War and Pestilence, and all
The terrors that have darkened round my name,
These are the works of Life, they are not mine;
Vex when I tarry, vanish when I come,
Instantly melting into perfect peace,
As at his word, whose master spirit I am,
The troubled waters slept on Galilee.
Tender I am, not cruel; when I take
The shape most hard to human eyes, and pluck
The little baby blossom yet unblown.
'Tis but to graft it on a kindlier stem,
And leaping o'er the perilous years of growth
Unwept of sorrow, and unscathed of wrong,
Clothe it at once with rich maturity.
'Tis I that give a soul to memory;
For round the follies of the bad I throw
The mantle of a kind, forgetfulness;
But canonized in dear Love's calendar,
I sanctify the good for evermore.
Miscall me not! my generous fulness lends
Home to the homeless, to the friendless friends;
To the starved babe the mother's tender breast,
Wealth to the poor, and to the restless—rest!

IF SICK HEADACHE IS MISERY, what are Carter's Little Liver Pills if they will positively cure it? People who have used them speak frankly of their worth. They are small and easy to take.

—Mr. John Kerr of Minto Township, a popular young farmer, was killed by a falling tree.

THERE IS NO ONE ARTICLE IN THE LINE OF medicines that gives so large a return for the money as a good porous strengthening plaster, such as Carter's Smart Weed and Belladonna Backache Plasters.

But one opinion prevails through the world and that is most strongly in favor of Perry Davis PAIN-KILLER, that no other article ever attained so wide spread popularity. 25 cents buys a big bottle.

TRULY ASTONISHING.—Miss Annette N. Moen, Fountain, Minn., says: "Ayer's Cherry Pectoral has had a wonderful effect in curing my brother's children of a severe and dangerous cold. It was truly astonishing how speedily they found relief after taking this preparation."

Cholera and all summer complaints are so quick in their action that the cold hand of death is upon the victims before they are aware that danger is near. If attacked do not delay in getting the proper medicine. Try a dose of Dr. J. D. Kellogg's Dysentery Cordinal, and you will get immediate relief. It acts with wonderful rapidity and never fails to effect a cure.

BICYCLE RIDING.

A Good Exercise When Properly Regulated.

The use of the bicycle as a means of exercise ranks, in my opinion, as foremost among the beneficial forms of exercise that may be taken, says a writer in The International Journal of Surgery. It ranks equally with horseback riding, rowing, swimming, and is superior to walking; besides this it is a means of rapid transportation and forces the rider into the open air. It is an active exercise that can be proportioned to the weakest and the strongest. He who desires vigorous exercise can obtain it. No one can ride a bicycle and not have his thoughts taken out of himself, and at the same time have his attention pleasantly engaged. The exercise is fairly distributed over the body, affecting principally the legs, the arms, and secondarily those great systems, the cardiac, glandular and nervous.

After a careful study I believe the following to be its effect in health: Under moderate, sensible use the perspiration is not increased, and the blood by these means and the alternate contractions of the muscles receives a larger proportion of oxygen and is more evenly distributed over the body, preventing congestions. The effete materials in the tissues are rapidly removed, and oxidation, which is essential to health, is more rapidly performed. Upon the stomach and the intestines these is a secondary but noticeable effect, viz.: increased digestive power with increased capacity for food. This in its turn enriches the blood. The increased circulation of the blood above mentioned gives additional material out of which to manufacture gastric juice. Upon the liver its effect is not so noticeable, though the writer is inclined to believe it is similar to that of the stomach, viz.: increased functional power.

Upon the muscular system it has direct effect, increasing their size, their hardness and power. Secondarily it trains the great spinal centers to perform complex movements and acts as a balance to over spinal action, gives increased co-ordination with lessened expenditure of nervous force. The acts become automatic. Its effect upon the brain is of great benefit. It develops the motor area of the brain and in it permits of a combination of intricate muscular acts. Again, take a man who has exercised his intellectual faculties to the utmost; has, as a consequence, increased circulation in the intellectual area of his brain.

By means of his muscular improvements and by bringing into play the muscular and emotive centers of his brain he changes the force and direction of the cerebral blood current, relieving and resting the hard-worked intellectual centers. And, lastly, it gives that elasticity and carriage, that solidity of gait, which bespeak the healthy individual, while his expression, animal spirits and rosy complexion are in very great contrast to the uncertain movements, sickly smile, pale, pasty, greasy-looking skin of the recluse and overworked man.

There is one thing against which I wish to take an unquestioned and decided stand—that is, the incorrect position assumed by many riders. This position is the resultant of a compressed vanity, or lack of knowledge, and has caused much unfavorable comment to be bestowed upon this silent steed.

The correct position is that of a modified position of the soldier—a position of command, grace and perfect muscular control. The rider should have his handle bars so adjusted that when he sits perfectly erect the palm of the hand rests upon the bar without tension upon the arm muscles. The arms should be comfortably extended, and the trunk as far as possible held erect without being stiff. The legs can then be extended with comfort, and without interference with the return circulation from the lower limbs. If one will stand perfectly erect, the arms close to the body, and the forearm flexed at right angles, and the lower limbs separated about eight inches at the heels, he will understand thoroughly what I mean by a modified position of the soldier.

Handling Grain by Air Pressure.

A novel machine has been devised for the discharge of cargoes of grain in bulk, the principle applied being the removal of the grain by the creation of a strong current of air. This machine, as described, is erected on the barge, which is placed alongside the ship or craft employed on the occasion, and to the machine is attached one end of each of six 5-inch flexible pipes, the other end of each of which is carried into the hold of the vessel and immersed a few inches in the grain. The engine is then started and the grain immediately flows at the rate of 100 tons an hour through the pipes into receivers, whence it falls by gravity into weighing machines, and then again by gravity into the craft by which it is to be conveyed to its destination. A machine of this kind, having a capacity of 100 tons per hour, has for some time past been in successful operation at one of the London docks; the six pipes are worked together, but, when necessary, more or less of them can be shut off, the rate of discharge thus being reduced, though not in proportion to the number of pipes detached; with one pipe only in use the power exercised carries thirty-eight tons an hour through it.

A Country With One Cannon.

The rulers of the miniature republic of Andorra decided recently that the country should possess a cannon. Krupp was ordered to manufacture one of modern type. The great gun arrived at its mountain destination a short time ago, and was placed on the highest point in the "country." A day was appointed to try the cannon, which was able to send a ball eighteen kilometers. Just as the two artillerymen of Andorra were ready to fire, it occurred to one of the citizens that the shot might cause some trouble. The territory of the republic of Andorra does not extend over more than six kilometers. To direct the shot, therefore, toward the surrounding mountains would be the same as firing at France or Italy, as the ball would necessarily fall on the territory of one of these countries. It was then decided to shoot the ball in the air, but someone suggested that it would endanger the lives of too many people in its descent, and possibly bore a hole in the republic of Andorra. Good counsel prevailed, and the two artillerymen were commanded to unload the gun.

Other Sources Of Profit.

One running a dairy farm can have other sources of profit beside butter and pigs, for his manure will enable him to enrich his best land so as to grow heavy crops of such things as his market calls for and as will give the best profit.

Burdette on Gymnasiums.

Boys generally get their due quota of exercise; at the same time they can never get to much, if not of too severe nature and taken with some measure of moderation, writes Ellen Le Garde in a valuable article entitled "A Gymnasium at Home," in the January Ladies' Home Journal. Burdette says in reply to the interrogation regarding his acts: "If a boy again I would spend a great deal of time in the gymnasium, I am a strong believer in athletic scholarship and gymnastic training. The ventilation in my gymnasium was perfect. The air came in with a free sweep from sun rise to set. There was sunshine all the way from Heaven in the clearings and graceful shadows under the trees. I don't know so much about gymnasiums hedged in with walls and roof, and ventilated by machinery, but I know they are better than none. Live out-of-doors all you can, my boy. Walk a heap. The open air, the free air and the sunshine are as good as the exercise—better." This advice should apply to girls as well.

HUMBLED HER LADYSHIP.

The Marquis of Kildare and His Beautiful Wife—A Scene.

About six or seven years ago the Duke of Leinster, whose death was recorded recently, then Lord George Fitzgerald, visited America. He left New York in January, 1887, after having made himself thoroughly popular by his dignified mildness of manner and genial sociability. His wife now the dowager Duchess, was easily the most distinguished woman in London drawing-rooms. She was considered when she came out in London as Lady Hermoine Duncombe to have had the most perfect complexion ever seen, and Lord George fell in love with her at first sight. It was said that Lady Feversham, his mother, had never allowed her daughter to use water on her face and that the beauty had been brought up to perform her ablutions in milk. After she became the Marchioness of Kildare strange stories went about of quarrels between the fair bride and her lord. At last matters came to a crisis. The Marquis was a man of quiet habits and loved his home. The Marchioness preferred the butterfly amusements and the homage paid to her charms in the ball-room.

She refused to leave a diplomatic ball from which her husband wished to take her. The noble Marquis went home alone in high dudgeon, ordered the lights out and the doors locked. When the beautiful Marchioness returned to the ducal household she rang and knocked without obtaining entrance, till, at last, exhausted and overcome, the proud beauty prostrated herself in ball dress and diamonds on the cold doorsteps of her home in a fit of weeping. There she was found by the Marquis, who thought the lesson had been sufficiently impressed. Great was the talk in London society which followed this episode in the life of the lady whose pictures have adorned every photograph window in London.

About the House.

In buying towels the housewife will remember that large towels are considered to be the most economical purchase.

A box or drawer in which are placed knives, forks and spoons is to be avoided, as the constant turning wears the most prominent parts very quickly.

Silverware should never be put in the bottom of a dish pan and allowed to grind around till the white dishes are washed. The pieces lose their plating and beauty very soon. Wiping them by handfuls is not a good plan for the same reason.

At the linen counters nowadays are sold scrub cloths of sleazily-woven hemp and cotton, which sell for about $1 a dozen. Another useful cotton cloth that can be bought is the so-called chamois dust cloth, which is a firm close-woven yellow cotton flannel, that looks like its namesake, and excels it as a remover of dust.

It is a good plan when cooking, to keep a pan of water handy, and wash up pans, cups, spoons and everything that one gets through using while preparing a meal; they are much more easily cleaned if washed up at once than if allowed to dry, and save a great deal of time after the meal is over.

The best thing, perhaps, in which to keep silverware is a canton flannel or green baize bag or case. This should be of sufficient width to accommodate the various articles, and stitched into narrow pockets, with suitable openings at the top. Into these pockets the several pieces of silver are slipped, each of itself; the whole is then rolled and tied, and may be put away in some dry drawer or closet till wanted for use.

GREAT ENGINEERING SCHEME.

A Canal Project Which Outranks Suez and Manchester.

The canal that is to unite the North Sea with the Baltic—a work conceived and begun by Bismarck—is said to excel, from an engineering view, the Suez, Corinth and Manchester Canals, says the Marine Record, while its commercial and strategic importance fairly entitles it to rank as "the Suez Canal of Europe." The canal will extend from Holtenau, on the Kieler Fjord, to Brunsbuttel, on the River Elbe, a distance of 60 miles. At Grunthal, the watershed between the Elbe and Eider is passed and over the gigantic cutting, at a height of 130 feet above the water surface, has been built a railway bridge with a span of 470 feet. At normal water level the canal will be nine fathoms deep, and it will have a width of 22 yards on the bottom, and of 36 yards on the surface at lowest tide. It will be free from locks and sluices along its entire course, but at each end a double gate will guard against dangerous tides. The work will be completed in a few months, the construction time to be seven years, and the cost will be about $40,000,000.

Swordfish Exploits.

The Liverpool Mercury gave a report from Captain Harwood, of the brigantine Fortunate, from Rio Grande, to the effect that the vessel, while at sea, was struck and shaken by a swordfish. After discharging the cargo at Liverpool the hull was examined and the sword of the fish found, broken off even with the outside planking. The fish had driven his sword completely through the four-inch planking, leaving eight inches of the blade projecting within the vessel. The swordfish is allied to the mackerel, which it resembles in form, and is a swift swimmer. The sword is a most formidable blade, consisting of a strong, straight bone, sharp and flat, projecting horizontally from the nose, of which it is a prolongation. The swordfish is found in considerable numbers of the island of Martha's Vineyard, coast of Massachusetts, at this season of the year. Its flesh is considered excellent food by many persons, and the annual catch is quite large. The ordinary length of the body of the fish at full growth is 14 feet, and its sword, 6 feet or 20 feet in all. Swordfish have been unusually plentiful off this coast this summer. The fishermen hunt them with harpoons, spearing them from the decks of small sail vessels. In July last the fishing smack Mattie and Lena arrived at Stonington, Conn., after a four days' trip about Block Island, with sixteen large swordfish, averaging 300 pounds each, and an exciting story of a struggle for life between Henry Cheesebro, one of the crew, and a wounded and maddened swordfish. Cheesebro had harpooned a big fish off Montauk Point, and, after waiting the usual length of time, got into a small boat to bring the apparently exhausted fish to the vessel. As soon as Cheesebro approached him and commenced hauling in the line the fish awoke from his torpor and started to battle for his life. He began operations by diving so as to spear Cheesebro's boat on coming to the surface. Missing his aim, the fish dived again for a second attack. It was now too late for Cheesebro to retreat, and defenceless, in the frail cedar yawl, he awaited the onslaught. He was kept in suspense but a moment. When the fish shot out of the water once more he drove his sword completely through the boat from side to side. The sword entered the boat about three feet from the bow, on the port side, and came out through the thin plank on the starboard side. Cheesebro had retreated to the stern of the boat in time to avoid the violence of the fierce fish, and thus escape injury. His plight was seen from the schooner, and the vessel headed for the scene of the conflict. By constant bailing, Cheesebro kept his frail and disabled craft afloat, until succour arrived. A blow on the head finally killed the fish, and Cheesebro's peril as a sword-fisherman was over for that time. The fish weighed 888 pounds.—Scientific American.

MR. GLADSTONE AT HOME.

His Pretty Little Granddaughter Dorothy—Habits of the Premier.

You will not have been long inside Hawarden Castle, says a writer in the New Weekly, London, before you meet little Dorothy Drew. She, no doubt, is the most privileged of all her grandfather's admirers. You may have thought, from an outside knowledge of him, that Mr. Gladstone has little sense of humor or of broader fun, but wait until you catch sight of these two alone—he in his way pirouetting around and she flying barefoot on the carpet after the whisking coattail. The Grand Old Man has for home plenty of undisguised, honest English fun and quiet humor.

Rapid and clear as he is in speech, Mr. Gladstone pauses frequently in written composition. He uses a quill pen, writes on large foolscap and does not bend closely to his paper. If you watch him—and this you may easily do—you will observe that he constructs in pauses, slowly, sentence by sentence. Having worked out one, he sets it down, then throws back his head in thought, and half closes his eyes, before he brings his pen to paper again.

So late as October Mr. Gladstone used his axe. In a hollow space under a writing desk at the far end of the study is a complete set of woodman's tools, grafts, picks and axes, all burnished and ground for use. Mr. Gladstone is not at all governed in his news reading by political views in the leading articles of the newspaper. Just as The New Weekly's contributor entered the room the G.O.M. was following with interest the full and early accounts which were available of the Welsh Land Commission. Among the weekly papers were a number of the "comic" side. At dinner the cartoons and Gladstone cariatures generally serve for humorous comment. Mr. Gladstone laughs as heartily over them as over anything. Mrs. Drew said that in her long experience she had never observed that he had shown that he was in the smallest degree irritated by even the bitter or most rude caricature. "Indeed," said she, "the one that I thought the worst in taste I had seen for a long time he put aside with a quiet smile."

"People do not generally know it," said Mrs. Drew, "but Mr. Gladstone is, I am sure, one of the least personally assertive men in England. He is altogether buried in his work and forgets himself. That is why you will not make him understand that any personal comment about himself would be worth listening to."

As to the Premier's fiction, plain human nature and adventure he delights in. Stevenson is one of his favorites. He is fond of Baring Gould's works.

"He now often alludes to his age," remarked one of the Premier's family. "Who would not? But his memory is wonderful. You know that last of his long 'great speeches'—that at Edinburgh—when he spoke for over an hour and a half. Well, all the 'notes' for that speech were written on a single sheet of paper. What became of it? Oh, in the last few hours before the meeting he thought the matter over, and threw all the notes away. That long speech was delivered absolutely without notes."

The Sporting Instinct.

Sports and games have been defined as life in miniature, which is merely to say that they are restricted forms of war. Every sport must involve some at least of those qualities for the exercise of which war gives highest scope. Pluck, required for all, is not a simple quality, but the combination of all, being another name for manliness. It includes cool-headedness, persistence, cunning, rapidity of judgment, clearness of reason, and all the rest of the fine talents that go to the making of a brave man. Cunning, in its best sense, is a part of every sport—the cunning of one man or of several pitted against that of a beast or of some other man or combination of men. Herein lies the fascination of stalking, which is always the greater the more alert the beast, the more difficult his haunts. Racing, again, an obvious form of contest, is the best of good sport. Horse and man against horse and man is more complicated, and therefore more spirited, than man against man. A hunt combined with a race, such as fox-hunting, is still better; and if with race and hunt a dangerous fight be thrown in, the mixture of the three will of necessity prove best of all. And so it is this combination of race for first spear, pursuit of a wild beast, and final fight for the beast's life, that makes pig-sticking so magnificient a sport. In brief almost any incident of life may be turned to sport, and, on the whole, should thus be treated. For is not the sporting instinct the deepest and best in masculine human nature? It should not exist in woman. (For the sporting woman is worse even than the female politician.) The feminine qualities are required to balance it; but they should be supplied by women, as the manly by men. May it not be the case that this is an argument for the admission of women into politics? Our made politicans would then be free to become men once more.—National Observer.

The Triassic Period.

Ages ago, in the geological time known to the scientists as the triassic period, the Connecticut River Valley, and, perhaps, the whole eastern portion of what is now the North American Continent, was inhabited by a gigantic species of two and four-footed reptiles. At Portland, in the famous brownstone quarries, scores of tracks of these creatures have been found and there are probably hundreds of them left in that remarkable ledge that will be unearthed by the geologists of the future. At first these tracks were attributed to a gigantic species of extinct birds, but a well known writer on geology pronounced them the tracks of saurians. That they were amphibious all writers agree; as to their bulk and height there is some difference of opinion. Some of the tracks are twenty inches from heel to toe and almost as broad clearly proving that the animal or reptile was no dwarfish member of the vertebrates. Then, too, they are from three to five feet apart, which is proof positive that the creature was not less than twelve feet high; that is providing he was a biped, as everything indicates.

Paper Belting.

Paper belting for the purpose of transmitting power is the next thing which is going to astonish the manufacturing fraternity. The inventor was five years assistant to the superintendent of power of one of the great factories in Lowell, Mass. It was while in this position, in which he had much to do with lacing and tightening belts, that he conceived the idea that belts made of paper could be made to do better work than either leather, rubber or cotton. He argued that as a thick piece of pasteboard can be made to take on a firm, smooth and durable surface by holding the same against another moving surface for several minutes, a large piece of paper made in the form of a belt and permitted to run upon the surface of a pulley day after day would soon create upon its surface a firm, hard, shining coating that would last a long time. In making the belt, links made from paper pulp are used. As soon as a belt is put in working order a hard, shining coating appears upon the surface next the pulleys, and this becomes harder and harder as the months slip by. It becomes so hard finally that only the cold chisel can cut into it. Such a surface works well on the pulleys.

Music Hath Charms.

"Has your daughter stopped her music lessons?"

Mother—Yes; on account of sickness.

"When will she be able to go on?"

"As soon as the neighbors are well enough to endure it."

THE STREETS OF CAIRO.

Where May Be Found Embodied All the East's Characteristic Charms.

Among those who have seen many Oriental cities there is controversy as to which of them most conspicuously embodies the characteristics of the East. Some lay claim to have found in Syria, others in Persia, and yet others in India the type in question; yet one cannot help suspecting that if a vote were taken of all the more famous capitals and great towns of Asia and northern Africa, Cairo would win the first place. Everybody, after putting his own special favorite first, would put Cairo second. The color and movements and perpetual play of light and shade on an ever-shifting mass of hues, that kaleidoscope of humanity which the ordinary every-day traffic of the Egyptian capital keeps twirling before the eyes must be bad to beat. Even here, on this hotel terrace, in front of Shepheard's, where the West is ever busily dashing its sombre blacks and sober grays on the glowing palette of the East, and boots and billycock of the European, with their suggestions of the incongruous and the over-civilized and the unpicturesque are easily got rid of. That is the charm of Cairo. You step aside from one of the main thoroughfares, crowded with western vehicles of every description, from the drag to a pony trop, and in an instant you are at once in a maze of alleys, where no draught animal of any kind has ever set foot since the houses were built on either side, and through which you may tread your way, surrounded by the same moving masses of color for as many hours as you please without emerging again into western civilization.

Lost, in every sense of the word, geographically as well as imaginatively, you wander on amid the restlessly flowing stream of swarthy, turbaned faces and lithe white and-blue robed figures, your ears filled with the strange cries and your senses intoxicated with the heavy, nameless odors of the East. Further and further you ramble, and deeper and deeper plunge into this magic labyrinth of winding ways. The alleys seem to narrow more and more every minute, until the rich brown, profusely carven woodwork of the jutting gables on either side of the roadway almost threatens to meet and blot out the strip of burning blue above your head. As the street straightens the crowd appears to thicken, until at the moment when the one is at its narrowest and the other at its densest you step into a little square in which the blaze of color and the play of movement reach their height. You are in the carpet bazaar of Cairo—the spot at which the many-colored throng around you finds its most gorgeous background. Carpets of every hue and web—Tunisian, Algerian, Smyrniote, Persian—drape the whole quadrangle with an arras worthy of a Sultan's seraglio.

To think in "cold blood," and out of sight of it, of such a picture in such a frame would be to conjure up a vision of crude and garish magnificence at which the eye would ache and the taste revolt. But the East is an artist of unerring though unstudied skill, and every patch of brilliant and violently contrasted color that it seems to have flung so recklessly together has fallen as by a divinely pre-established harmony into its proper and most effective place. And Nature herself in compounding the pigments for these swarthy skins has entered into a decorative conspiracy with man. Considered merely as an arrangement in browns, the faces of a Cairene crowd are a study in themselves. Between the light cafe-au-lait color in the half-Westernized Levantine and the blue-black negroid from Abyssinia or the Soudan, there are well-nigh half a dozen different shades distinguishable to the attentive eye. The cafe-au-lait changes to chocolate, the chocolate to a kind of cafe noir, the kind that you complain of on grounds of defective strength; and this, again, to the kind that you complain of on the strength of excessive grounds. Then comes the lustreless jet, as of the unpolished boot; and then, last and lowest note of the gamut, comes that deep, glossy ebony which might drive all the blacking manufacturers in the world to the despairing confession that nature is here, at any rate, superior to art.—London Telegraph.

"Please Let Me In?"

Poor Liz was a feeble dwarf-like child,
Who grew in our streets, as the grass grows wild;
Never for her had a mother's love
Pointed the pathway that leads up above.
Never for her had a father's care
Sheltered a nook from the cold winter's air;
Ragged and homeless, a pale, wan face,
Yet beauty that sorrow could not erase.

She vended her wares on the Sabbath day—
And stood at the church with stock-in-trade
On Sunday, surveying the pew-parade.
Ladies and gentlemen passed her by,
And many would cast a reproachful eye—
For newspaper peddling's a horrible sin,
When God-fearing people to church straggle in.

As she stood, the organ's trembling tones,
Swelling and sobbing, in sanctified moans,
Came to her ear, and they seemed to say,
"Without it is night, within it is day."
Hiding her papers beneath her torn gown,
She stepped to the usher, a liveried clown,
And whispered beseechingly, "Please let me in,
I want to see Heaven, I hope it's no sin!"

"Out you strumpet! I've watched you all day, Selling your papers, while pious folks pray."
He pushed her away, while tears of shame
In sympathy rushed to her cheeks aflame;
For even a street waif has a heart
That insult from some forks may cause to smart,
And some who think themselves free from sin
May yet stand outside and say, "Please let me in!"

Mayhap you'll think my tale incomplete,
As Liz was left wand'ring out on the street,
But candor compels me to tell you a fact,
Your sermon on Sunday, I'll wager, lacked;
Poor Liz is outside, waiting to see
Some kind soul who'll say, "Come in, child, with me;"
If you'll receive her, He'll count it no sin,
And perhaps will say "Yes" to your "Please let me in!"

—William Elliott Todd.

Value of Newspaper Files.

The value which newspaper files may come to have in the course of years was shown in a recent auction sale at Bangs' in New York. An irregular lot of numbers of The New York Weekly Journal, printed and sold by Peter John Zenger, of various dates, between 1733 and 1741, brought $150. A volume of The New York Weekly Post-Boy and New York Gazette, 1746-52, printed by James Parker, also an irregular lot, sold for $340. Another volume of the same papers, Nos. 631-837, with 18 numbers missing, dated 1755-9, brought $360. Three volumes of The New York Gazette, no volume complete, and dated between February, 1759, and December, 1770, sold for $140, $70, and $810 respectively. Three volumes of The New York Mercury and New York Gazette, of irregular dates between 1765 and 1770 went for $210, $100 and $200 respectively. A volume which included Nos. 1409-1511 of The New York Journal, dated 1770-1771, and the first numbers of The Constitutional Courant and The Watchman sold for $100.

The Latest Irish Bull.

New Irish "bulls" are scarce, so perhaps no excuse is needed for giving one which is both new and true. A certain peer, who recently married a lady of the acting persuasion, is rightly anxious to introduce his wife to his country neighbors. Prejudice is still so strong, even in Ireland, that his attempts in this direction meet with anything but a generous response. Having proposed the other day to present his wife to some lady of his acquaintance, the latter hastily replied: "I make it a rule never to be introduced to people that I do not know!"—London Truth.

An Appropriate Verdict.

A coroner's jury returned a verdict that the deceased came to his death from exposure.

"What do you mean by that?" asked a relative of the dead man, "when there were two bullet holes in his head?"

"The coroner replied with a wave of his magisterial hand. "Just so. He died from exposure to bullets."—London Judy.

EMILE ZOLA.

The Prince of Realistic Fiction.

Thus looks the master of realism. This is the man who has produced more work, excited more comment, probed more moral anatomies, than any living author. Needing a strengthening stimulant, Zola drinks "Vin Mariani," of which he says that "it is the elixir of life, combating human debility, and giving vigor, health and energy." This is high praise, but it is consonant with what has been said about this great tonic-stimulant, by all the celebrities of the day. "Vin Mariani" is the great nourisher. It strengthens the enfeebled constitution, makes the convalescent strong and well; is very palatable, never produces constipation, but rather aids digestion and assimilation. If you send your name to Lawrence A. Wilson & Co., Montreal, you will receive a little album of portraits of celebrated people, and you will thus learn something, not merely of the celebrated coca stimulant, but of the great people who drink it.

BRANDOLATRY AND LOVERS OF LABELS A THING OF THE PAST.

Judges, lawyers, bankers and merchants of Montreal have visited the Bordeaux Claret Company's cellars, and have pronounced their $3.00 and $4.00 wines, excellent and wonderful value. The cellars contain over twenty thousand dozens of Claret, Burgundy, Sauterne, Ports and Sherries all guaranteed pure and direct from the vineyards of France. Address for price list to the Bordeaux Claret Company, 30 Hospital Street, Montreal.

The Steamer Varuna.

The steamer Varuna has been undergoing repairs which when completed will make her hull practically new from stem to stern. Last year she was thoroughly overhauled forward and this winter the balance of the work was undertaken and will be shortly completed. So extensive has the work been performed that the Varuna this spring will be practically a new boat.

The cabin will be forward of the dining room, and the kitchen aft. The steamer will also be supplied with new life-boats. The boiler is in the hands of the machinists who will see that it fully meets the requirements of the inspection. The repairs when completed will have cost a good $2,000. The owners Messrs. W. B. Cooper of Picton, and Capt. Hicks and Engineer Norcross, are to be congratulated on their enterprise and the determination exhibited to keep the Varuna in the front for efficiency and equipment, and we have no doubt but that this popular vessel will continue to enjoy the confidence and appreciation of the public.

Obituary.

The Bancroft Times says: Mr. John Jarman, sr., of L'Amable, was laid to rest on Tuesday. In his demise, North Hastings loses a pioneer. He was born in Hamilton Parish, Hampshire, England, and emigrated to Canada about twenty-eight years ago, living for some time at Maynooth, a short time in the States, and for over twenty years at L'Amable, where he was concerned in milling, lumbering and farming. During his long residence and business acquaintance with the people of this district he made many warm friends, to whom he was familiarly known as 'Uncle John."

A Worthy Young Man Placed in a Position.

Mr. Gillard of the above firm is also an O.B.C graduate, and sent down to the College for a book-keeper.

The Clappers Again.

Mary Jane Smith charged Miss Martha Clapper in the police court this morning with calling her very obscene names. The plaintiff had no evidence further than her own to substantiate the charge, and of course the defendant swore in direct opposition to her story. The Magistrate decided that Mary Jane's case was weak and dismissed the charge. Mrs. Clapper wore her most complacent smile as she strode from the court followed by her daughters and the gaze of the audience.

Accident.

Mrs. M. Gillen fell yesterday on an icy sidewalk fronting Dr. Tracy's premises, on Hotel street. No bones were broken, but Mrs. Gillen sustained some severe bruises and was badly shaken up. A GOOD BEGINNING.

The Athletic Association Will Go Ahead if Grounds can be Secured.

Institute Hall was well filled last evening by the younger sporting men of the city and several of our leading citizens to discuss the advisability of forming an Athletic Association. Everyone present thought the city should have an Athletic Association.

Ald. Bogart, having interested himself greatly in this matter as well as being a lover of field sports, was appointed chairman and T. W. R. McRae was selected as Secretary pro tem.

Mr. Bogart said he had felt for many years that Belleville was behind her sister cities of the Province in one particular at least, and that is her sports. It is not because we have not got the material, but because the young men have not been encouraged. The way to interest and encourage our young men, is to secure a suitable ground, and put a fence around it that will keep people out who will not pay. His idea was that a joint stock company would be the best plan of managing the affair; he thought the receipts the first year would pay all the expense.

Moved by Fred Smith, seconded, by H. O. Powell, that the following gentlemen be a committee to look after grounds and see what it will cost for rental, fencing, laying a track and other expenses: Messrs. Lockett, Thomas, H. Burrell, F. McKeown, F. D. Diamond, H. Smart, W. Cutler, J. W. Wallace, F. Lewis, J. G. Phippen, T. W. R. McRae, J. H. Mills, W. H. Biggar and Henry Carre, C. E.

Mr. W. N. Ponton thought this was a move in the right direction. In 1886 this same question had been agitated and they had gone so far as to ask for subscriptions. They had had $1,100 subscribed and he believed more than half of that amount could be repeated, as the former subscriptions were not collected. He did not want the 15th Batt. forgotten in the Association as they were interested in sports, and the regiment would give a good sum to have an enclosed drill ground.

Mr. Henry Carre, C. E. gave some information as to the ground required.

Mr. W. E. Thomas gave some information of the work being done in Woodstock by a similar Association and the satisfactory state of its finances.

S. G. Retallack, Fred Smith, John F. Baird and other gentlemen made suggestions, which were favorably received. It was decided not to organize or elect officers till they had heard the report of the committee, which will meet on Monday evening. Another meeting will be held on Friday evening next.

Factorymen Should Go Slow.

Cheese factorymen are making a move towards opening their factories and several will commence the season's operations during the first and second weeks of April. The conditions for cheese making are not as favorable this year as formerly, owing to the lateness of the season and the factories should not open too early. The market at this date last year was well cleaned up and there was a fair demand for new cheese, but this spring the market is well stocked and the old cheese will have to be sold, if it goes at a loss to the buyers, before the new will be looked at. The factory patrons would do well to keep their milk at home for at least a month yet. Butter brings a good fair price and the waste milk could be profitably used for bringing on the calves and pigs, which will otherwise have to be fed on coarse feed for at least a month till the grass starts. Fodder cheese is never a desirable article and if the factories start now there will be a lot of it thrown upon the market at necessarily low prices.

Albert College News.

Last evening at Prof. Shephard's first entertainment the College Chapel would not hold the crowd which gathered. The people could scarcely get standing room and yet they remained and kept order during the two hours of the entertainment. This itself should be enough to convince of its merits. The chair was ably filled by Mr. H. C. Wrinch.

Next Friday evening we expect to have the closing meeting of the Philomathian Society. Instead of the usual "Mock Parliament" it is expected that there will be a "Mock Trial." If you want an evening's amusement next Friday evening, keep free to come to Albert. Watch for further notice concerning it. Also watch for the notice of Prof. Shephard's closing entertainment on Friday evening, April 6th.

Another new student arrived at the College this week, Still they come, why shouldn't Albert have a new building?

James Hall Buried.

The remains of the late James Hall arrived on the 12.45 train to-day from Gowanda, N. Y., and were met at the depot by large number of relatives and friends. Quite a number of local Oddfellows were present and followed the remains to the cemetery, whence they were at once taken. Rev. M. W. Maclean conducted the services at the grave. The bearers were all firemen and comrades at one time of deceased. They were Messrs. W. H. Campbell, R. McCoy, Wm. Brown, R. Symons. Thos. Parsons and Robt. Tuite.

Besides her husband, she leaves a family of five children—four sons and one daughter. She will be deeply mourned by a large circle of friends. The funeral takes place at 10 a.m. on Monday.

WILL THERE BE A FLOOD?

An Old and Careful Observer Thinks not—Late Break-up of the River—Dates of the "Spring Openings" of the Moira for the Past Twenty Years.

The annual question, "Will there be a flood this spring?" is once more being asked; and truly it is of very great interest to the dwellers along the banks of the Moira near its mouth, for flooded dwellings, damaged buildings and other discomforts and pecuniary losses are the accompaniments of a spring flood in Belleville.

The probability is, we are pleased to be able to state on good authority, that there will not be any flood in Belleville this year. A gentleman who for many years resided on the flats in West Belleville and had occasion to observe the concurrence of circumstances which have caused floods in the past, gives it as his opinion that there will be no overflow this year, for these reasons:

1.—There is no anchor ice, owing to the freezing of the river before the severe cold set in, thus preventing its formation.

2.—The water in the bay being lower than for many years past, there will be a greater fall than usual, which will carry the water off rapidly and should the ice block in the river's mouth the water cannot back up as much as when the bay is high.

These reasons seem sound and as conclusive as human reasoning can be, where the irresistible forces of nature are concerned, and in connection with a matter in which the slightest trifle might affect the result. No doubt the excellent work done by the Harbor Commissioners in cutting off the ashery point, thus straightening the course of the steam, in raising the banks of the river and in deepening the channel, will also have an important influence in confining the Moira within the limits provided for it when the ice breaks up and the spring freshet occurs, as will no doubt be the case ere long.

That the "spring opening" of the Moira will be much later than usual this year is the general impression. To what extent this idea is correct will be found in reference to the following statement of the dates of the breaking up of the ice on the river during the past twenty years:

1875	Apl.	7	1885	Apl.	16
1876	Mch.	10	1886	Mch.	30
1877	Apl.	2	1887	Apl.	9
1878	Feby.	23	1888	Apl.	2
1879	Apl.	8	1889	Mch.	22
1880	Mch.	5	1890	Mch.	1
1881	Apl.	4	1891	Mch.	24
1882	Mch.	1	1892	Mch.	29
1883	Apl.	17	1893	Apl.	2
1884	Mch.	25	1894	Mch.	8

In 1891 the ice broke up on Feb. 25th, but did not leave the river until March 24th.

BIG SALARIED WOMEN.

Business Ability Shown by the Fair Sex of Chicago.

Under the above heading the Chicago Tribune of the 15th inst. devotes two columns to sketches of the lives of three ladies with their portraits. One of them is Miss Sara Johnson, at one time a resident of this city, a cousin of Messrs. Wm. and J. W. Johnson, whose business acumen was acknowledged while in Messrs. Geo. Ritchie & Co's. Miss Johnson's hosts of friends here will be pleased, but not surprised, to read of the position she has attained in Chicago. The Tribune says:

DEVOTED TO BUSINESS.

In one of the great down-town stores a department which transacts business amounting between $100,000 and $200,000 annually is conducted by a delicate, refined young woman who has as complete charge of it as if the business were her own. She hires and discharges help—she has over 100 people in her employ during most of the year—keeps her own books and pays all bills in connection with her department.

Although it was untoward circumstances and not the accident of being born poor which compelled Miss Johnson to become a bread-winner—she was born near Belfast, Ireland, the daughter of a wealthy linen manufacturer—she devotes herself to her work as very few men do. In all the seven years that she has been at the head of this department she has never taken even part of a day off for social pleasure of any sort nor been absent save during the brief summer vacation. It was the death of her father, following close upon business reverses, and later the death of an elder brother that left Miss Johnson, as it were, the head of the family. She had neither business education nor experience. Of course she was well educated, but what she knew was more in the line of accomplishments than the practical. However, she stood possessed of the wit and will that make their way. She entered a big shop to sell mantles. Soon she discovered that there was quite a demand for such as were not in stock. She did not know the least thing in life about making mantles, but she was confident that an order department would pay and she induced her employer to permit her to open one on a small scale. It was a success and in this way Miss Sara Johnson paved the way for earning a big salary as head of one of the largest custom dressmaking departments in Chicago, although she has never made a gown in her life and knows more about the work of master musical composers and the latest books than she does of the different systems of cutting and fitting. Still Miss Johnson is thoroughly conversant with the business, as such, which she has in charge.

The Chief Chemist of the U. S. Department of Agriculture, as head of the World's Fair Jury, conferred the highest award on Dr. Price's Baking Powder.

Valkyrie III.

GLASGOW, March 22.—A representative of the United Press was able to-day to obtain a private view of Lord Dunraven's new cup challenger Valkyrie III., the framework of which is almost completed. The new yacht does not seem to be an extreme boat as the Ailsa. She looks somewhat narrower, and certainly has a good deal more draught. The Ailsa's sides flare out all the way to the deck. The Valkyrie III.'s sides run up straighter, from the turn of the bilge, though at no portion is there anything approaching a tumble-home. Her under water is of a more pronounced fin keel shape than anything that Mr. Watson has yet done. Still, it is apparent that her displacement will considerably exceed that of the 'Ailsa.' The 'Valkyrie' overhangs are long, but not excessive, and the outline of the stem, though more elongated than the 'Britannia's,' seems to retain the characteristic round-up forward which Mr. Watson always uses, and which is always distinguishable from the straighter lines of Herreshoff and Fife.

The 'Valkyrie III.' will not be ready to meet the 'Ailsa' until the beginning of the Clyde fortnight, and at no time will she race elsewhere before her voyage to America. There is a renewed interest in regard to the new boat's skipper, although it is believed Capt. Sycamore will be engaged. Mr. Watson does not want Cranfield again, and there is a strong feeling in the Clyde that Cranfield had lost his nerve, and is not the man to give the boat a fair chance. Mr. Watson is anxious to save Captain Carter and now that the 'Ailsa' has beaten the 'Britannia' there is a rumor that Mr. Carter may be secured. The unanimous opinion is that Mr. Carter as steerer and Mr Jameson as sailing master would form a combination that would give the boat the best chance.

Consumption—Low Condition

Wonderful Results From Taking Hood's Sarsaparilla.

Miss Hannah Wyatt
Toronto, Ont.

"Four years ago while in the old country England), my daughter Hannah was sent away from the hospital, in a very low condition with consumption of the lungs and bowels, and weak action of the heart. The trip across the water to this country seemed to make her feel better for a while. Then she began to get worse, and for 14 weeks she was unable to get off the bed. She grew worse for five months and lost the use of her limbs and lower part of body, and if she sat up in bed had to be propped up with pillows. Physicians

No Foul Play.

To the Editor of the INTELLIGENCER.

DEAR SIR,—We wish to correct some false reports regarding the sad and untimely death of our neighbor, David Bresnahan, on February 18th.

It has been reported that he had his life insured, and that he and his father were on bad terms with each other, and hence a suspicion of foul play at the father's hands, has been maliciously or carelessly circulated even beyond our district.

We wish to state that we know the young man had no life insurance, also that he and his father, Mr. John Bresnahan, were on terms of friendship for some years previous to his death, although they had disagreed some years ago, and therefore there is no reason to suspect foul play on these grounds.

We the undersigned, of a party of seven, made a careful inspection of the bush where the young man was working, and discovered there, unmistakable evidence of a fatal accident and would strongly advise any person suspecting foul play to pay a visit to the fatal tree and satisfy themselves as to the truth, before the thawing of the snow has obliterated the marks.

JOY IN THE HOME.

THE LIFE OF A BRIGHT LITTLE BOY SAVED.

The Story Told by His Grateful Father—An Experience That May Bring Gladness to the Hearts of Other Parents.

From Waterloo, Ont., Chronicle.

Mr. David Thaler is a prosperous well to-do farmer who lives near Centreville, on the main road from Berlin to Galt. He has a fine farm of 100 acres, and everything about his place has an air of neatness and prosperity. A representative of the Waterloo Chronicle lately had occasion to call on Mr. Thaler and in the course of conversation came across one of those remarkable cures through the use of Dr. William's Pink Pills that has given this great life-saving medicine world-wide reputation. Among Mr. Thaler's family is a bright rosy-cheeked boy of four years, whose winsome manner attracted the reporter's attention and caused him to remark on his healthy appearance. "Yes," replied the farmer "the little fellow looks well enough now, but two years ago he was but a mere skeleton and we were sorely afraid we would lose him, and I believe Dr. Williams' Pink Pills saved his life." Asked to give the particulars Mr. Thaler said: He was a strong and healthly child when born and continued so until 15 months old, when when unfortunately a servant gave him, without our knowledge, food quite unsuited to an infant. The result was his stomach became deranged; he began to pine away and no food would remain with him but passed off like water. He could not sleep or rest, and cried night and day. He kept going down for six or seven months until the poor child was reduced to skin and bone. He had medical aid, but little or no good was accomplished. It was not until the little fellow was in this desperate strait that we determined to give him Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and I procured a supply and he was given them according to the directions for children. Soon after beginning to give him the Pink Pills the change was remarkable, and from that he became stronger and stronger until he is now the healthy little chap you see before you. As I said before, I believe we owe his life, under providence, to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and if you feel that what I have told you will benefit any one else you are at liberty to publish it." The reporter has no doubt that the statement may point to some other parent the road to renewed health for their child, and gives it as he got it from Mr. Thaler.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are just as valuable in the case of children as with adults, and puny little ones would soon thrive and grow fat under this treatment, which has no equal for building up the blood and giving renewed strength to brain, body and nerves. Sold by all dealers, or sent postpaid at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50, by addressing the Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont. See that the trade mark is on the wrapper around every box and do not be persuaded to try something else said to be 'just as good.'

PRODUCTS OF SCIENCE FOR HOME USE.

Beautiful and Brilliant Colors.

Within the last few years science has been at work, and the results are the Fast Diamond Dyes for Cotton: Turkey Red, Scarlet, Pink, Crimson, Purple, Seal Brown, Orange, Olive Green and other colors.

These dyes make colors so fast that even washing in strong soap-suds will not cause them to fade. If women will ask for Fast Diamond Dyes for Cotton, and see that they get them, they will be able to dye any of the above colors absolutely fast and unfading, colors that will remain until the goods are worn out.

Fast Diamond Dyes for Cotton give grand and brilliant colors to carpet rags, and are therefore invaluable to country people who make Rag carpets. These popular dyes are far ahead of all other forms of dye stuffs, and many large dye houses use them regularly.

Common package dyes—worthless imitations—are now sold in some stores; beware of these; insist every time upon getting the guaranteed Fast Diamond Dyes; tried, sure, true, brilliant and unfading.

"A SERAPHIC DIET."

He Tells His Audience What Angels' Food is and Points Out How We May Get Some of It For Ourselves—A Glimpse Into the Emerald Palace of Heaven.

Among the thousands who greeted Rev. Dr. Talmage in the Academy of Music were a large number of strangers from distant parts of the Union. At the close of the services, the preacher, on leaving the platform, found himself confronted by enough people to fill an ordinary-sized church, all intent on shaking hands with him. The subject of discourse was, "A Seraphic Diet," the text selected being Psalms, 78; 25: "Man did eat angels' food."

Somewhat risky would be the undertaking to tell just what was the manna that fell to the Israelites in the wilderness; of what it was made, how it was made, and who made it. The manna was called angels' food, but why so called? Was it because it came from the place where angels live; or because angels compounded it; or because angels did eat it; or because it was good enough for angels? On what crystal platter was it carried to the door of heaven and thrown out? How did it taste? We are told that there was in it something like honey, but if the saccharine taste in it had been too strong, many would not have liked it, and so it may have had a commingling of flavors—this delicacy of the skies. It must have been nutritious, for a nation lived on it for forty years. It must have been healthful, for it is so inspiringly applauded. It must have been abundant, because it dismissed the necessity of a sutler for a great army. Each person had a ration of three quarts a day allowed to him, and so fifteen million pounds were necessary every week. Those were the times of which my text speaks, when "man did eat angels' food." If the good Lord, who has helped me so often will help me now, I will first tell you what is angels' food, and then how we may get some of it for ourselves. In our mortal state we must have for mastication and digestion and assimilation, the products of the earth. Corporeity, as well as mentality, and spirituality, characterizes us. The style of diet has much to do with our well-being. Light and frothy food taken exclusively results in weak muscle and semi-invalidism. The taking of too much animal food produces sensuality. Vegetarians are cranks. Reasonable selections of the farinaceous and the solid ordinarily produces physical stamina.

But we have all occasionally been in an ecstatic state where we forgot the necessity of earthly food. We were fed by joys, by anticipations, by discoveries, by companionships that dwindled the dining hours into insignificance, and made the pleasures of the table stupid and uninviting. There have been cases where from seemingly invisible sources the human body has been maintained, as in the remarkable case of our invalid and Christian neighbor. Mollie Fancher, known throughout the medical and Christian world for that she was seven weeks without earthly food, fed and sustained on heavenly visions. Our beloved Doctor Irenæus Prime, editor and theologian, recorded the wonders concerning this girl. Professor West, the great scientist, marveled over it, and Willard Parker, of world-wide fame in surgery, threw up his hands in amazement at it. There are times in all our lives when the soul asserts itself, and says to the body, "Hush! Stand back! Stand down! I am at a banquet where no chalices gleam, and no viands smoke, and no culinary implements clatter. I am feeding on that which no human hand has mixed, and no earthly oven baked. I am eating angels' food." If you have never been in such an exalted state, I commiserate your leaden temperament, and I dismiss you from this service as incompetent to understand the thrilling and glorious suggestiveness of my text when it says: "Man did eat angels' food."

Now, what do the supernaturals live on? They experience none of the demands of corporeity, and have no hindrance or environments in the shape of bone and muscle and flesh and hence that which may delectate our palate, or invigorate our poor dying frames would be of no use to them. But they have a food of their own. My text says so. There may be other courses of food in the heavenly menu that I am not aware of, but I know of five or six styles of food always on celestial tables when cherubim and seraphim, and archangel gather for heavenly repast; the mystery of redemption; celestialized music; the heavenly picturesque; the sublime colloquy; eternal enterprises; saintly associations; Divine companionships; celebrative jubilance.

There is one subject that excite the curiosity and inquisitiveness of all those angels. St. Peter says, "Which thing the angels desire to look into." That is, why did Christ exchange a palace for a barn? Why did He drop a sceptre from His right hand to take a spear into His left side? Why quit the anthem of the worshipping heavens to hear the crooning of a weary mother's voice? Was a straw better than a garland? "Could it not have been done in some other way?" says angel the first. "Was the human race worth such a sacrifice?" says angel the second. "How could heaven get along without Him for thirty-three years?" says angel the third. "Through that assassination may sinful man rise into our eternal companionship!" says angel the fourth. And then they all bend toward each other and talk about it, and guess about it, and try to fathom it, and prophesy concerning it. But the subject is too big, and they only nibble at it. They only break off a piece of it. They only taste it. They just dip into it. And then one angel cries: "Worthy is the Lamb that was slain!" And another says, "Unsearchable!" And another says, "Past finding out!" And another says, "Alleluia." And then they all fill their cups of gold with the "new wine of the kingdom." Unlike the beakers of earth, which poison, these glow with immortal health, the wine pressed from the grapes of the heavenly Eshcol, and they all drink to the memory of manger and cross, shattered sepulchre and Olivetic ascension. Oh, that rapturous, inspiring, transporting theme of the world's ransom! That makes angels' food. The taking of that food gives stronger pulse to their gladness, adds several mornings of radiance to their foreheads; gives vaster circle to the sweep of their wings on mission interconstellation. Some of the crumbs of that angels' food fall all around our wilderness camp to-day, and we feel like crying with Paul, "Oh, the depth of the riches, both of the wisdom and knowledge of God!" or with expiring Stephen, "Lord Jesus, receive my spirit!" or with many an enraptured soul, "None but Christ! None but Christ!" Pass around this angels' food. Carry it through all these aisles. Climb with it through all these galleries. Take it among all the hovels, as well as among all the palaces, of the great town. Give all nations a taste of this angels' food.

Now, in the emerald palace of heaven, let the cup-bearers and servants of the King remove this course from the banquet, and bring on another course of angels' food, which is Celestialized Music. You and I have seen at some concert or oratorio a whole assemblage to whom music was a feast. Never anything that they took in at the lips of the mouth was so delightful to their taste as that which they took in at the lips of the ear. I have seen, and you have seen people actually intoxicated with sweet sounds. Oratorios which are always too protracted for those of us who have not had our faculties cultivated in that direction, were never long enough for them. As at eleven o'clock at night the leader of the orchestra gave the three taps of his baton to again start the music, they were as fresh and alert as when three hours before, and at eight o'clock, the curtain first lifted. Music to them is food for body, food for mind, and food for soul. From what I read in my Bible, I think celestialized music will make up a large part of angels' food. Why do I say "celestialized music?" Because though music may have been born in heaven, it had not all the charms until it came to earth and took a baptism of tears. Since then it has had a pathos and a tenderness that it could not otherwise have possessed. It had to pass under the shadows, and over stormy seas, and weep at sepulchres, and to be hummed as lullaby over the cradle of sick children, before it could mount to its present altitudes of heavenly power. No organ on earth would be complete without the stop, "Tremolo," and the stop, "Vox Humana." And no music of heaven would be complete without the "Tremolo" of earthly sorrow confronted, and the "Vox Humana" of earthly sympathies glorified. Just take up the New Testament and find it a note book of celestialized music. It says Jesus sang a hymn before he went to the Mount of Olives and if he could sing on earth with Bethlehem humiliation close behind Him and sworn enemies close on both sides of Him and the torments of Golgotha just before Him, do you not suppose He sings in Heaven? Paul and Silas sang in midnight, dungeon, and do you not suppose that now they sing on the Delectable Summits? What do the harps and trumpets and choirs of Revelation suggest, if not music? What would the millions of good singers and players upon instruments who took part in earthly music do in heaven without music? Why, the mansions ring with it. The great halls of eternity echo with it. The worship of unnumbered hosts is enwrapped with it. It will be the only art of earth that will have enough elasticity and strength to leap the grave and take possession of heaven. Sculpture will halt this side the grave, because it chiefly commemorates the forms of those who in heaven will be reconstructed, and what would we want of the sculptured imitation, when we stand in the presence of the resurrected original? Painting will halt this side the grave, because the colors of earth would be too tame for heaven, and what use to have pictured on canvas the scenes which shall be described to us by those who were the participants? One of the disciples will tell us about the "Last Supper" better than Titian, with mighty touch, set it up in art gallery. The plainest saint by tongue will describe the Last Judgment better than Michael Angelo, with his pencil, put it upon the ceiling of the Vatican. Architecture will halt this side the grave, for what use would there be for architect's compass and design in that city which is already built and garnished until nothing can be added; all the Tuilleries, and Windsor Castles, and St. Clouds of the earth piled up not equaling its humblest residences; all the St. Pauls, and St. Peters, and St. Izaaks, and St. Sophias of the earth built into one cathedral not equaling the Heavenly Temple. But Music will pass right on, right up, and right in, and millions in heaven will acknowledge that, under God, she was the chief cause of their salvation. Oh, I would like to be present when all the great Christian singers and the great Christian players of all the ages shall congregate in Heaven. Of course, they must, like all the rest of us, be cleansed and ransomed by the blood of the slain Lamb. Alas! that some of the great artists of sweet sound have been as distinguished for profligacy as for the way they warbled the song, or fingered the key-board, or trod the organ pedal. Some who have been distinguished bassos, and sopranos, and prima donnas on earth, I fear will never sing the song of Moses and the Lamb, or put the lip to the trumpet with sounds of victory before the throne. But many of the masters who charmed us on earth will more mightily charm us in Heaven. Great Music Hall of Eternity! May you and I be there some day to acclaim when the "Hallelujah Chorus" is wakened. As on earth there have been harmonies made up of other harmonies, a strain of music from this cantata, and a strain of music from that overture, and a bar from this, and a bar from that, but one great tune, or theme, into which all the others were poured as rivers into the sea, so it may be given to the mightiest soul in the heavenly world to gather something from all the sacred songs we have sung on earth, or which have been sung in all the ages, and roll them on in eternal symphony; but the one great theme, and the one overmastering tone that shall carry all before it, and uplift all heaven from central throne to furthest gate of pearl, and to highest capstone of amethyst, will be, "Unto Him who loved us, and washed us from our sins, in His own blood, and make us kings and priests unto God, and the Lamb; to Him be glory!" That will be manna enough for all heaven to feed on. That will be a banquet for immortals. That will be angels' food.

Now, in the emerald palace of heaven, let the cup-bearers and servants of the King remove this course from the banquet and bring on another course of angels' food, which is, Laying Out of Mighty Enterprise. The Bible lets us know positively that the angels have our world's affairs on their heart. They afford the rapid transit from world to world. Ministering spirits, escorting spirits, defending spirits, guardian spirits. Yea, they have all worlds on their thought. We are told they sang together at the Creation and that implied not only the creation of our world but of other worlds. Shall they plan only for our little planet, and be unconcerned for a planet three hundred times larger? No. They have all the galaxies under their observation; mighty schemes of helpfulness to be laid out and executed; shipwrecked worlds to be towed in; planetary fires to be put out; demoniac hosts riding up to be hurled back and down. These angels of light unhorse an Apollyon with one stroke of battle-axe celestial. They talk these matters all over. They bend toward each other in subblimest colloquy. They have cabinet meetings of winged immortals. They assemble the mightiest of them in holy consultation. They plan out stellar, lunar, solar, constellated achievement. They vie with each other as to who shall do the grandest thing for the eternities. They compose doxologies for the Temple of the Sun. They preside over coronations. If in the great organ of the universe one key gets out of tune, they plan for its re-tuning. No undertaking is so difficult; no post of duty is so distant; no mission is so stupendous, but at God's command they are gladly obedient. When they sit together in the heavenly places, Gabriel and Michael, the archangel; and the angel that pointed Hagar to the fountain in the desert; and the angel that swung open the prison door of delivered Peter; and the angels who are to be the reapers at the end of the world; and the angel that stood by Paul to encourage him on the foundering corn-ship of Alexandria; and the two angels that sentineled the tomb of Christ; and the four angels that St. John saw in Apocalypse at the four corners of the earth; and the twelve angels that guard the twelve swinging pearls; and the twenty thousand charioted angels that the Psalmist described; and more radiant than all of them put together, and mightier than all, and lovelier than all, "That Angel of the Covenant;" the cadences of His voice, the best music that ever entranced mortal or immortal ears; His smile another noon risen on mid-noon; His presence enough to make a heaven if there were no other attraction—I say, when they meet together in the council chambers close to the Throne—Ah! that will be regalement infinite. That will be a repast supernal. That will be angels' food. And one of my exciting anticipations of heaven is the prospect of seeing and talking with some of them. Why not? What did they come out for on the balcony on that Christmas night and sing for our world, if they did not want to be put in communication with us? I know the serenade was in Greek, but they knew that their words would be translated in all languages. If they thought themselves too good to have anything to do with us, would they have dropped Christmas carols upon the shepherds, some of them as bad as any of us have been? Aye! If they sang for mortals, will they not sing for us when we become immortals?

Now, in the emerald palace of heaven, let the cup-bearers and servant of the King remove this course from the banquet and bring on another course of angel's food—the last course, and the best; the desert; the culmination of the feast, which is, Celebrative Jubilance. You and I have known people who prided themselves on never getting excited. They have cultivated the phlegmatic. You never saw them cry; you never heard them in a burst of laughter. They are monotonous, and to me intolerable. I am afraid of a man or woman that cannot cry; I am afraid of a man or woman who cannot laugh Christ says in the book of Revelation that such people are to him nauseating and cause regurgitation, (Revelation 3: 16) "Because thou art lukewarm, and neither cold nor hot, I will spue thee out of my mouth." But the angels in heaven have no stolidity or unresponsiveness. There is one thing that agitates them into holy mirth. When that happens if their harp be hung up they take it down, and with deft fingers pull from among the strings a canticle. They run into their neighbors on the same golden street and tell the good news. If Miriam has there cymbals anything like those with which she performed on the banks of the Red Sea, she claps them in triumph, and there is a festal table spread, and the best of the angels' food is set on it. When is it? It is when a man or woman down in the world who was all wrong, by the grace of God is made all right. (Luke 15:10.) "There is joy in the presence of the angels of God over one sinner that repenteth." Why are they so happily agitated? Because they know what a tremendous thing it is to turn clear around from the wrong road, and take the right road. It is because they know the difference between swine's trough with nothing but husks, and a King's banquet with angels' food. It is because they know the infinite, the everlasting difference between down and up. And then, their festivity is catching. If we hear the bells of a city ring, we say, "What is that for?" If we hear rolling out from an auditorium the sound of a full orchestra, we say, "What is happening here?" And when the angels of God take on jubilance over a case of earthly repentance, your friends in heaven will say, "What new thing has happened? Why full diapason? Why the chime from the oldest towers of eternity?" The fact is, my hearers, there are people in heaven who would like to hear from you. Your children there are wondering when father and mother will come into the Kingdom, and with more glee than they ever danced in the hallway at your coming home at eventide, they will dance on the floor of the heavenly mansion at the tidings of father and mother saved. Besides that, the old folks want to hear from you. They are standing at the head of the celestial stairs waiting for the news that their prayers have been answered, and that you are coming on to take from their lips a kiss better than that which now they throw you. Calling you by your first name, as they always did, they are talking about you and saying, "There is our son," or "There is our daughter down in that world of struggle, battling, suffering, sinning, weeping. Why can they not see that Christ is the only one who can help, and comfort, and save?"

That is what they are saying about you. And if you will this hour in one prayer of surrender that will not take more than a second to make, decide this, then, swifter than telegraphic despatch the news would reach them, and angels of God who never fell would join your glorified kindred in celebration, and the caterer of heaven would do their best, and saints and seraphs side by side would take angels' food. Glory be to God for such a possibility! Oh, that this moment there might be a rush for heaven!

The Spirit and the Bride say Come;
Rejoicing saints re-echo, Come;
Who faints, who thirsts, who will, may come;
Thy Saviour bids thee come

ABOUT TUBERCULOSIS.

Conclusions the Massachusetts Agricultural Have Reached in Regard to the Disease.

1. That it is unsafe to purchase animals to add to a healthy herd in which tuberculosis has existed.

2. That poor sanitary surroundings, especially imperfect ventilation and insufficient light, are favorable to the rapid spread of tuberculosis among cattle.

3. That is much better to dispose of excrement outside of stables than in cellars underneath them.

4. That mangers and other stable fixtures which increase the amount of surface, cracks and corners that cannot be easily cleaned, are objectionable from the fact that when the germs of tuberculosis become scattered, under such conditions they are not easily destroyed by the use of disinfecting fluids.

5. That infected stables bear close relation to the propagation of the disease.

6. That even by the use of strong disinfecting fluids it is very difficult, if not impossible to rid an old stable of the germs of tuberculosis.

7. That the diagnosis in most cases of this disease by physical examination is impossible.

8. That in tuberculin we have an exceedingly delicate and reliable test for tuberculosis.

9. That tuberculin indicates the existence of tuberculosis in the lungs and other parts of the body, when objective symptoms are absent and when no germ can be discovered by microscopical examination of the mucus from the nostrils.

10. That its use is not followed by any ill effects of a serious or permanent nature.

11. That in some instances the injection of tuberculin produces a marked rise of the internal temperature when no tuberculosis exists.

12. That in some cases when tubercles are present in the body its injection is not followed by a well-defined reaction.

13. That the reaction following the use of tuberculin bears no relation to the extent or development of the disease.

14. That is is impossible to formulate a rule by which we can say that certain variations of the temperature may or may not indicate the presence of tubercles.

15. That in tuberculin we have the only means by which we can eradicate tuberculosis from among our cattle.

16. That our old styled and unsanitary stables thoroughly infected with the germs of tuberculosis make the complete eradication and suppression of this disease well-nigh impossible.

She made me go up and see her husband first. She would wait.

I found Clarkson to be the very antithesis of his wife. He was a large, muscular and slightly bloated fellow with a purplish face, the result of debauchery, but withal a rather handsome man or what would have been a handsome man in normal conditions. He sat on the edge of the iron bed when I entered the cell, his head between his hands, and he did not look up until I had spoken to him, and then it was with such a flabby despair that I felt repelled.

THE WARDEN TOLD ME WHO SHE WAS.

Here was one of those large vital natures that appear to have no internal resources. I could see in an instant why his life had been a failure. He was made up of unregulated appetites and sensibilities without volition enough to control them. Just the sort of man to do a desperate deed in the frenzy of drink, without a motive before it or a recollection after it, but as devoid of methodical vindictiveness as a mastiff.

I told him I had come to talk with him in view of conducting his defense.

"Bah," he said, "there is no defense. Can you defend me against God?"

"Let me ask of you," I began, "not to talk in that reckless manner. Try and be cool. Blasphemy may relieve your feelings, but it will not help your case."

"My case is helpless," he said, with every fleshly indication that it was.

"But if it is worth while to make a plea at all, it is not necessary to announce your guilt in advance."

He sprang up from the bed—he was six feet at least in height—and with a clenched fist uplifted said:

"I am not guilty, but I might as well be, for God has decreed that everybody shall think so."

A gleam of hope suddenly had shot out of the darkness of this reply. The man might be in some degree insane, and irresponsible.

"If you are not guilty there are possibilities of defense. I don't think Heaven will object to our availing ourselves of them."

"Much you know of Heaven," he replied. "No man could have made such a set of circumstances to fit into my doom. It requires the subtlety and cruelty of a God. I might as well have killed that man and given myself up. The result will be the same. But I'm too d—d weak to kill anybody. So I am to be killed. This is in accordance with eternal practice."

He looked at me with a glaring eye. His words were hot with a burning arraignment. There could be no mistake about the earnestness and sincerity of his emotion.

"Either this man is innocent or mad," I said to myself, and then hastened to disavow the thought to myself.

"I tell you beforehand," he went on, "that you cannot do anything with the circumstances. Did I go to Mr. Prineveau and use threatening words—yes. Did I happen to have a pistol in my possession whose bullets exactly correspond to the one found in the man's body—yes. Did I disappear after the deed—yes. Is my life and character just such as would fit me for such a deed—yes. And yet I tell you that I was not there, did not kill him, and never had such an act in my mind."

"Easy," I said. "If you were not there, you were somewhere else. We ought to be able to get at that."

"Yes, we ought to, if we were not fighting against destiny. But just at the time that I ought to have known where I was I was unconscious."

"Then you might have been there unconsciously and irresponsibly."

"Yes. Some demon may have robbed me of myself and worked this thing through me. That's the safest theory. You'd better stick to that. You'll get some credit for it after I'm hanged."

"Clarkson," said I, "I met your wife downstairs; she made me come up and see you first."

He staggered against the wall in the corner of the cell and broke down.

"Poor girl! poor girl!" he said, with great sobs. "I've been the curse of her life."

"She believes in your innocence."

"Of course she does. She knows me, poor old sweetheart. She knows that, weak and worthless as I am, I never killed even an insect."

"POOR GIRL, POOR GIRL," HE SOBBED.

"She believes that I was sent to—to give you valuable assistance."

"Yes. She believes in a good God. You wouldn't think it, with such a husband as I am, would you? So do I, till He wound this mesh around me!"

"Tut, tut, man! Pull yourself together and let your reason work. Sit down there and answer my questions."

He wiped his eyes with his coat sleeve and sat down again, helplessly, on the edge of the bed.

"Now you don't know where you were at four o'clock on the afternoon of March 17?"

"No. The last thing I remember was going down Vesey street toward the river."

"Where had you been?"

"I had been drinking on Sixth avenue at several places."

"And when you recovered your consciousness where were you?"

"In Troy."

"Humph! Had you ever been to Troy before?"

"No."

"Did you know anybody there?"

"No."

"Did you have the pistol with you that was found in the house?"

"No. I never carried a pistol in my life."

"Did not your wife then know that the pistol was in the house at the time this murder was committed up-town?"

"No. She did not know anything about it."

"Where did you get it?"

"I took it in pledge from a little Frenchwoman who boarded in the house and wanted to raise some money to go home. I threw it in a chest of drawers, saying I could get five dollars on it any time at a pawn shop, for it was handsomely silver mounted."

"How long was this before the murder of Mr. Prineveau?"

The man turned round and looked at me with a blank face and said, slowly: "It was about five days before, and the day after I had had the words with Mr. Prineveau in the library."

I confess that both his looks and his words had a knell-like effect. In spite of myself I felt staggered.

"Do you know of anybody whose interest would be advanced by the death of Mr. Prineveau?"

He hesitated a moment. Then he said: "No. Mr. Prineveau's death was a deprivation to me. He was the best and in fact, the only friend I had."

"Why did you go to him that night a week before his death?"

"To get money."

"Did you get it?"

"Yes. I always got it."

"By threats?"

"No. It was absolute charity. He gave me a twenty-dollar bill. He always felt sorry to me. I was flush with that money and bought the pistol, not because I wanted it, but because the Frenchwoman was hard up."

"Now tell me what the conversation was with your uncle that night."

"I cannot tell it clearly because I had been drinking, and I am effusive and foolish when I have liquor in me."

"Was there not a quarrel?"

"No. He may have upbraided me; he always did, and I may have talked fast and loud. I always do, but there was no other quarrel."

This man puzzled me completely. There was nothing in his information that at all removed the fatal circumstances. I had to confess to myself that any gushing sentimental lout, however guilty, might present this view of the case. But there was something in the fellow's face and tones that went past my reason and awakened some instinct that he was innocent.

When I left him I was in a curious quandary. I could not put my finger on a piece of evidence to be used in rebuttal of the circumstances, and yet I found some inarticulate voice in me saying: "That man is innocent."

I thought the matter over that night without coming to a conclusion, and went to bed saying I would sleep over it, which, of course, is very much like saying in the face of a dilemma that you will toss a penny up. In both cases there is an acknowledgment that something outside of your own will may determine for you.

CHAPTER II.

In my case I suppose that something did, for I got up and wrote a letter to Mrs. Prineveau in which I told her that I accepted the case and would do the best I could for the accused, and that it looked like a hopeless affair. In response to this I received a note of brief thanks, inclosing a crisp five hundred dollar bill as a retaining fee. That the pale face of the man's wife had determined me is not unlikely, for it came back to me in the night with the strangest persistency and the same unwarranted look of trust in the gray eyes.

The trial was set down to come on about the first of May, and there was about a month's time to get ready for it. I wasted about a week in the conviction that all I could do was to dispute the evidence inch by inch, and in the last resort show that Clarkson was given to emotional aberrations and was at times irresponsible. But whenever my mind reverted to the matter that miserable woman's face rose up with an awful reproach in it, and then I fell to excusing myself to myself as if I had not done right.

One morning, with an entirely inexplicable impulse, I went down to the place in Varick street. I found Mrs. Clarkson living in one room on the third floor of a dismally dirty barracks, with two extraordinarily beautiful children, scantily but tidily dressed, playing about the floor, and occasionally asking when papa would come back. She had taken in some kind of needle work, which she showed me. She had to cover the iron frames of the buttons with silk, and arrange them on a card, for which she got twenty-five cents a dozen, and by the utmost industry could never quite make two cards a day of a dozen buttons each. Her finger ends were dark with needle marks. She looked weary and sick, but she did not complain. Nothing that ever I had encountered in my experience as a lawyer or a man so moved my sympathy as this woman. Instinctively I knew that she had been gently bred; that she had loved a worthless man and this was her penalty for continuing to love him. I knew that she would cling to him through all misfortune and be the last to leave him when his doom came. I felt myself treating her with a fine courtliness that was inspired with respect, the respect we always feel for something that is a little above our human range.

It was difficult to pull myself out of this mood and come down to the practical business of a lawyer, but it was necessary.

"Mrs. Clarkson," I said, "it is necessary that we look at this matter in the most cold-blooded way. We have got to make the effort to save your husband beset on almost every side by almost insuperable difficulties, and shut into one or two miserably narrow courses. I have got to prove an alibi or establish his insanity."

"Do you mean by insanity that you will admit that he committed the deed in a mad fit?"

"Perhaps that would be the most judicious course, and then throw ourselves on the sympathy of the jury and the mercy of the court."

She shook her head with a sad dignity. "He did not commit the deed," she said.

"Perhaps not. That may be a moral certainty with you. But a lawyer must have facts. How are we to prove that he did not?"

"BY PROVING THAT SOME ONE ELSE DID IT!"

Her answer startled me a little. It was said calmly, and as if she saw no difficulty about it

A "Failed Up Organist."

Miss Frances E. Willard calls herself "a failed up organist," from the circumstances which attended her musical education. She preferred combs and tissue paper in her youth, but finally centered her devotion on a melodeon, which preference did not please her father. He sold the melodeon and replaced it with a piano, but from that day her desire to become a musician ceased.

THE designs of our spring wall papers are beautiful and the colorings exquisite. The effects they produce upon the wall have been studied with intelligent sympathy and the "long-felt-wants" of a few years ago have been provided for with cultivated taste. A judicious employment of any of our papers leaves little to be done in a room. A few ornaments, according to the taste or wealth of the occupant, are all that is necessary to contribute to its beauty and comfort. Our papers thoroughly represent the standard of the prevailing taste in Interior Decorations.

"Fine Feathers Make Fine Birds"

Women are not all Beautiful but all women are attractive who are beautifully dressed.

Beauty unadorned may do in poetry, but the nicely fitting gown is the desire of every true woman. Priestley's dress fabrics have done much to realize a woman's ideals by offering, in their texture, appearance, fit and wear, a character and distinction, which no other derss goods, however excellent, have quite attained to. And now Priestley's have something new. The "Eudora" is all the rage. It is even better than the Henriettas so much admired. The "Eudora" has something which the Henrietta lacks—to wit: greater width, greater weight, and a superior dust shedding quality. And then it has an exquisite surface which gives it an almost regal presence. Wrapped on "The Varnished Board," and the name, Priestly, stamped on every five yards.

Thousands of testimonials warrant the assertion that B.B.B. is the BEST SPRING MEDICINE FOR YOUNG OR OLD.

THE change from the extremely delicate coloring of the past few years with such monotonous effects, to the stronger, richer colorings of to-day, is not so much a change in fashion as an improvement in taste. When a decorator was timid or inartistic, he avoided strong colors as a child avoids the fire. He had little or no conception of how to use them; hence he remained in the cold montony of whites and grays. If now and again he tentatively ventured in colors, the results were so awful that he would shrink in horror from another such attempt. Some bolder and more callous spirits made picturesque and kaleidoscopic effects which they urged upon innocent and amiable people as artistic; but that sunflower æstheticism did not last. It had the merit of garish effect or of artistic sensationalism only. It could not last. Good taste, like good sense, will always prevail. As a sort of protest against the sunflower sensationalism, the dainty period of creamy-white timidity came into vogue. Many decorators knew that oddities of form and color could not be used in marble halls and maidens' boudoirs, but they did not have the independence to risk an open defiance of the prevalent style. They found a sort of refuge under "A Milk White Flag" of nonentity. The wall-paper manufacturers assumed the risk of putting colors into their papers for this season. The results are beautiful in the products and profitable to the consumer. Strong, rich colors are precisely what the people were waiting for; employed judiciously, they are precisely what they should have. This is an era of strong colors. It is also an era of good taste. It is the period of the golden mean between the eccentricities of the sunflower sensationalism, of riotous vulgarity, and the dreary daintiness of whitey timidity. It is not only philosophic to use strong colors, but it is artistic, æsthetic, and delightful—the climax of all things true, good, and beautiful.

Everybody in King's Co., N.B., knows Mr. Geo. S. Dryden, of Mitchell, Sussex, N. B. He says:—"My wife had a very bad cough that for ten days was most distressing, finally I tried Norway Pine Syrup, and one bottle cured her. I have never found its equal."

A DINNER PILL.—Many persons suffer excruciating agony after partaking of a hearty dinner. The food partaken of is like a ball of lead upon the stomach, and instead of being a healthy nutriment it becomes a poison to the system. Dr. Parmelee's Vegetable Pills are wonderful correctives of such troubles. They correct acidity, open the secretions and convert the food partaken of into healthy nutriment. They are just the medicine to take if troubled with Indigestion or Dyspepsia.

Our self-love springs, ordinarily, from a lack of understanding of the subject.

A GREAT DISCOVERY.

PRACTICAL PHOTOGRAPHY WITHOUT LIGHT OR LENS.

Clerk Maxwell's electro magnetic theory of light received striking confirmation seven or eight years ago when Heinrich Hertz performed a number of experiments in which electrical waves were made to imitate the conduct of light waves in several particulars. This gifted investigator, now connected with the University of Bonn, concentrated the rays to a focus with a parabolic mirror. Refraction as well as reflection was accomplished. Electricity, proceeding in straight lines, was diverted from its course by a prism of pitch. The phenomena of interference and polarization were also reproduced.

It is now announced that a photograph has been taken by using electricity instead of light, and if this story is true then additional evidence will have been afforded as to the kinship of these two forces or forms of forces. Hertz, it will be observed, only showed that the electrical radiance conformed to mechanical laws which are known to control lite, but photography introduces the element of chemical action, so that this later achievment, if it proves to be all that it seems, is one of the most remarkable revelations of our day.

Professor Fernando Saudford, who claims to have attained this wonderful result and who gives some account of it to The San Francisco Examiner, occupies the chair of physics in Leland Stanford, Jr., university and is one of the youngest members of the faculty of that institution. As the story appears over his own signature, and he intimates that he has repeated the experiment several times, there is little room for doubt as to the genuineness of the occurrence described. Professor Sanford obtained his picture in the dark without even a lens, in the following manner:

It is well known that when two brass rods connected with the sides of the battery or placed in the secondary circuit of an induction coil are brought close enough together a spark will fly from one to the other. If to each rod, a short distance from the nobs in which they terminate, a copper wire be attached and the two wires be led off to suitable metal plates placed facing each other, but not quite touching, an electrical oscillation will occur between the plates whenever there is a discharge between the knobs. Now, Professor Sanford substituted a coin, the object to be photographed, for one of the plates of such a pair, and laid its face downward upon a thin sheet of mica, which in turn rested on the sensitive gelatine film of a glass photographic plate.

Tinfoil was arranged on the other side of the glass and took the place of the other metal plate of the pair. This combination was now placed between two boards and left in the dark for an hour, during which time a series of sparks were flying from one knob to the other of the discharger across an interval of one-sixteenth of an inch. Upon developing his sensitive plate Professor Sanford had an image of his coin—that is, of the portions in relief on that side which was in contact with the mica. The Examiner prints a copy of the picture, a positive, which shows the Liberty head, date, inscription "E Pluribus Unum," circle of stars and raised edge in white on a dark background.

Professor Sanford does not enter into a discussion of the theories involved, but he mentions that the tinfoil was not only of the same size as the coin (a silver dollar), but placed directly opposite. Apparently electro magnetic waves flowed from the coin to the tinfoil, but preferring the shortest route radiated mainly or exclusively from the raised part of the dollar. They seem to have proceeded in straight lines too; otherwise the chemical action on the film would not have been confined so accurately to regions directly opposite the pattern.

Right here it should be noted that Hertz discovered in his experiments that the induced magnetic radiance excited in the manner described, and now called "Hertzian waves" in honor of that now famous physicist, had this remarkable trait not possessed by a primary electrical current: "Good "conductors," like copper and other metals, being interposed would stop them, but they would go right through wood and other so-called "insulators." Hence in Professor Sanford's experiment the mica and glass were evidently no barriers to the passage of the particular kind of electricity produced.

Although it does not at first appear clearly what practical applications of this discovery can be made, it is not improbable that uses will be found for it. The indirect consequences are sure to be valuable as well as interesting.—New York Tribune.

A Christian Philanthropist.

The Earl of Shaftesbury, during all his parliamentary life, was the constant advocate of the holy Sabbath. Great as were his political and ancestral honors, the nobility of his character in this particular will insure him enduring fame. More than fifty years ago he wrote as follows: "The recent Sabbath report tends to confirm the encouraging opinion that in every measure of real reform, when it is once fairly undertaken, the strength of the community will go with it. Whatever is attempted in the fear of God, and in the love of our fellow creatures will have the heart of man with it." In defence of the Sabbath he was ever on the alert. Any encroachment upon its sanctity was sure to bring him to the front, and any effort to guard it was equally sure of his co-operation and support. His powerful influence was exerted in Parliament toward closing the English postal service. For more than forty years he kept up an increasing warfare, sometimes to procure restrictive legislation, but always to urge the closing of the day of rest on the conscience and intelligence of the working classes. He assisted even at the close of his public life in organizing measures to resist threatened aggressions. "Your political liberties," he said on one occasion to the members of the Workingmen's Lord's Day Association, "are more secure under the charter of the Sabbath than they can be under all the charters which were ever given by any of our kings." In all this he taught the world an important lesson, namely, that whatever is undertaken for the good of society must be based on Christian truth and be carried forward in a Christian spirit.

The Shah and the Cat.

It is said that the Shah of Persia, in spite of some rather unamiable eccentricities, has many kind-hearted traits. There is a venerable story, invented by some antediluvian Joseph Miller, of a man who found a cat fallen asleep upon his coat-tails, and, rather than disturb the beast, cut off the coat-tails and walked away in a round jacket. Now, it is said to be a matter of authentic record that the shah on a certain occasion was about to set forth on a tour through his dominions attended by all his court and a vast retinue, all of whom were actually on the road when he found his pet cat fast asleep on the identical fur mantle which he wished to wear, whereupon he sat him down to wait until puss should of its own accord wake up and leave its couch; and that not coming to pass for some time the court and retinue were dismissed for the day and the start postponed until the morrow, when, be it observed, the shah's attendants took good care that no cat again should use the mantle for a bed.

A Fish Imprisoned in an Oyster Shell.

The Baltimore Sun says: The Rev. John A. Burk, 1507 West Lexington street, recently received a barrel of oysters from Reedville, Northampton county, Va. Upon opening one of the shells, the two parts of which were joined as if they held an oyster, a live fish two and one-half inches long fell from the shell and began to wriggle. The fish was put in water and is still alive. There was no oyster in the shell, the fish being the sole occupant.

Mother of Sixteen at 32.

The Memphis Appeal-Avalanche says: A remarkable case of maternity was developed recently, when an application was made by Sarah Patty to act as guardian of the minor heirs of Maggie James, deceased. All the parties are colored, and interest attaches to the proceedings from the fact that the deceased left ten children living and was the mother of six who are dead, dying herself at the age of 32, a few days ago, after giving birth to an infant now one week old.

E. R. Bell, a colored lawyer presented the petition, and, when questioned as to the truth of the statements in it, said they were correct. The deceased had been married at the age of 16, and had given birth to a child every year since, never having born twins. Her first husband died, and she at once married again.

Transparent Leather.

The manufacture of transparent leather, an article which has lately attracted some attention, may be accomplished, according to the Magazin Pittoresque, in the following manner: After the hair has been removed from the hide, the latter, tightly stretched upon a frame, is rubbed with a mixture consisting of one thousand parts glycerine, two parts salicylic acid, two parts picric acid, and twenty-five parts boric acid. Before the hide is absolutely dry it is placed in a room which the rays of the sun do not penetrate and is saturated with a solution of bichromate of potash and on the hide becoming very dry. there is applied to its surface an alcoholic solution of bichromate of tortoise shell, by which a transparent aspect is obtained. The leather is of an exceedingly flexible character, and is used for the manufacture of toilet articles, though it is claimed to be fairly adapted to the production of foot gear.

An English Samson.

Thomas Topham, born in London 1710, was a man possessed of extraordinary strength. He once lifted three casks filled with water and weighing in all eighteen hundred pounds. He is said to have had the combined strength of twelve men. He could bend a stout bar of iron by holding the two ends with his hands, placing the middle of the bar behind his neck, and drawing the two ends forward. He could straighten the bar again, a much more difficult feat. He broke a rope made fast to the ground that would sustain two thousand pounds, and lifted an oak table six feet long with his teeth, though a half hundred weight was hung at the extremity. He raised with one hand a man who weighed twenty-seven stone. Seeing a watchman asleep in his box, he carried both man and box a long distance. Having been placed on some duty at the entrance gate of a racecourse, he refused to allow a four-horse coach to go through; on the driver whipping up his horses and attempting to pass, Topham seized the hind wheels of the coach and upset it and its occupants into the roadway. Topham, who kept a publichouse in Islington, had a wife who quarrelled with him to such an extent that she drove him to commit suicide. Hercules, Samson, Milo, and many other wonders of bodily strength had to give way to woman; so did Topham, apparently.

When Men Can Fly.

In the first place, travel will be far more rapid than now. Prof. Maxim, who is the leading authority on the subject, expects to see the flying machines move at a speed of 200 miles an hour, because at that rate little effort would be required to keep the machine from falling. It would skate naturally upon the air. Two hundred miles an hour would mean 15-hour trips from New York to London or San Francisco, and four-hour trips between New York and Chicago. With safe and practical flying machines there will be no longer any difficulty about reaching the poles or penetrating into the most remote parts of Africa. Travel will be so easy and so rapid that all parts of the earth can be reached comfortably.

There would be no more wars, for war would be so terrible when flying machines could drop tons of dynamite into the cities of the enemy, that all nations would unite to settle their disputes in peace. Customhouses could not be successfully maintained, for the goods of all the world could be carried across our coast lines without the knowledge of government officers. It is probable that seaports, as ports, would be less important than they are now. They might be preferred as pleasanter places of residence, but they would have few advantages of foreign trade over cities hundreds of miles inland. The chances are that the large city nearest the center of population in a country would become its metropolis, because it could be most easily reached by a majority of the people of that country. It is also probable that trade and manufactures would tend to collect in a few centers, that cities would be chiefly places of business, and that a much larger proportion of the population would live in the country than is the case at present.—Harper's Young People.

Value of Neat Fences.

The farmer who takes proper pride in his farm always feels a pleasant satisfaction in knowing that his fences are what they ought to be. The farm looks enough better with a good fence to make it well worth while to see that it is in good condition. A tumble-down fence has a tendency to prejudice a stranger against a place, when its owner should get the blame. Good gates and bars, that can be depended upon to do the work required of them, are adjuncts of every well-regulated farm.

An Unappreciated Inheritance.

In these days, when there is so much talk of heredity, we ought to recognize, as usually we do not, our obligations to the decent men and women from whom we have the good fortune to be derived. The ancestor who hands us down money gets recognition. He has done something that we can understand, and we name our children after him, and try to keep his name before the world. But the saints in our family records—the men and women who have made a stand for us against sensuality and laziness—we do not half appreciate. It is a pity we are so dull. How much do we really profit if, from the same money-maker who leaves us an income upon which we can afford to drink beer, we inherit a thirst which can only be appeased by champagne? The wise king was as sagacious as usual when he said that a good name is rather to be chosen than great riches; but he was indisputably and obviously sagacious if when he said "a good name" he meant good blood.—Scribner.

The Stoke-Holds of Ocean Racers.

Well, in these days of great mechanical improvement, stoke-holds are losing their terrors. They are getting to be quite comfortable. Great strides have been made in the last twenty years in increasing the speed of ships, and it isn't too much to say that most of it comes through better and stronger boilers. Twenty years ago the boilers of the fastest ships sustained only 70 pounds of steam-pressure to the square inch, but now they sustain with ease 165 pounds. This means more than double the steam than formerly, and much faster twisting of the screws. It also means more coal and more stoking, but not near so much in proportion to the gain in steam. This is because furnaces have also been improved, but the work of feeding their angry throats is hard enough; so hard, indeed, that steamship owners have found that it pays to look after the comfort of the stokers as well as others of the crew, and hence stoke-holds are beginning to be ventilated and be more comfortable as working-places. The temperature of stoke-holds is still above 100° when brisk work is going on, but ventilators keep pouring fresh cool air into the place, and the stokers almost never suffer from exhaustion in new steamships.

The stoker works only eight hours a day, and this is divided into two "watches" of four hours each. That is, he works four hours, then has eight hours' rest, and then works four hours, and doesn't think his lot is such a bad one after all. To be sure, on merchantmen he has to be hounded all the time to do his work properly, and he expects it, for he has a chronic objection against working without being driven to it, and oftener than not doesn't think it worth while to wash his face in his eight hours' interval of rest, He probably wouldn't thank you for your sympathy if you tried to tell him that his life is hard.—Harper's Young People.

Men's Senses Keener Than Women's.

Thoughtful and observant persons do not need a demonstration that the senses are less keen in woman than in man. Their own experience has revealed that natural law. But since we are not all thoughtful or observant, the experiments of Profs. Nichols and Brown are welcome. These American physiologists have begun to experiment with the sense of smell. They took four substances most strongly odoriferous—essence of cloves, of garlic, of lemon and prussic acid. Each of these they diluted with pure water in a growing proportion, filling a set of bottles at every degree of the scale, until the last set represented one part of the test substance to 2,000,000 parts of water.

Then they shuffled the bottles, so to speak, and called in 44 men and 38 women, chosen from the various ranks of life, all young and healthy. These representatives of either sex were instructed to rearrange the bottles, guided by the sense of smell, putting each set of tinctures by itself—garlic with garlic, lemon with lemon, etc. To put results shortly, the women were not in it. None of them could trace prussic acid beyond the dilution of 20,000 parts to 1, while most of the men traced it up to 100,000 parts. Three of the latter actually passed the extreme limit, identifying prussic acid at a single part in 2,000,000. Beyond 100,000 parts all the women failed to recognize essence of lemon; all the men detected it at 250,000. This proportion represents their average superiority all around.—Pall Mall Budget.

The Orchid the Aristocrat Among Flowers.

The literature and cultivated orchids would already make a large library, and there are journals in several languages devoted to them exclusively, most of them illustrated with pictures drawn and colored with consummate skill. Millions of dollars are invested in them, and the money value of a single private collection in this country is at least a quarter of a million dollars, while the plants in one commercial establishment are worth still more. Of course, the prices which individual specimens command bear no relation to their beauty when judged by the ordinary canons of taste, and a plant which brings a thousand dollars at auction may differ so slightly from varieties that are sold by the dozen for the production of market flowers, that only the trained eye of the connoisseur can detect the peculiarities of habit and form, or can appreciate the purity of color, or the richness of marking, which makes it unique or rare. As with other objects prized by collectors, the value of such a plant is enhanced by the comforting assurance that no one else, or at least only a few of the elect, can share with its owner the joy of possession.—W. A. Stiles, in Scribner.

IS A DESPOTIC RULER.

The Stomach Not Easily Dethroned When Once It Obtains Mastery.

One of the greatest misfortunes that can happen to a man in his earthly career is to discover that he has a stomach. He may know it theoretically or recollect the lessons in physiology of his schoolboy day, but according to the San Francisco Chronicle, when he finds out by actual, personal experience that he has a stomach he is to be pitied. The whole science of gastronomy—and it is a science—has been devised and perfected for the benefit of the men who have made this discovery. All the studies of the whole glittering galaxy of gastronomists, all the culinary triumphs of the great restaurants in the capitals of the world, are due to the simple fact that men have found out that they have stomachs, and that that organ, when once discovered, must be petted and flattered and soothed and kept in good humor to prevent its revolting and creating revolution and civil war. It is safe to say that the primitive man never knew that he had a stomach. It has been reserved for civilization to make the discovery, and it is by no means a foregone conclusion that civilization should pride itself upon having done so.

The maxim that one never enjoys a good dinner until after it has been eaten is a refinement of modern and degenerate days, containing much sound philosophy from a certain standpoint, but that standpoint is a fictitious and mistaken one. There is no natural reason, why a dinner, good or bad, should be enjoyed. The one object of eating is to satisfy hunger, and that being done, the dinner should be forgotten. It is only the imperious and arbitrary stomach which insists upon a further recognition of its claims, and it is only human weakness which submits to its demand. A modern philosopher, in terse though inelegant diction, has laid down this maxim, which is almost idiomatic: "You must down your stomach or your stomach will down you." There is more in this than will meet the eye of the casual reader. The stomach may, as certain of the ancients believed, be the real seat of the emotions, passions and affections, but we make a great mistake if we subordinate the ego to a single organ, and especially to one which is only too ready to presume upon the favor shown it and the license given it. Healthy children know nothing about their stomachs, except that they ache sometimes if called on to do double duty, and there is nothing so healthy and happy in the world as a healthy child. If children of a larger growth could but ignore the gastric organ or forget it, dyspepsia would become a lost disease, and all the evils that follow in its train would disappear.

EIGHTY-SIX YEARS A SAILOR.

A Venerable British Tar Who Saw Fighting Before He Was 10 Years Old.

The grand old man of the British navy has completed his 94th year, and a very wonderful career has Admiral Sir Lewis Tobias Jones, G.C.B., a son of Sligo, had, according to The Toronto Empire. He was born in 1799, and entered the service when he was just turned 8 years of age, that is to say, on New Year's Day, 1808. Nor was this one of the formal entries so common at the period. Before he was 10 years old he was present during the disastrous undertaking which we call the Welcheren expedition; he was still a midshipman when he took part in the bombardment of Algiers in 1816, and he saw no more fighting till he was commander of the line-of-battle ship Princess Charlotte at the bombardment of St. Jean d'Acre in 1840. He, however, saw some severe work in putting down the slave trade, besides assisting in the capture of Lagos, then a slave depot, which was turned into a refuge for slaves under the British flag. In the same ship—the old paddle-wheel Sampson—he commanded the steam squadron at our naval attack on Odessa in 1854; then helped to reduce Soukhoum Kaleh, on the Circassian coast; then brought his ship safely through the great Euxine storm of November, 1854, by cutting away her masts and letting the seas sweep over her as she steamed head to wind, and as a reward for this he was promoted to the charge of the line of battleship London, in which he assisted in the capture of Kinburn. He was second in command in China, and in the operations that led to the capture of Pekin in 1860, but his only post as an admiral, for he had no great friends to back him up, and was even fifty-one and a half years in the navy before he got his flag, was at Queenstown. He holds the post of visitor and governor of Greenwich Hospital.

Aluminum.

Alumina abounds in nearly all clays, the clays at Boulder, in Colorado, showing as high as 34 per cent. of alumina. This alumina is the oxide of aluminum, which is more liberally distributed than any known metal. All clays contain from 15 per cent. upwards, while bauxite, cryolite and corundum contain from 40 to 80 per cent. of the oxide of alumina, which is equivalent to from 25 to 40 per cent. of metallic aluminum. Bauxite is the most plentiful in country and is especially adapted to a new Colorado smelting process in connection with the fluxes used. Immense deposits are found in Maryland, Alabama, Georgia, Arkansas, Missouri, Colorado, New Mexico and Utah.

The present selling price of commercial aluminum containing 80 to 90 per cent. of aluminum and from 8 to 20 per cent. of silica and iron is now 60 to 80 cents per pound, and the market demands are far in excess of the supply. This kind of aluminum is unfit for decorative purposes until further refined, and the silicon makes it brittle, while the Colorado product can be used for any and every purpose as it comes from the furnace.

The uses of this metal are innumerable, but some of the more important are cutlery, kitchen utensils, stoves, furnaces, sash, doors, blinds, roofing, bath tubs, plumbers' utensils, hulls of vessels, machinery of all kinds, bridges, gas and electric fixtures, gas and water pipes, picture frames, wagons, carriages, bicycles and vehicles of all kinds; and as the metal does not tarnish and alloys with other metals it will be used for all purposes when either beauty, durability, strength or lightness is desired.—Denver Times.

A Substitute for Coffee.

Parched malt is said by experts to be much superior to an ordinary quality of coffee, and is being exclusively used as a substitute for our favorite breakfast drink, besides being obtainable at a cost of only four cents a pound, roasted and ground. The healthfulness of the article is well established, and its use will doubtless become general among the poorer classes and those who desire to curtail household expenses.

Without Curve or Cutting.

"A railroad without a curve or cutting," said Wallace Kennedy, a Buenos Ayres merchant, who was at the Southern recently, "is a splendid thing from an engineering standpoint, but it is a very tedious affair for the passenger. Curves and cuttings are both necessary evils in one sense, but they relieve the monotony immensely. The new road from Buenos Ayres to the Andes beats all records, with more than 200 miles of uneventful track, almost on a line such as mathematicians describe as the shortest distance between any two points. No one who has not seen this remarkable stretch of road, straight in front and behind as far as the eye can reach, even when aided by a field glass, can grasp what it means or what an amount of wearisome monotony it involves and entails."—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

INDEX TO CHARACTER.

THE FEET CAN TELL THE TALE OF MENTAL TRAITS.

The Trilby Toes the Thing—Different Forms of Heels, Insteps and Toes, and What it is They All Signify.

THERE is character in feet. In spite of shoes that compress and distort, and boots which causes bunions to rise like mountain chains, there is still enough of the aboriginal human foot lefot for the anatomist to read disposition and the temperament in every line of it. Everybody knows that from the outline of the hand in nine cases out of ten, a trained observer can tell what manner of man bears it. The foot is the lower hand. It conforms in its structure with that of the hand. The toes are shortened digits. Tapering fingers and a gracefully modelled hand show good breeding and innate refinement. The hand of a man of artistic temperament is slender and the fingers are long and tapering.

Feet encased in patent leathers, with Picadilly toes, do not get much of a chance to show anything about the character of their owner. After they have been kept in such unyielding, enamelled coffins for a few years there isn't a really flesh and blood foot there any more. There's a calloused, bumpy, gnarled and warped sort of a thing there, which shows no characteristics, except, perhaps, lack of common sense in the owner. But there are men and women whose feet have the semblance of the shape they had when they romped around the nurseries, before the days of narrow toes and French heels.

This Trilby craze has done much to induce us to treat our feet decently and respectably. Many a young woman who has pondered over Du Maurier's description of the most beautiful foot in all Paris has had the courage to order shoes which were large enough for her, and some even had the temerity to appear in footgear almost as loose as the slippers in which Trilby paid her first visit to the "Laird" and Little Billy.

All the character cannot be obliterated from the lines of the human foot even in these degenerate days.

SOME SORTS OF FEET.

Modern feet are not pretty, as a general thing. Most of them are positively ugly. Did you ever see an uglier member than that represented in a drawing of Abraham Lincoln's foot, which is exhibited by a Broadway shoe dealer? From the picture you would think that you were looking at the gnarled and distorted taproot of an oak. The most noticeable thing about that foot is the broad, firm big toe. Such a toe shows strength of character, firmness and executive ability. A weak big toe would point inward. This toe was planted firmly and squarely. It curled up a little toward the end, too. These retrousse toes show independence and determination. There are persons who have noses formed that way, too, and you know what kind of dispositions they have.

There is a woman in this town who was left, by the death of her husband, with a large publishing business hampered by mortgages. She reorganized that business, brought order out of chaos, and by tact and energy bought and built up several periodicals until they became abundant sources of profit. She has a short and well-formed foot, a chiropodist told me the other day. The great toe is broad and firm and curves outward in a way that shows determination and grit.

Some anatomists say that every toe should be in a direct line with the foot. It's hard to judge a foot in that plumb line and spirit level way.

The man who toes well out as he walks and steps squarely upon the ball of his foot has, as a general way, those assertive big toes.

Do you remember the old Mother Goose rhyme about the five little pigs which you told off on your toes when you were a youngster? You said of the big toe, "This little pig had roast beef;" of the second toe, "this little pig had none," and the little toe was the small and miserable pig that only "cried wee, wee."

There's self-assertion and go in the big toe. It ought to be strong and broad. It does more than the rest. It has more character.

SIGNIFICATION OF TOES.

Some persons have short, square toes, all about the same length, and an assertive big toe that looks as though it was anxious to get out and look the world squarely in the face. They are the practical men and women. They look at everything from the standpoint of hard common sense. Their insteps are low. Their heels are broad and they set them down in a way which gives impression that the owners know exactly what they are talking about. They are the men and women who make up their minds to have a thing and invariably get it. Those are the feet which are oftenest stamped and the stamping, if the foot belongs to a woman, is accompanied by a toss of the head. It's a foolish man who does not recognize the coming down of such a foot.

There's poetry, imagination and romanticism in feet. Men and women of artistic temperament have long, slender toes and high, arched insteps. The second toe of a person of artistic temperament is longer than the other toes. The owners of such toes almost always have inclination to music, art and poetry. The long second toe is the sign of the artist, the sculptor and the poet. It shows sentimentalism and romance. If you will notice Trilby's foot, as Du Maurier draws it you will see that the second toe seems almost exaggerated, so much longer is it than its fellows. Such a toe, it may be said, is the index of an artistic sense. It is well if such a member has in the great toe a strong, firm neighbor. The long second toe means dreaminess and idealism. The firm big toe means practical sense. It is well to have both.

In the perfect foot the little toe curves a trifle inward. You will see that in classic sculpture. If the small toe has an upward arch it shows a warm, sunshiny, passionate nature. Those with the short, stubby toes and the feet which they stamp so decisively at times often have that upward curve to the little toe. Artists and students of pedagogy say that this peculiarity is particularly noticeable in the feet of women in Southern climates.

THE HIGH INSTEP.

One of the surest signs of refinement and good breeding is the high, arched instep. It shows a long line of cultured ancestors. It is patrician. It marked the feet of sandalled Roman nobles. It has been seen in the courts of Europe for centuries. It is seen in New York drawing rooms to-day.

It is no wonder that women have, for centuries, sought to increase the natural arch of the foot. It's more than vanity which induces a woman to wear French heels. Still there is not much use in trying to affect a high instep. The raising of the arch, by means of the French heel, is too transparent a ruse.

The best way is to adopt the new Trilby footgear, which is so big that it hides the real shape of the foot. Then those who see it will say that the foot concealed beneath the abundant folds of shoe leather must be really all that is artistic and "Trilbyesque," or the owner would not so sacrifice outward appearances.

It's hard to apply set rules to this reading of character in feet, yet there is much to be learned from toes, insteps and heels.—N.Y. Herald.

CHIVALRY OF DISRAELI.

His Devotion to Women in General and the Queen in Particular.

Disraeli's chivalrous devotion to women is abundantly clear from his novels, but it has been made clearer still to those, Mr. Froude among them, who have had access to his unpublished letters to Mrs. Brydges Williams, now in the possession of Lord Rothschild, and who were cognizant of his almost daily correspondence with another lady of great powers of mind and personal charm, who, to the deep sorrow of all who knew her, has recently followed the leader whom she honored with her friendship.

His loyal devotien to Lady Beaconsfield and the adoration he inspired in her have long been notorious. What wonder, then, that to Disraeli, a romancist in statescraft, an idealist in politics, and a provincial in sentiment, his chivalrous regard for the sex should have taken a deeper complexion when the personage was not only a woman, but a queen? In trifles Disraeli never forgot the sex of his sovereign. In great affairs he never appeared to remember it. To this extent the charge of flattery brought against him may be true.

He approached the queen with the supreme tact of a man of the world, than which no form of flattery can be more effective and more dangerous. So far the indictment against him may be upheld. The word "subservience" is the translation of this simple fact into language of political malice. It has been freely used, and events of such vast import as the imperial title and the congress of Berlin were put down by political adversaries to the flexibility of the courtier rather than to the supreme volition of the statesman. It it was true of Charles Earl Grey that he

Wrought in brave old age what youth had planned, it was equally true of Lord Beaconsfield.

Wearing of Glass Eyes.

It is a fallacy to suppose that people who wear cork legs and glass eyes are indifferent to their personal appearance. They are often vainer than ordinary individuals.

A rich man, for instance, who is obliged to wear an artificial eye, will wear three different eyes every day—an eye for morning, when the pupil is not very large; an eye for noon, when the pupil is smaller; an eye for evening, when the pupil has extended to its full size.

A London eye-maker, who gave this information said he made about an equal proportion of glass eyes for men and women. Some people keep quite a stock in their possession, in fact no less than 12 eyes have been made by my informant within three years.

His son had got one made from measurement, and that eye fitted so perfectly that the old gentleman, in an outburst of gratitude, wrote off for eleven other eyes. The eyemaker admitted that this was an exceptional instance.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

Origin of Some of the Dust.

Dust is to a large extent a product of human activity. In houses and workshops, on the highways, and in the streets, everywhere there is wear and tear of things, and the product is always dust. The wearing and cleansing of our clothing is continually breaking up its fibres into minute particles, and the friction of clothing on the skin carries away the scales of the epidermis, which are constantly being shed and renewed.

Every contact of human feet, horses' hoofs, and the wheels of vehicles with paving and road materials wear away particles of iron and stone. The effects of the weather and the alternations of cold and heat disintegrate all exposed surfaces. To these particles, which form the dust invariably present in dwellings and in the streets, there must be added the innumerable minute cells of vegetable origin incessantly floating in the air, and on a complete view the dust produced by the disintegration of meteors by contact with our atmosphere must also be mentioned.

Dust accordingly consists of portions of all substances, organic and inorganic, which decay by natural processes, and are reduced to powder by any means whatever. Few of its constituents can be recognized by the naked eye. The microscope alone can detect the nature of many, and especially those of the greatest importance.—All the Year Round.

Mistakes Will Happen.

The Telegraph Age tells how a telegraph editor in a Boston newspaper office wrote a note of remonstance to the telegraph operator because the latter in his copy had entirely omitted the letters "f" and "k" where they should have appeared. The operator replied to this note as follows:

An Ancient Piece of Wrought Iron.

There is perhaps no more ancient piece of wrought ironwork in existence than the large iron column at Delhi, which measures 60 feet in height, about 16 inches in diameter at the base, tapering to 12 inches at the top, with an enlarged capital with ornamental fluting, and is estimated to weigh about 17 tons. With our modern appliances and most powerful machinery its construction would be considered no mean task, and its manufacture and erection at a date estimated at 900 years before the Christian era is calculated to inspire respect and wonder as to the means employed by the early artizans who effected it.

PRESIDENT OF FRANCE.

HE IS RAPIDLY BECOMING A POPULAR IDOL.

Personal Traits and Habits—All Sorts of Tricks to Gain Applause—M. Faure's Rise From the Tannery.

Felix Faure, the new President of the French Republic, rose up to his high office from a tanner's apprentice. He is proud of this. Always above his desk he keeps a picture of himself in his tanner's togs. This interesting picture was taken when he was nineteen years of age and is here reproduced.

Felix Faure is in many ways the cleverest President the French Republic has yet had. He is up to all sorts of tricks and devices and snares to get popularity and keep it.

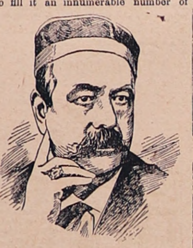
Courtesy and kindliness of heart are two of the chief characteristics of the people of France, and flattery has always been one of the strongest cards a French statesman or politician could play. With hardly an exception the French Presidents have prided themselves upon their diplomacy with the people.

Of all the Chief Executives, however, Felix Faure, the now President of France, is now seen to be the greatest diplomat. The Parisian populace—and indeed the people of the provinces—are rapidly raising him to the pinnacle of hero worship. In France it takes, oftentimes, but an unimportant incident, perhaps only an apt phrase or two, to put a man upon the pedestal of popularity, Felix Faure is making his place secure in the hearts of the French people by a thousand and one little acts and speeches of this sort.

PERSONAL TRAITS AND HABITS.

Unlike most Frenchmen he is an extremely early riser, and every morning sees him on his feet at 5 o'clock. By 8 he is through the bulk of his business for the day, and it is only in this manner that he is able to find time for his frequent trips among all sorts and conditions of men, and his visits to institutions, into society and among the rich and poor.

A curious fad of his is the smoking of a briarwood pipe, a trick that he learned while he was at a commercial school in England, and in the three hours immediately after his rising he manages to fill it an innumerable number of times. When in public, later in the day, he is ready for the conventional French cigarette, which, like most of his fellow countrymen, he makes himself, rolling it rapidly without a glance, while absorbed in conversation.



From a Photograph Taken in 1860, When M. Faure Was a Tanner's Apprentice.

Few Frenchmen are better horseback riders and fencers. By the constant practice of these two amusements he has kept himself in splendid health and preserved his figure free from any suspicion of excessive avoirdupois. Another favorite occupation of his is potting rabbits and shooting woodcock on the estate of his son-in-law. He is also more or less of a gymnast, and has taken considerable interest in the establishment of gymnasia in the Young Men's Christian Association branches now widely scatteren through France.

In fact, he has every trait that a Frenchman, be he rich or be he abjectly poor, likes the best. President Faure is brave, for the Cross of the Legion of Honor is on his breast, won on the battlefields of 1870, when he fought as a Lieutenant-Colonel. He is religious, always attending church and always accompanied by his wife and daughters. He is fond of gayety, life and social affairs, and is taking pains to widen the circle of French court society so that it will include many people who have hitherto not been able to get within the charmed circle.

FAURE AND THE GAMIN.

A brand new democracy, indeed, is the keynote of the Felix Faure regime. It is a democracy that finds its chief expression in making everyone a part of it. Not an overture or bid for kindly notice is disdained. This incident will show the president's extreme kindliness. The other day he went for a short walk with the Commandant Moreau. At the entrance of the Avenue Champs Elysees a tattered, disreputable, dirty-faced gamin stepped before the two noted pedestrians, and raising his cap, cried out with the true Parisian twang and with a suggestion of blague;

"Vive le President!"

The commandant, Moreau, waved his hand towards the boy with military severity: "The president does not wish to be recognized," but M. Faure silently tossed a piece of silver to the boy, who, now his momentary fright over, transported with delight, shouted with redoubled energy and an attempt at a handspring, "Merci, m'sieur. Vive Felix Faure!"

So the campaign of popularity goes merrily on, the new President scoring point after point. The Elysee has taken on a new air of brightness. Frequent dinners are given and a charmingly attractive table is set. The menu supplied is always capital, the viands well cooked and the wines selected with skill.

A most attractive feature of these state dinners is the presence of the President's daughter, Mlle. Lucie Faure, who is a charming young lady endowed with no small amount of literary skill, and who has just published her first volume of poems. She has such unlimited influence over her father that the Parisians jokingly declare she is the real President of the Republic, and have nicknamed her "Miss Lucifer."

Two Bad Months.

The number of wrecks at sea and the consequent loss of life in January and February of this year were unprecedented. During those two months, seventy-five vessels, including twenty-eight schooners, seventeen steamers, fourteen sloops, five barges, three barks, three brigs, two barkentines, two ships and one pilot boat, were wrecked, with a total loss of 1,190 lives. Over half these losses, or 669 lives, were occasioned by seven disasters, viz.: Steamer Elbe, 332; steamer Port Nictheroy, 120; ferry boat Terciera, 100; steamer Kingdon, 40; steamer Chicora, 26; steamer Initrahull, 26, and steamer Nordsee, 25.—Chicago Tribune.

SPRING MILLINERY.

As It Appears Now It is an Erratic Jumble of Shapes and Combinations.

Spring millinery, as it appears just at present, is an erratic jumble of shapes and combinations of materials and colors, with millions of glittering spangles of every hue thrown in for further diversity. But, if we avoid the exaggerated perversions of real millinery art, it is a simple matter to find the most charming little bonnets and the most becoming hats imaginable.

A special feature of the new millinery is that the flowers and leaves are mostly very large, the hydrangea being one of the favorite blossoms. Petunia is one of the most popular colors, and appears in straw hats as well as flowers and ribbons. The wide effect gained by wings and out-spreading bows is still a dominant characteristic of both hats and bonnets, but the broad Dutch bonnet, so fashionable all winter, has grown a little point in front, which makes it resemble the Marie Stuart shape, and is infinitely more becoming to the majority of faces.

The jet bonnets, with their bunches of bright flowers at either side, are very attractive. Three shades of one flower are usually grouped together, and three feathers also. Fine plaitings of chiffron, with either flowers or feathers, are arranged from both hats and bonnets to fall on to the hair at the back, and a curtain of lace caught up in the middle is another fancy. A pretty jet bonnet with wide-spreading wings of jet is trimmed with cream-colored pansies above the ears. Violets and roses are used in combination, and roses in all the unnatural colors are mingled with the uncommon tints of the new ribbons, which are lovely with chine figures, and both satin and velvet stripes.

The chapeau rond is one of the new hats of the season which has a straight round rim and is very becoming. Violet-colored straw is trimmed with violets and green fern. Cavalier hats are trimmed with large roses and bows of glace silk. In fact there is every shape of hat imaginable, and the straws are so soft and prettily colored that middle-aged women will find less trouble than ever in getting a becoming hat.

Toques are a little larger, but they are to be worn as much as ever. Deep yellow straws, trimmed with Valenciennes lace, will be popular later when the warm days are with us. Another style of hat, called the Welsh shape, turns up at one side and one of black chip is prettily trimmed with bows of black kilted net, edged with jet, and black ostrich tips with an aigrette rising from the center. The new sailor shape is much like the old, except that the rim is crinkled. One of green straw is trimmed with a wide bow of black lace and satin and three large bunches of mauve convolvuli, with ivy leaves and white berries.

Iridescent wings are are a feature of the bonnets. A pretty confection has a crown of sequin jet embroidery over gold tinsel, iridescent green wings and fan ends of fine French lace with bunches of pink roses. A butterfly toque of Melin lace has bows of amethyst glace ribbon and piquet of tea roses. A small fan of lace falls on the hair fastened with a brooch.

Bows and rosettes are placed on the crown of some hats. Rims are often faced with black kilted chiffon and it is a relief to know that all hats are to be worn well on the head and perfectly straight.—N.Y. Sun.

Candy Fumes Spoil Teeth.

Since Adam's day parents have been warning their children to beware of candy, for it would give them the toothache. Boys and girls have held this admonition honored in the breach and the dental profession has waxed powerful. Now it appears that even the smell of sweetmeats is noxious. A man cunning in all the refinements of dental torture said yesterday:

"You ought to see the teeth of those who work in candy factories. In the mouths of some of them, however, you would see no natural teeth; they are all false. In the case of many others the teeth are ruined. The fumes in these establishments are damaging to the teeth. It is known that candy-eating is more or less injurious to the teeth, but that does not compare with the fumes of candy in the process of being made. A large part of my practice comes from the candy factories, and the work brought me in this way is of the most difficult kind."—Chicago Record.

Letters From Charles Lamb.

A large number of letters by Charles Lamb, written between 1810 and 1820 to friends in Birmingham, and previously unknown, were recently discovered in a collection of old letters of the first quarter of the century at Birmingham. In one he writes: "There is quiet dignity in old bachelorhood, leisure from care, noise, etc., an enthronization upon the armchair of a man's feeling that he may sit, walk, read unmolested, to none accountable." In another he says: "I know you have chosen to take up a high opinion of my moral worth; but, I say it before God, and I do not lie, you are mistaken in me. I could not bear to lay open all my failings to you, for the sentiment of shame would be too pungent."

THE CARRYING TRADE.

The English Own More Than Half of the World's Boats.

From a paper in The Contemporary Review, by Michael Mulhall, the following leading facts relative to the carrying trade of the world are gathered. The people of the British Empire own more than half the ocean vessels of the world, and 50 per cent. of the annual savings of the nation is expended in building new ships and railroads. Since 1840 the tonnage of British shipping has trebled, while that of all other nations has only doubled. Fifty years ago British shipping held one-third the carrying trade of the high seas. To-day it holds over one-half. Sailing vessels have now an aggregate carrying capacity of only one-fifth that of steam vessels. The decline of tonnage of sailing vessels since 1860 has been 4,000,000 tons. The increase in trade has not fully kept pace with increase of tonnage, which gives color to the assertion made in some quarters that the business transportation, like other industries has been developed to a point beyond existing needs. The greatest increase in port entries is found in the colonies and South America. The tendency in shipbuilding at present is toward increase of size.

Turning next to the railway carrying trade, we find that there are now in operation 410,000 miles. This would be sufficient to girdle the earth at the equator about 16 times. The total cost of these railways has been $3,073,400,000,000. Of existing railway mileage 90 per cent. has been built since 1840. Since 1860 the average annual railway construction has been 10,000 miles. Railway traffic has reached upon marine traffic to largely increase the latter. In 1850 the cost of land carriage was eight times as much as it is in 1895.

While Great Britain holds supremacy in ocean traffic, the United States is far in advance in railway traffic, doing two-thirds of all the railway transportation of goods, and owning one-third of the total railway mileage of the globe.

The navigable waterways of different countries (rivers and canals) are, in miles, as follows: Britain, 3,810; France, 7,730; Germany, 17,080; Russia, 33,920; Austria, 7,200; Canada, 3,360; United States, 51,820; Brazil, 22,000. The carrying capacity of vessels navigating lakes and rivers of the United States is 9,300,000 tons. Of the total carrying traffic of the Suez Canal, British vessels do 76 per cent. The net profits of this canal in 1892 amounted to 8.5 per cent. of the cost of its construction.

A Long Trip Awheel.

Thomas W. Winder, of Warsaw, Ind., has started from New Orleans on a trip around the United States on a wager, and to establish a record. The estimated distance he is to travel is 21,000 miles in 300 consecutive days, or a daily average of seventy-two miles a day. He is to cross thirty-three states and territories, and 230 counties, visit 2,764 cities, towns and villages and register at seventy-six points on the journey. His outfit will consist of a wreel having changeable gear, powerful lamp for night riding, automatic brake, 10,000-mile cyclometer, clock and tent made especially for this trip, the wheel acting as a pole and brace, so that he may stop whenever he chooses, the whole only weighing eighteen pounds over the weight of the wheel, which is twenty-four pounds. He will carry on his back a camera fitted for carrying films for 500 negatives, this weighing five pounds. To the camera is a small umbrella for protecting his head in hot weather. Mr. Winder intends to keep as near the line as possible, and will carry a permit from the railroads for crossing on bridges and entering tunnels, when it is found necessary. To win the wager, Mr. Winder is compelled to earn his expenses en route, which he will probably do by newspaper correspondence and advertising.—New York Tribune.

The Last English Duel.

The last duel—the last fatal one at least—was fought in a field in Maiden Lane in a solitary part of Holloway, in 1843. The district acquired considerable notoriety from the event. It was the duel fought between Col. Fawcett and Lieut. Munro. The former was killed. The duellists were not only brother-officers; they were also brothers in-law, having married two sisters.

The coroner's jury, on the inquest, returned a verdict of wilful murder, not only against Lieut. Munro, but against the seconds also. The latter, however, were acquitted. Munro evaded the hands of justice by seeking refuge abroad. Four years later he surrendered to take his trial at Old Bailey. He was found guilty and sentenced to death. He was, however, strongly recommended to mercy, and the sentence was eventually commuted to twelve months' imprisonment.

The neighborhood in which this duel was fought is no longer solitary; a wide thoroughfare, known as the Brecknock road, runs through it, and a rifle-ground beside the Brecknock Arms appropriately indicates where the final shot was fired.—Chambers' Journal.

Training the Red Raspberry.

My way is to firmly drive four-foot stakes one rod apart and nail to each 30 inches above the ground, a short piece of plank two feet in length and saw a notch close to each end of the upper edge. In these notches firmly stretch No. 16 wires and brace back the end posts. The accompanying illustration makes perfectly clear this simple and effective way of doing the work. The advantages of keeping raspberry and blackberry vines from sprawling all over the lot will be best appreciated by those who have tried this method.

FACTS OF HISTORY

Experience is the Best of All Teachers.

LET CANADA BE WISE.

And Profit by the Mistakes of Other Nations—What Other Peoples Have Done and What They Have Been Sorry For—Protection and Free Trade Viewed in the Light of Experience.

NO. 1.

The electors of Canada are asked to abandon the protective system under which great development has been made during the past sixteen years.

Fortunately for us the question of the tariff is not a new question; it is as old as the history of the world's progress. The electors of Canada need not be told that experience is always the best teacher and that experience warns Canadians to hold fast to their present system of protective, defensive tariff.

The Liberal Party are asking the Canadian electors to adopt a trade system which is in vogue in only one country in the world, and that country adopted it only after 500 years of protection, during which time her industries were thoroughly established and her market won in every part of the world.

That country is England and even there, among the great mass of the people there is a strong feeling for a return to protection to England's own markets for her own people.

What Lord Salisbury Thinks.

Speaking some time ago at Hastings, Lord Salisbury, then Premier of England, declared as follows: "Forty or fifty years ago everybody believed that free trade had conquered the world, and they prophesied that every nation would follow the example of England and give itself up to absolute free trade, but the results were not what they prophesied.

"We live in an age of a war on tariffs.

"Every nation is trying how it can, by agreement with its neighbors, get the greatest possible protection for its own industries and at the same time the greatest possible access to the markets of its neighbors."

"I want to point out to you that what I observe is, that while A is very anxious to get a favor from B and B is anxious to get a favor from C, nobody cares two straws about getting the commercial favor of Great Britain. (Cheers.)

"What is the reason for that? It is that in this great battle Great Britain has deliberately stripped herself of the armor and the weapons by which the battle is to be fought. The only weapons are a defensive tariff. If you fight, you must fight with the weapons with which those whom you have to contend against are fighting. (Cheers.)

"The weapon with which they all fight is admission to their own markets—that is to say, A says to B, 'If you will make your duties such that I can sell in your market, I will make my tariff duty such that you can sell in my market.' (Cheers.)

"We begin in England by saying we will levy no duties upon anybody, and we declare that it would be contrary and disloyal to the glorious and sacred doctrine of Free Trade to levy duty upon anybody for the sake of what we could get by it. (Cheers.)

"It may be noble, but it is not business. (Loud cheers.)

"On these terms, let me tell you, you will get nothing, and I am sorry to tell you that you are practically getting nothing." (Laughter.)

Cobden's Prophecy.

Lord Salisbury, in making the statement with regard to prophecies made by Free Traders, no doubt had in his mind especially the following prediction of Cobden: "That twenty years after England had adopted free trade every other civilized nation would follow England's footsteps."

The Result.

The result, however, has been as Lord Salisbury stated, that while England has given every other country her markets, no other country has given her markets to England, because every other civilized country has had and still has a high protective tariff.

Other countries have tried the free trade system and their experience is most instructive.

Russia's Experience.

In 1819 Russia tried free trade. The lesson she learned thereby was a bitter one indeed. Her experience is told in a circular issued by Imperial authority by Count Nesselrode in 1822.

"Russia sees herself compelled by circumstances to adopt an independent industrial system; the products of the Empire find no access to foreign markets; domestic manufacturers are either ruined or at the point of ruin; all the monies of the Empire flow abroad and the most solid business houses are on the brink of failure."

As a result of that three years of free trade, Russia returned to a very high defensive tariff and has maintained it ever since against the world, a few years ago making it almost prohibitive; and with this effect, that the country has become one of the greatest industrial countries of the globe and the production of her industries now far exceeds in value the products of her agriculture, with the result that her agriculture is prosperous.

Sweden Once Tried Free Trade.

Previous to the rule of Gustavus Adolphus, Sweden was a free trade country. She had a large amount of raw material, but she exported it to other countries where it was manufactured. In consequence, the people of Sweden were exceedingly poor, and her agriculture was prostrated to such an extent that the fields of Finland were drawn upon for the purpose of feeding her own people. But in the reign of the monarch mentioned above protection was adopted and almost prohibitory duties placed against various imports. In consequence of this the manufactures of Sweden trebled in thirty years and have grown up to the present time so that she is shipping abroad some millions of dollars' worth of her manufactures and such an impetus has been given to her agricultural life thereby, that, instead of depending upon foreign fields for her food stuff, she is now not only feeding her own people but sending abroad about twenty million dollars' worth of farm produce a year.

Fifty years ago agitators persuaded the people of Sweden to try free trade again. She did try it; but in the course of two or three years it had done such injury to her industrial and agricultural interests that the people returned to protection as quickly as possible.

THE UNITED STATES.

Several Times Have They Deserted Protection But Always Gladly Adopted It Again

The people of the United States may be said to be about as wideawake a business people as exist. They are a distinctly commercial people and their judgment upon commercial subjects ought to be worth something. And besides, because of the fact that their position is so similar to our own, their judgment upon the relative merits of trade policies ought to weigh heavily with the intelligent Canadian people.

The first act of Congress voted by the new republic when it was formed was in its preamble declared to be an act "For the support of the Government, for the discharge of the public debt and for the encouragement and protection of manufacturers."

Under this high duties were placed upon foreign importations. It ought to be remarked here that a very large majority of the members of that Congress were farmers, who saw the necessity of a variety of industry.

Under this protection system, which was continued until 1816, the country was prosperous.

Low Tariff Tried—The Result.

In 1816 Congress under the influence of strong agitation lowered the duties materially. Other countries embraced the opportunity to immediately get a hold on the American market. Manufactures were sent from abroad at ruinous prices with the avowed object of destroying the American industries, and in 1816 even in the Parliament of England, it was publicly declared by Lord Brougham as follows:

"It is well worth while to incur the loss on the first exportation in order, by the glut to stifle in the cradle those infant manufactures in the United States which have been forced into existence."

As might be expected, the other manufacturing countries took the same steps, and in consequence the market was flooded. Then great depression in all branches of trade was felt: bankruptcy became general and financial ruin was everywhere present.

Speaking of this period Benton declares: "No price for property; no sales except those of the sheriff and the marshal; no purchasers at the execution sales except the creditors; no employment for industry; no demand for labor; no sale for products of the farm; no sound of the hammer. Distress was the universal cry of the people."

A Defensive Tariff Adopted Again.

Saddened by the experience just referred to, the American people in 1824 adopted once more a policy of high protective duties.

The results of this policy were quickly seen. Manufacture increased, the people were employed, and general prosperity prevailed.

In 1833, however, by a number of alliances, an Anti-Protection party Congress was elected and once more an approach to free trade was tried with the same results as above.

In 1842 a strong protection Congress was elected. At that time the country was simply exhausted by reason of the destruction of her industries and the non-employment of her people, and the victory of the American Protection party was a sweeping one. The result of their legislation was a high tariff again when confidence was restored; customs receipts increased the first year 75 per cent.; labor everywhere was in demand; the domestic market grew with rapidity; the produce of the farm was in demand in the homes of the toilers and every business interest prospered.

After this, once again the free trade fad was adopted in the United States with the same result, but in 1861 the people of the whole country had become tired of sacrificing American interests to foreign interests and they rose with great strength and demanded a policy of protection to American industries. That policy continued undisturbed through 31 years of the history of the United States, no attempt being made to change the tariff duties in the direction of free trade for all this space of time. In that 31 years of undisturbed protection the United States have made more industrial and commercial progress, times over, than in all the other years of their history combined.

A Period of Distress Again.

In 1892 the Democratic party, under the cry of tariff reform, succeeded in electing their President and a majority of the members of both Houses of Congress. The result of the election, because of the demands for destruction of protection to American interests, which had been made by the Democratic party, caused the greatest amount of uncertainty to prevail. This uncertainty, caused, as it always does, investment to stop. Production was also lessened to a large extent and thousands of employes throughout every section of the country were discharged. General depression was the result; hundreds of loan companies and banks failed; great railway corporations went into the hands of receivers; thousands upon thousands of workingmen were crying out for employment and their families for bread. This state of affairs was aggravated by the Tariff Bill, which made very many reductions in the high protective tariff of the nation, though the bill was by no means even an approach to Free Trade and left the tariff of the United States much higher than the present protective tariff of Canada.

The Sweep Out.

It did not take very long for the people to decide that they had made a mistake in 1892. In the election of November 1894 they announced their repentance in thunder tones. Candidates in favor of free trade or tariff reform were defeated by majorities away up in the thousands all over the country; indeed hardly such a candidate was elected at all. The result of the whole election was the most pronounced victory for a defensive and protective tariff that this continent has ever seen. So decided has been the victory in favor of that principle, that the opponents of it admit freely and publicly that the people have declared, in a way that cannot be misunderstood, that protection shall be the policy of the American nation for the next quarter of a century.

Canadians Learn a Lesson.

The timely facts here given from the commercial history of the American people ought to be of value to the Canadian electors when called upon to decide upon the Free Trade-Tariff Reform cries of Sir Richard Cartwright and Mr. Laurier. The Americans were in a much better position to open their markets to the world than we are, by reason of the fact that their industries are much better established and have been protected five times as long as ours. If the policy of the Opposition is adopted in Canada similar and indeed more disastrous results will follow here. Our workshops will be closed; our citizens will be thrown out of employment; we shall be importing goods from abroad and sending the money out of our own country to pay for the employment of foreigners who are fed by the farmers of other lands.

The inevitable consequence of these things will be the destruction of capital, the stopping of all investments, and the ruin of the home market, which to-day is consuming 90 per cent. of the products of Canadian farms.

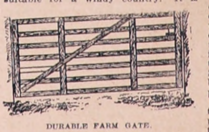
HEAR THE ANTS TALKING.

An Ingenious Method of Listening to Their Conversation.

That ants are capable of producing sounds intelligible to their fellows and even audible to our ears seems to be proved by the experiments of Sir John Lubbock, Landois, Robert Wroughton, of Bombay, C. Janet, Forel, E. Warsmann and others. It also seems to be determined that the sounds are produced by the rubbing together of superficial portions of the body. A simple yet ingenious contrivance is described for enabling an observer to hear and study these sounds. A glass funnel is set, small end down, in the middle of a square of window glass of five or six inches wide, fitting closely enough to prevent the insects crawling out under it. A bunch of ants about as large as a chestnut and free from any foreign substance is dropped through the funnel, and that is lifted up at once. While the ants are still confused, and before any of them can reach the edge of the glass, it is covered with another square like it, which has been surrounded, a short distance from the edge, by a pad of putty. This confines the ants and prevents their being crushed. The two plates of glass are pressed together to within about the thickness of an ant's body, but closer on one side than on the other, so as to hold some tight and leave others free to take such positions as please them. On applying this box of ants to the ear as one would a watch, a regular buzzing may be heard like that of boiling water in an open vessel, and with it some very clear stridulations. The ants may be kept alive several hours and even days in this prison if it is not air-tight; and whenever the ants are excited the stridulations may be heard very numerous and intense. The stridulations are supposed to be produced by rubbing the rough scaly surface of the chitinous covering, which is described as looking, when seen in one direction under the microscope, like the teeth of a saw.—Popular Science Monthly.

A Durable Farm Gate.

An Ohio reader sent the accompanying sketch of a farm gate which he has used for 15 years. It is light, durable, and suitable for a windy country. It is easily made. The material must be of the best. It is 10 feet 4 inches long and 5 feet high. The boards, brace and cross pieces are 1x4 inch pine. The end pieces are made of hard wood. Put the material together securely and the gate will give satisfaction.



DURABLE FARM GATE.

MODERN CANNIBALISM.

THE FIJI PEOPLE MADE A BAD BREAK RECENTLY.

After Twenty Years of Life as Christians They Return to Pagan Proclivities and Have a High Old Time of It.

Fate is a beater of drums in Fiji, and life is a dance and a hymn. Life used to be other and ruder things—drums used to beat for war, rapine, and cannibal feasting—until one day twenty years ago, when old King Vuni Valu, feeling his greatness diminishing, sent to the English Queen his favorite war club—his war-club that had broken to death many a poor human body afterward eaten. Having done which he ordered the great drums to call the people once more to the temples. They came, appetites whetted with thinking long on the way of what awaited them: Bad Earth smelling gleefully of his companions, Abode of Treachery and Dead-Men's Flesh, with many husa husas, or injunction to make haste. But where were the smoking ovens, the forks sacred to bokola, and the piquant herb which is to the thigh of a man what sage is to a goose or cayenne to a rarebit? It was to a spiritual rite Vuni Valu had summoned them. He wished them to turn Christians, like himself, for it was good that a tribe should be of one mind; and such is the philosophic and subservient habit of Fijians that they did so on the spot, saluting with all seeming reverence the strangers' God. And they learned Wesleyan hymns, gave up maneating, and carried on their festive mekes with finer abandon than before.

AN ARMED NATIVE CONSTABLE.

Equal and lesser kings followed Vuni Valu's example. The most covetous of men, they could not see the bright stuffs and shining trinkets of the strangers all going to one chief. Besides, the new distant government promised to protect them against one another in their hereditary positions. After that it was only rarely, except among the hill people that the wooden drums beat for anything save songs and dances, or Christmas chimes, or the dinner hours of the English—Only rarely, but often enough to show that a race cannot change on the impulse of a moment. Though the devoutest of converts, there came times when the old life called them in irresistible accents. I write of the latest of their lapses—that which will be three months past when this is printed, particulars of which, supplementing the meagre press despatches, could not be got sooner to America, since there is but one mail a month, and a letter travels two full months before reaching New York.

It was not, as first reported, the annual gathering of taxes which set the natives of Vanua Levu in revolt, and urged them back to savagery and cannibalism. Each village tills a patch of garden; the product goes to the government. Native chiefs value their salaries too highly to permit any delinquency in the payment of this tribute, and the people find it so much less than used to be required of them that they are easily drawn upon. The trouble really began with the appointment of a chief of the west side of the island to the control of the east side. "East is East and West is West," and because the easterners rank themselves better than the westerners, they could not submit to this imposition, which was like placing a black man in command of the flower of Georgia's militia. Eager to play with his new authority, the obnoxious chief demanded of the people of Seqaqa that they come and build him some houses. Now to build a house many men must labor many days—one hundred are sometimes engaged in the mere thatching of a roof. But it has been immemorially incumbent upon natives to render whatever service or property their chief might desire. Seqaqa gave no response. More messengers arrived from the chief, and in the message they bore there was an assumption which proved as friction to a match. Burning with resentment, the Seqaqans fell upon the messengers. One was killed. Whether he was eaten, only the villagers know; but that night there were high jinks in Seqaqa. Before morning they had thrown off their loin-cloths in scorn of government and Christianity, and with faces hideously blackened, teeth gleaming viciously white, streamers flying from arms and head, the excited men went through the bole bole—war-dance—and brandished guns and clubs wildly in the torchlight as of old they brandished spears. "Great swelling words" were shouted in defiance of the chief who was not their chief; all Seqaqa was at the boasting pitch of bravery, which is about the highest pitch known to Fijians.

A FIJI COOK IN AN AMERICAN FAMILY.

Evidently preparations had been in train for some time previously, for they presently retired to a spot they had fortified higher up in the hills. Three sides of this fort were precipitous, and only a narrow and difficult path led to it on the fourth. From this almost impregnable position they sallied forth in a few days and surprised a town which should have been on its guard. Women were treated with violence; men were killed; two at least were borne away, and the drums sounded for bokola, or a human body feast. Victims of war are food to make one invincible. Moreover, nothing else than this return to the "customs of Viti" (the real name of the islands pronounced Fiji by the Tongans) could demonstrate how utterly the spell of the stranger had been cast off. Still they did not disdain to help out their orgies with strangers' whisky. Yanqona of course is still drunk, as implied by the photograph—first ever taken of the ceremony. In it Ratu Epeli, son of one of the kings who ceded the islands to Britain, and, I believe, the cause of the late disturbance, is seen receiving a bowl of yanqona, his principal men of rank about him, who, when he drinks, will clap their hands in celebration, shout, and end up with a deep grunt. Until recently the yanqona root was chewed by young men, and the (what schoolboys would term) spitballs were put in a wooden bowl and covered with water, which was afterward strained through hibiscus fibre. Rhubarb, magnesia, various things are suggested by the taste of the yellow liquor handed around in a cocoanut shell that by long usage has acquired within a beautiful enamel like the purple bloom of a Concord grape. It is soporific to the muscles, not a stimulant to the senses, and that is why the Seqaqans, under the circumstances, preferred whisky and rum. One may distinguish in the doorway of Ratu Epeli's house the long black neck of that which makes conquests more lasting than missions.

Several excesses were committed before the magistrate arrived from Labosa to keep matters quiet until the Governor came up from Auva in the little government steamer with his Armed Native Constabulary. Sequqa is only seven miles overland from Labosa, but there is no track, and the forces had to skirt the coast for fifteen miles, then march ten miles through the bush to the marauders. Magnificent bronze fellows were Governor Thurston's native policemen. They were armed with double-barrelled shot guns, wore the white native cloth produced from wood pulp, and a fringed kilt of water weed and the brightly dyed leaves of the pandanus shrub. Their hair stood out stiff, long, crinkly.

TYPES.

To the relief of both sides, no doubt, the fighting was brief. The governor advanced with his men in a determined way. The marauders, after a few ineffective shots, gave in, and soon the bush was as quiet as the islet of Vatu Vara over there in the shimmering sea were an American named Thompson lives undisturbed with his Tahitian wife and a servant or two. While the grievance remains the disaffection will continue, and likewise the danger which chills one's back; but for the present the district is again peacefully singing and dancing, going to Wesleyan services, and eating the mollusks, radiates, and vertebrates, which the strangers insist are preferable to the upper parts of warriors' arms. Nearly all of such sea food is procured by the women. In their scant garb they make a carnival of swimming and diving for fish—fish that have the most brilliant golds and greens and scarlets and silvers of any in the world. In one of the pictures a group of women are returning from a fishing expedition. All but one are married women; the maiden may be told, if not by the firm flesh and full curves of her mahogany-colored figure, then by the single curl which hangs pendent over one ear. It has not been an ordinary fishing. This maiden, after sitting four days in retirement coated with oil and turmeric powder, went, according to the native custom, to bathe and fish before departing for the house of her affianced, where, by preparing him wedding-soup and breaking bread (or rather yam) with him, she will complete one Fijian form of ceremony which makes of her a bride.—Harper's Weekly.

Will Power and Disease.

There is a great deal to be said in favor of what is best described as the "mental science" cure for many of the minor ills of life. It is possible to throw off weakness, inertness, and languor, and infuse new life and spirit into one's own failing system by mere effort of will. True, it is hard at first, but with every trial it comes easier, until one may almost feel that the mind has gained a supremacy over the body. It is certain that the mind can, to a great extent, control the body, and drive away much that saps vitality and undermines the strength. To keep ever before the mind the idea that will-power is one of the strongest forces in nature, and steadfastly to refuse to yield to weakness, is to have gained something that, once possessed, no one will ever be willing to lose.

Don't wear a veil with a hole in it. It gives a woman a squalid look of poverty that there is no excuse for. Veils cost little, and at the worst she can go without one.

Don't lift up your dress high enough to show your garter on one side and allow your skirt to trail on the other. Though one sees most respectable matrons performing this feat every rainy day, it still looks as if showing a garter were the object of the manoeuvre. Every woman should practice holding up her skirts before a pier glass. They can be so caught altogether in the back as to lift them effectively and yet decently.

Ancient Trade Process.

The two oldest secret trade processes now in existence are considered to be the manufacture of Chinese red, or vermilion, and that method of inlaying the hardest steel with gold and silver, which seems to have been practiced at Damascus ages ago, and is known only to the Syrian smiths and their pupils even to this day.

Stub Ends of Thought.

To women there are three kinds of men—men, lovers and husbands.

Various facts go to show that a man's age may be as ripe as the man himself is green.

Courtship is seldom a training school for what comes after.

A wise woman will never marry the man who believes that the wife should be entirely dependent upon the husband.

It is a dangerous thing for men and women to lie to each other until they are married.

In daily living it is as wise not to know as to know.

MY LADY'S SHOULDERS.

SQUARE, ROUND OR SLOPING, THEY ARE STILL BEAUTIFUL.

They Indicate the Character—American Girls Credited With Possessing More Artistic Shoulders Than Their English Cousins.

Faces may be bewitching, eyes entrancing, mouths tempting, but shoulders are big breakers, even for the brave swimmer.

Shoulders, although slighted by the paragrapher, are not forgotten by the lover, and especially the cold shoulder; but the shoulders of beauty are always interesting.

Lucretia Borgia, that unscrupulous young lady, so skilled in toxicology, had exquisite shoulders. Indeed, so perfect were they, that even her victims, could they be resusicated, would affirm this statement.

Jumping from Italy into France, we find Mme. Pompadour idolized on account of her shoulders, which were always in evidence, and which, upon a certain occasion caused even her rival to relent.

SOME EXPRESSIVE SHOULDERS.

MME. POMPADOUR.

The pretty women who have married titles have not only possessed beautiful faces, but shoulders as well. Belle Bilton, the countess of Clancarty, won her heritage, through a charming bit of acting—the shrugging of her shapely shoulders. Not finding the shoulder a cold one, he wooed and won successfully.

THE FAIR LANGTRY.

The shoulders of the pretty Consuela Yznaga, now Viscountess Mandeville, scored for her many a conquest in society, at which she was at one time a belle.

The fair Langtry attracted the attention of the Prince of Wales by the beautiful and artistic curve of her neck. The wily beauty knew this to be her strong point, and discreetly made the most of it.

Mrs. Frank Leslie, no longer in the first blush of youth, possesses a pair of shoulders to be envied even by a debutante. These charms, added to those of personality, have made her a favorite with the opposite sex.

Mrs. Louis Hamersley, Duchess of Marlborough, is noted for her shoulders, which are displayed to perfection in evening dress.

A SOCIETY FAVORITE.

Eugenie Fougere, the popular French serio-comic, emphasizes her accents with expressive little shrugs of her shoulders. She speaks with them as some women with their eyes. When she says something particularly droll or suggestive her supple shoulders help to convey the meaning. Fougere's shoulders are slightly sloping and beautifully rounded, a fact of which she is well aware.

The peerless Patti seldom displays her shoulders, for the reason that they are less admirable than her voice. Her gowns are consequently fashioned to conceal the outline, a trifle angular. However, one may not possess everything.

Judic, the pet of Parisian audiences, reveled in bodices decollete in the extreme, to the delight of her admirers and her own edification.

Theatrical and society favorites have all possessed beautiful shoulders, which they have not been averse to display.

American girls are credited with possessing more artistic shoulders than their English cousins. In England a girl is instructed to hold her shoulders back, throw her chest out and to take long strides in walking. This may be very well from a hygienic point of view, but it does not promote grace. A squareness of the shoulders results from this training that developes angularity later on. The American girl allows her shoulders to retain their natural pose without straining them to artificial attitudes.

Round shoulders may be avoided by the use of light gymnastics, in the exercise of Indian clubs, or by a swinging of the arms around the head backward and forward. In obstinate cases slender shoulder braces are advisable.

SQUARE SHOULDERS.

Among men broad and square shoulders were much in fashions a score of years ago. Coats were padded on the shoulders to give this effect, frequently ridiculous and carried to the extreme. It was not uncommon to find a tall and angular man with the shoulders of a Titan, artificial, of course, and totally disproportionate to the figure. The man with naturally broad shoulders ordered his tailor to exaggerate them to conform to the fashion of the period. Now fashion has changed; fads are discarded to a great extent, and the shoulders are retained.

Shoulders, no less than other features, are indicative of character: Broad shoulders indicate strength, obstinacy and perseverance. Self-made men usually are possessed of broad shoulders, which, however, do not indicate refinement. The aesthetic or poetic temperament is usually associated with shoulders less wide and of a sloping tendency.

AVOIDING ROUND SHOULDERS.

The broad-shouldered man bears his own burdens, and frequently those of others. The man with sloping shoulders is apt to shift responsibility, is more unsteady, erratic and impressionable.

The man with aggressively square shoulders seldom rises above mediocrity, which, after all, exists in the world to support genius. Broad-shouldered men are consequently in the majority.

DUDES' SHOULDERS, PAST AND PRESENT.

Shoulders are capable of an infinitude of expression. Fully as many meanings may be conveyed by the shoulders as by the eyes—scorn, ridicule, approbation, fear, defiance and resolution.

Foreigners, as a rule, employ the shoulders in conversation, as they do the arms and hands. Americans seldom gesticulate, and consequently the shoulders remain in repose.

A soldier is known by the way he shoulders his gun. If a volunteer, there is a cheerful and alert pose to the shoulder; if he is drafted the shoulder has a melancholy droop, suggestive of resignation to hardship.

In Italy peasant women have strong and broad shoulders, obviously that they may bear burdens, while the shoulders of the men are narrower and sloping. Women long past middle age have been known to retain their beautiful shoulders.

Ninon de l'Enclos, the famous beauty, spent much time in attending to her shoulders, so generously displayed in the gowns of that period.

Spinsters almost invariably possess angular shoulders.

Men of a mechanical bent usually have shoulders that are heavy and square. Shoulders that are elevated above the usual line denote craftiness and treachery, a disposition of greed and instincts of revenge, hunchbacks being often unjustly included in this category.

There are also numerous traditions regarding the shoulder. Should two people spill salt between them at table, to avoid a quarrel one or both must take a pinch of salt and throw it over the left shoulder.

Tosse the new moon over the right shoulder is looked upon as a good omen for the ensuring month.

Perfect shoulders are as rare as perfect characters, with the average individual there being a slight depression of one shoulder, very few persons carrying the shoulders evenly.

SHOULDERS OF A DOMESTIC WOMAN.

Tailors and dressmakers, in fitting their customers, are very keen to observe a discrepancy of this kind.

It is upon the stage and in society that shoulders are to be seen; but there are many women in domestic life who possess beautiful shoulders, and to whom fate has denied the privilege of exhibiting them.

TERRIBLE EFFECT OF THE CIGARETTE HABIT AMONG CHILDREN.

It Stunts the Physique, Ruins the Health, and Weakens the Mind—Remedies Proposed for Stamping Out the Evil Among the Youth of San Francisco

Every school teacher and principal takes a deep interest in the subject of reclaiming boys from the cigarette habit. It has claimed their attention for years.

There is not a school teacher who has not been brought face to face with the evil effects of the cigarette-smoking habit time and again, and they are united on the proposition that it is necessary to stamp out the cigarette if the race of men is to be preserved unstunted in physique, robust in health, and with mentality undebased by the excessive use of tobacco.

In his twelve years' experience as principal of the Franklin Grammar School Elisha Brooks had ample opportunity to study the effects of nicotine on growing boys, and yesterday he told an Examiner reporter his idea of what would be the best way to stamp the habit out of the schools altogether.

"It is a most frightful habit," said Mr. Brooks, "and one to which the teachers should give great attention. Cigarettes are responsible for more of the dullness among the pupils of the public schools than any other cause I know of. The harm does not lie alone in the immediate effects of the nicotine on the lungs and other organs of the body, but it is responsible for habits among boys that might well cause parents to shudder when they think of the future of their children. I say right here that if cigarettes are not removed from the reach of the boys of this country the second generation from now will be composed of a lot of hollow-chested, sallow-faced, weak-lunged men and women unworthy to be called human beings.

SAPS OUT THEIR LIFE.

"Cigarettes sap the life out of boys. I know a cigarette fiend the moment he shows his face. They are dull eyed, listless chaps, who seem to have no ambition in them. Every time I meet a boy I look for traces of the cigarette habit in his face, and if I do not find them there I look at his fingers. If he smokes cigarettes the stain of the nicotine is sure to appear upon his fingers. Such a boy I reason with, whether I happen to have authority over him or not. I deem it my duty to save them from cigarettes just the same as I would save them from smoking opium. That the habit exists among the boys of the schools to an alarming extent there is not the slightest doubt. What shall be done to stop it is another matter.

"In the first place I should recommend all principals to cease smoking themselves. It is just as well for them to have the beam out of their own eyes before they seek the mote in others. The principals can do far more by example than they can by preaching. No boy will be much impressed by a lecture upon the evils of smoking if he sees his principal walking down the street with a huge cigar between his lips. In the absence of other measures I should say that principals and teachers should every now and then give the boys a confidential talk, explaining to them what evil results will be sure to follow upon the heels of smoking. Boys are very susceptible to reason, If they once understand that a thing is bad for them they will try with might and main to overcome their inclination to fall into temptation.

"Much of the fault lies with the parents. They seem apathetic upon the subject, as though they did not fully realize what danger confronted their children. The teacher may control the boys in the schools, but we have no authority over them after they go home. If parents would hunt for the tell-tale stains on their fingers of their boys and make a penalty for finding them they would do much toward improving the mental and physical condition of the youth of the land. Some parents even seem to me to approve of their boys' smoking. They seem proud to imagine that they have boys of a smoking age.

IMPOSE HEAVY PENALTIES.

"Would it not be a good idea to adopt a law providing a heavy penalty to be inflicted upon cigar dealers who sell tobacco in any form to minors, and have a number of public-spirited men form a society to see that the law was enforced? The city might be divided into districts over each of which a number of the members of the society could have supervision. If the women would take an interest in such a society and had a law to back them I would have no fear but the law would be respected. Certainly something should be done to save our boys from the effects of their bad habit."

Joseph O'Connor of the Horace Mann School is another principal whose large experience with boys in school entitles him to be ranked as an authority on the subject of how the cigarette evil should be corrected.

"It cannot," said Mr. O'Connor, "be reached by reasoning with the lads' although I must admit that reason has good results with some boys. My idea would be to prevent the sale of cigarettes to boys by placing a prohibitive internal tariff upon their manufacture. I don't think such a law, if proposed, would meet with any great opposition. The dudes would still be left to smoke cigarettes, and I think they would rather like a high price upon their cigarettes because the vulgar herd could not afford to buy them.

KEEP THEM FROM SCHOOL.

"Although I am firmly of the opinion that only by law can the thing be stamped out effectually, still much good can be done by constant reasoning with the boys. Of two brothers whom I once had under my charge one was an inveterate smoker, while the other was just starting to learn. One day I called them into my study and I gave the one who did not smoke a severe lecture, using his brother as a horrible example. He saw the force of what I said at once, and from that day to this I do not believe the little fellow has touched a cigarette.

"Don't you think it would be a good idea to prohibit boys who smoke from attending school? That plan would do much to call the attention of parents to the subject and they would perhaps see to it that their children did not contract habits that would debar them from obtaining a free education."

"We have a very good way of curing the cigarette habit in the state prisons," said Director Sonntag. "We just passed an order stopping the giving of cigarette paper and tobacco to the prisoners, and we do not deliver to them the cigarettes their friends send them from the outside. That disposes of the question as far as the prisons are concerned. Nine out of every ten of the men we receive are cigarette fiends when they reach the prison. Law breaking and cigarette smoking seem to go hand in hand. Since we stopped the use of the paper cigars the sick list has decreased materially, showing how deleterious the things are to health."

The Educational committee of the Federation of Women met at Mrs. Dr. Burns' office, No. 226 Market street, yesterday afternoon. Mrs. Emily Pitt-Stevens presided. The committee held considerable discussion of the cigarette evil as it prevails in public schools, and agitated methods for its remedy. It was finally decided that the most effectual move that could be made would be to inaugurate a system of lectures in the various schools to be illustrated with stereopticon views showing the pupils the awful effects of indulgence in tobacco. Views of the different organs of the body as diseased by the nicotine would, it was argued, be an interesting and efficient warning to those who were just in the beginnings of the habit. As a fit person to deliver this lecture Mrs. N. B. Eyster was selected.—San Francisco Examiner.

Life During the Reign of Terror.

He could see now what she was, but he saw also how graceful was her walk, how beautiful her figure. Of course she displayed these advantages, of which she was fully conscious, from a good motive, but an instinct, inherited possibly from Mother Eve, may have had something to do with it.

All at once loud cries rose in the air, followed by a rush of feet. A crowd was running up behind them. The roar was the same that Manette had heard the day before in the Rue de Bussy, when the mob, about to sack the grocers' shops, passed under her window. She knew what it meant. A popular tumult was sweeping through the Rue de Seine, which five minutes before had been so quiet and deserted. The crowd was already running under the wall of the College des Quatre-Nations, where Manette had just encountered the man in a blue coat.

Alarmed at the prospect of finding herself the next moment borne along by the hideous throng, the girl began to run, and the east wing of the edifice forming a deep angle as it abutted on the quay, she rushed into it for shelter.

The human whirlwind swept past. Manette saw a man who was running a few yards in advance of the pack of wild beasts who were persuing him. He was an old man with white hair. His black clothes were fluttering in tatters, for he had been seized already, and had escaped out of their hands. It was women who followed most closely at his heels. They were foremost among his pursuers. The whole pack yelled and howled.

"A la lanterne!" they cried. "He is a priest! Down with all priests! A la lanterne!"

A crowd of men followed the women, as eager as they were to be in at the death of a hunted human being. One of the foremost furies turning round, suddenly snatched a pike that a man near her was waving in his hand; and the possession of this weapon seemed to give her fresh strength. At one bound she was in advance of all the crowd, and the length of the pike did the rest. The victim fell.

Manette had shut her eyes. She did not see the murderers spring upon their bleeding quarry. Her trembling hands let fall her little bundle, her limbs sank under her; she grew faint. She would have fallen, but that a man's arm supported her. A man's voice whispered: "Never fear them. I am here to help you. Let me take charge of you. I will place you in safety."—Translated from the French, in Littell's Living Age.

Advice to Wives.

Christian women, when your husbands and sons return to you in the evening after buffeting with the waves of the world, let them find in your home a haven of rest. Do not pour into the bleeding wounds of their heart the gall of bitter words, but rather the oil of gladness and consolation. Be fond of your homes. Be attached to your homes. Make them comfortable. Let peace and order and tranquility and temperance abound there. Let the angel of chastity that protected Agnes preside over your homes and stand at the door of your heart, repelling all unhallowed thoughts, even as the angel, with flaming sword watched at the Garden of Eden. For what is a home from which chastity is banished but a consecrated temple from which the spirit of God has fled? Let the flowers of domestic joy and gladness grow abundantly along your pathway. Let the fire of conjugal and maternal and filial love which God has consecrated burn continually on the altar of your hearts and consume every inordinate affection. Then, indeed, may the words of Scripture be applied to you: "Who shall find a virtuous woman? Far from the uttermost coasts is the price of her. She hath looked well to the paths of her home and hath not eaten her bread idle. Her children rose up and called her blessed; her husband, and he praised her. Beauty is vain. The woman that feareth the Lord she shall be praised."—Cardinal Gibbons.

BIG BUSINESS IN SMALL THINGS.

Money Invested in Lead Pencils—How They Are Made.

"There is probably less known about the manufacture of lead pencils than any other extensive manufacturing business," said John M. Ready, of New York, yesterday. "I say extensive business, for many people do not know that there is as much as $2,500,000 expended for pencils in the United States every year. All machinery used in the production of lead pencils is a carefully guarded secret. It is not patented, but each company has its own process, and very little is known of it by outsiders. The general idea of the method of manufacture can be given. The graphite, plumbago, or black lead, whichever you may call it, comes from three places, India, Germany and one part of the United States. The American lead is considered the most pure, having about one-third more carbon and much less silica than the foreign article. The plumbago as mined is brought to the factory when the silica is separated from the graphite by a system similar to that employed in separating free gold from ore. It is crushed into a fine powder and then mixed with water, which flows over 'bumper tables.' The weight of the lead causes it to collect on the tables and the silica and baser materials flow off with the water. The lead is then taken and mixed with clay in a mortar. The clay is used as a temper to the lead. The more clay used the harder the lead becomes, as, when the mixture is baked, the heat affects the clay, hardening it, while it has no effect upon the graphite. The mixture is then placed in a hydraulic press, which forces it out like a black twine. This is run upon tables, where it is cut in lengths of seven inches, the length of a regular lead pencil, and straightened. It is then placed in the ovens. I have seen a continuous piece of this mixture of clay and graphite a mile long come from the press. The pieces of lead are taken from the oven and placed in the wood, which is made in two pieces, then cemented together. There is a peculiar fact about cedar, the wood most suitable for pencils. The farther south you go to obtain the wood the less knots you find and the less pitch in the wood. As you come north the amount of pitch increases and the grain of the wood becomes irregular."—Pittsburg Dispatch.

Stole the Shoes From His Feet.

"I have been in some pretty tough towns in my life," remarked a woebegone individual, as he pushed his way into a down-town saloon last night, "but I never struck one till now where they'd pinch the shoes off a man's feet." The man was bare-headed and in his stocking-feet. His woeful appearance created a general laugh and he was vigorously plied with questions, until the following story was learned; Welsh—that was his name—had just beaten his way from the west on a freight train and after walking some distance sat down on a step near Fifth and Lombard streets. Here he fell asleep and when he awoke his shoes, hat and necktie were missing. He said whoever did the trick was very slick, as he hardly could get the shoes off himself. Several of his listeners went to their homes nearby and got old shoes for the unfortunate, but none of them seemed to fit. The last sign of Welsh he was walking up the street with three pairs of shoes in one hand, a bundle of neckties in the other and a last summer's straw hat on his head.—Philadelphia Record.

Dangers of Delay.

If we were allowed to look into the future and see the fatal consequences that follow a neglected cold, how differently would our course be; could we realize our danger, how speedily we would seek a cure; but with many it is only when the monster disease has fastened its fangs upon our lungs that we awaken to our folly. What follows a neglected cold? It is not diseases of the throat and lungs, bronchitis, asthma, consumption, and many other diseases of like nature. Is it worse than madness to neglect a cold, and it is folly not to have some good remedy available for its frequent complaint. One of the most efficacious medicines for all diseases of the throat and lungs, is Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup. This medicine is composed of several medicinal herbs, which exert a most wonderful influence in curing consumption and other diseases of the lungs and chest. It promotes a free and easy expectoration, soothes irritation and drives the disease from the system.

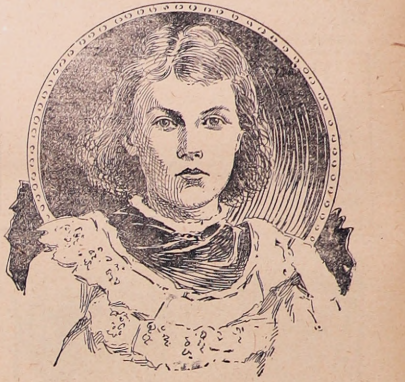
STRICKEN WITH A PARTIAL PARALYSIS

This Was the Case with Miss Minnie Stevens, of London, Ont.

The Parents Had Lost Hope of Her Recovery, But Even After Her Arm, Side and Leg Had Become Powerless South American Nervine Effected a Cure—To-day This Young Lady, Daughter of F. A. Stevens, of the Stevens Manufacturing Company, Enjoys Perfect Health.



MISS MINNIE STEVENS, LONDON, ONT.

Men and women in the exercise of physical or mental power can usually go a certain length, but a step beyond this proves too severe a test. It is the same in the field of medicine. If the case is not a trying one some simple remedy will cure, but it is when a medicine proves effective in an aggravated and extraordinary case that its real power is tested. South American Nervine has made some wonderful cures in cases of indigestion, dyspepsia, debility and nervous prostration, not to name other troubles. When nervousness, however, takes hold of the system to that extent that it becomes paralyzed and the limbs lose their natural power, then it is that the patient and her friends may indeed commence to lose heart. Miss Minnie Stevens, a fair daughter of London, Ont., had undergone this trying experience. She had been troubled with nervousness. The trouble grew and after a time assumed such shape that she could not lift or even hold anything in her hand. This member, in fact, was useless to her. The trouble spread down the side and partially into one leg. Her face began to twitch. In truth, all the indications of paralysis creeping over the system were manifest. Do we wonder that her parents lost hope of her recovery? They saw the fatal disease rapidly twining itself around their beautiful child. Surrounded with every comfort and possessing the means as well as the will to do everything that was in their power to provide relief, yet, apparently, this could not be obtained, until influenced by the statements of the wonderful cures effected by South American Nervine in cases of nervous prostration, the parents finally decided to try this medicine. After using twelve bottles their daughter became perfectly well, and to day in the Forest City there is no young girl more healthy than Minnie Stevens, and her father, Mr. F. A. Stevens, of the Stevens Manufacturing Company, is indeed a happy man. The statement cannot be made in too positive and distinct terms that this great discovery is capable of marvelous demonstration in all nervous troubles.

The testimony that comes to the proprietor of Nervine shows that it has absolutely cured in the case of the young, as here cited, and those who have nearly reached, or gone beyond, the three score years and ten have likewise found a cure in this medicine.

REASONS FOR CHANGE OF POSITION.

Not to Carry Out the Order of the Judicial Committee Would Be to Violate the Constitution — Impressions Corrected by Careful Reading of the Judgment.

Winnipeg, March 25.—Winnipeg has talked all week on the Remedial Order, and to-day several Winnipeg preachers discussed it from the pulpit. The majority of people are viewing the matter calmly, but there are, of course, a few fiery individuals who talk of shouldering their muskets and doing other silly things.

In the scores of interviews which have appeared, none have had the effect, or carried so much weight, as that given by Hugh John Macdonald, son of the late Conservative chieftain and ex-member for Winnipeg. Mr Macdonald is so generally respected here that his dispassionate and statesmanlike utterances have done much to promote a spirit of moderation. As is well known, both in and out of Parliament, Mr. Macdonald strongly favored national schools. Asked if the decision of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council had changed his opinions in any respect, Mr. Macdonald replied as follows:

"No, not in so far as the religious merits of National and Separate schools are concerned, but I must confess that it has totally altered my position. When I read the telegraphic report of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, I considered that there was nothing in it all to alter my position, but when I read the full report of the judgment I was compelled, most unwillingly, to admit that the ground had sunk from under me, leaving me no foothold. It is only fair to myself to say that when I was in the House of Commons, and in fact up to the time that I read the verbatim account of what took place before the Privy Council, I was under the impression that the bill passed on Mr. Blake's resolution, giving the Government of the day power to refer educational questions to the court for decision, referred only to questions of law, and I thought that no matter what the judgment of the Privy Council might be on the question of law, the Governor-General in Council had to determine the question of fact. On reading the judgment of the Judicial Committee, however, and on referring to The Hansard, I found that the act went much further than I believed, and gave the Government power to refer questions, not only of law, but also of fact, to the courts; that in pursuance of this power they had actually referred the whole matter to the courts for decision, and that the Judicial Commitee in their judgment had found not only that the Roman Catholic minority had a right under the terms of the British North America Act, to apply to the Governor-General-in Council for remedial legislation, but also that they, the Roman Catholic minority, had sustained a serious injury by the passage of th eManitoba School Act of 1890.

"Such being the case, I do not see what course was open to the Government of Canada, composed, as it is, of honorable men, than to carry out the judgment of the court, unless, indeed, they were willing to violate the constitution and to take the position of saying to the Roman Catholics: 'It is very true that the highest Court of Appeal to which a British colonist can go has decided that you have sustained an injury of a grave nature, and that you have a right to redress, but notwithstanding this we intend to go on the principle that "Might is right," and to refuse to make any move in the matter at all.' As I have stated before, I have arrived at this conclusion most unwillingly and with great hesitation, but as a loyal British subject I see no course open to me but to bow to the constitution, and to take my medicine like a man, no matter how unpalatable it may be. When the earlier decision—I mean that in Barrett v. the City of Winnipeg—was given, I took the ground that our Roman Catholic citizens were bound to abide faithfully by it, and now that the boot is on the other leg, and that they have come out victorious, I am certainly not going to whine about it, or refuse to recognize the force of a judgment which I would have insisted to the utmost of my power on their recognizing had it been in favor of the views which I have always upheld."

"What course do you think will be adopted by the Provincial Government?"

"I really am not in confidence with Mr. Greenway or his colleagues, but I trust that in this matter hey will be actuated by a spirit of patriotism, and will, as far as they conscientiously can, meet the judgment of the Judicial Committee. I have no doubt that they may score a party triumph by appealing to the religious bigotry, and to the very strong feeling in favor of National schools which undoubtedly prevails in this province, but knowing several of them intimately, as I do, I am by no means without hope that that they will on this occasion rise superior to the temptation to adopt this course, and will take steps which will not render it necessary for the Parliament of Canada to enact remedial legislation, and by so doing take the control of educational matters, to a certain extent at least, out of the hands of the Provincial Assembly."

As far as can be ascertained to-night the famous Remedial Order has not yet reached Winnipeg. It is expected by to-morrow's mail.

W. B. Scarth of Winnipeg, who it was thought would be appointed Governor, has wired to friends here that Hon. Mr. Patterson had been appointed. The announcement is a great surprise, Mr. Patterson being unknown to the people.

HON N. C. WALLACE UPHELD.

His Constituents Approve of His Past Actions and Give Him Carte Blanche.

Weston, Ont., March 25.—A private meeting of the supporters of Hon. N. C. Wallace was held at Eagle's Hotel, Weston, on Saturday afternoon. The meeting commenced at 2 o'clock and continued until 6. The caucus was the most representative, it is said, of any that has taken place in the riding. One of the subjects discussed was whether the Controller shall retain his Cabinet position or become a private Conservative member.

Hon. N. C. Wallace informed the press after the meeting that his past action had been unanimously and enthusiastically approved of by his supporters. Beyond this he declined to make any statement. It leaked out, however, that a resolution was passed vesting the Controller of Customs with full power to act as he may think best in the future.

Mr. Wallace immediately afterwards left for Woodbridge.

Among those present and who addressed the meeting were: J. W. St. John, M.L.A.; W. J. Bull, president of the West York Conservative Association; William Tyrrell, Reeve of Weston; P. W. Ellis, North Toronto; City Solicitor Fullerton, Dr. Orr, Dr. Godfrey, Reeve Evans and Deputy Reeve Bryans, Etobicoke; Mayor Bond, T. Wallace, Reeve of Woodbridge; Dr. Perfect, W. G. Murdock, C. C. Going, John Goulding, York, and E. Floody,

TWO THROATS CUT WITH ONE RAZOR

Murder and Suicide in a Toronto Tenement.

Toronto March 25. — Mad with jealousy, which followed a prolonged spree, John Bell, an expressman, nearly decapitated Sarah Swallow, the woman with whom he lived, with a razor some time during Saturday night and then killed himself in the same fashion.

The shocking double tragedy occurred on the second floor of the three-story building at No. 65 1-2 Jarvis-street, a few doors north of King-street and immediately opposite the Imperial Hotel. The bodies were found about 8.15 Sunday morning.

John Bell and his mistress had lived in the rooms where their lives found such a dreadful ending for two or three years. The man was 40 years of age and the woman was aged 35.

The woman was the widow of Joseph C. Swallow, an expressman, who was killed by a fall from a horse on Aug. 29, 1892. At the time of the accident Bell was boarding with the couple and assisting Swallow in his business. After the latter's death he was engaged by Mrs. Swallow to drive the express wagon.

DECANTER HIS WEAPON.

Fred Walker of Toronto Receives His Death Wound in New Orleans.

New Orleans, March 25.—A fight occurred early this morning in a barroom between two men named "Bill" Scully and Fred Walker. Scully hit Walker with a decanter, wounding him seriously. Walker was taken to the hospital and is now under the influence of opiates, and it is thought that he will die. Both men are from the north and are well known in horse racing circles. Scully is a horse owner and Walker is a bookmaker. They were here attending the race meeting. Scully escaped.

Fred Walker is a Toronto boy and is well known on the lakes, his father being a captain.

DISTRESS IN BRITAIN.

Due Not to Scarcity of Employment But to the Severe Winter.

London, March 25.—During last week 137,000 destitute persons received charitable relief in the metropolis. The interim report of the Select Committee on the existing distress throughout England shows that in 596 localities, representing a population of 6,797,231, there is no exceptional distress; that in 454 localities, representing 10,381,000, there is exceptional distress, due solely to the severe winter; and that in 144 localities, representing 3,700,000, there is exceptional want of employment, owing to slackness of trade, agricultural depression and local causes, besides that caused by bad weather. No unusual scarcity of employment has prevailed this winter, but much grave distress has affected both regular and intermittent workmen, owing to the severe winter.

The influenza death rate has dropped from 41.2 per 1000 to 33.4. The normal death rate is about 21 per 1000.

FIVE DROWNED AT VICTORIA, B.C.

A Tug With Six Aboard Wrecked—Only One Succeeds in Reaching Shore Alive.

Victoria, March 23.—The tug Velos, with the barge Pilot in tow, left this city last evening for Hoddington Island to procure a cargo of stone for the new Parliament Buildings. On board the tug were Contractor Adams, Captain Anderson, Mate Christiansen, Eng. Low and three other members of the crew. When passing Trial Island, which is a barren rock, noted on account of its fierce tide, the tug's rudder chain broke, and, at full speed, she ran on the rocks. The barge brought up against her, and as the barge passed, Mate Christiansen sprang aboard of her. The barge had twenty-five stone-cutters and laborers aboard. The barge drifted past the tug, breaking the hawser, and went ashore on Trial Island, all aboard of her escaping to shore. The men had no boat, and could do nothing to assist the unfortunate six left aboard the tug, of which Captain Anderson is now the only survivor. The tug went down stern first. Contractor Adams and three of the crew were quickly washed away and drowned. Captain Anderson and Engineer Low, however, had lashed themselves to the davits, and there they remained for some time. Captain Anderson started to swim ashore, and being caught by heavy seas, was carried in on top of two big waves, and thrown on the shore in a half frozen condition. The body of Mr. Low, who had remained on the wreck, was recovered. The dead man was hanging downward in the water. None of the other bodies have been recovered, and in all probability never will be. The steamer Maud brought in all of the saved.

CHILDREN ROASTED ALIVE.

Chapleau, Ont., March 25.—The House occupied by P. Dollard and A. Baker has been burned by the upsetting of the lamp on the stairway.

Mr. and Mrs. Dollard were downstairs and made every endeavor to extinguish the flames, but these got beyond control before they realized the danger. Their five children were in the upper part of the house and Mr. Dollard made a rush through the flames. He seized the baby, 1 year old, kicked out a window and shouted to the other four children to jump out. He dashed downstairs with the child in his arms, and when he reached the bottom found that all attempts to again return would be fatal. The house burned rapidly, cutting off all escape. Three children were burned. They were:

GERTIE DOLLARD, aged 13.

MICHAEL, aged 7.

ALEXANDER, aged 3.

JOHNNY, aged 11, jumped out of the window, but is so badly burned that recovery is doubtful.

Mr. Baker got his family out in safety, also some effects. Dollard lost everything. Mrs. Dollard is prostrated with grief. Mr. Dollard is badly burned about the face and hands. The remains of the three children were taken from the ruins about 11 p.m., burned to a crisp. The building, which was owned by Murray & Cowan, was all wood and valued at $1200. Murray & Mulligan's bakehouse, storehouse and barn were on fire several times, but were extinguished.

WRIT FOR HALDIMAND.

In the Bye-Election Will Be Issued Soon.

MONTAGUE ACCEPTS A PORTFOLIO.

Hon. J. C. Patterson to Become Lieutenant-Governor of Manitoba in June—A Loan of $2,500,000 Made to the Hudson Bay Railway Company.

Ottawa, March 25.—The historic electoral division of Haldimand is to be the fighting ground where the Government will ask for an endorsation of its policy. By the acceptance by Dr. Montague of the portfolio of Secretary of State, the seat for Haldimand becomes vacant, and the writ for a new election will probably be issued next week. It will be a red-hot fight from start to finish, but with such a doughty champion as Dr. Montague the Government have no fear of the result.

It appears that Hon. J. C. Patterson will remain in the Ministry without portfolio until June, when he will be appointed Lieutenant-Governor of Manitoba. This arrangement was made at the time he took office under Sir Mackenzie Bowell. Mr. Patterson has not been in good health lately and is anxious to be relieved from the strain of departmental work. As previously stated, Mr. Dickey becomes the Minister of Militia.

A few days ago your correspondent announced that work on the Winnipeg Great Northern Railway (the Hudson Bay road) will be commenced in April. I am now in a position to explain the nature of the aid which it is proposed to render to the company, and under which construction will be immediately pushed. The arrangement which has been made by Mr. Hugh Sutherland with the Government is in the nature of a loan, which with the available capital and land securities will be sufficient to insure the completion of the enterprise. It may be remembered that during the session of 1891 the Government was authorized to enter into a contract with the Hudson Bay Railway Company for the conveyance of men and supplies, materials and mails over the portion of the line between Winnipeg and the Saskatchewan for an annual payment of $80,000 a year for twenty years. This was a subsidy similar to that granted to the Prince Albert road and to the Calgary and Edmonton line. The agreement with the company was duly executed, and the time for the completion of the line to the Saskatchewan was extended to December 21, 1896. The length of this section is about 225 miles. The Hudson Bay Railway Company, by its charter, is entitled to a land subsidy of 1,440,000 acres in Manitoba, while for the section from the northern boundary of the province to the terminus at Hudson Bay there is a further land subsidy of 5,440,000 acres. With such a splendid subsidy one would have thought that there would have been no difficulty in raising the necessary capital to build the line. Newspaper readers know, however, how American railway securities have depreciated during the past few years; it has been next to impossible to secure capital for new enterprises. Hence it was felt to be futile in the present depressed state of the money market to attempt to float such an important scheme as that of the Hudson Bay Railway. Recently the company, recognizing the strong desire that prevailed in Manitoba and the Northwest for the construction of the line, came forward with a scheme for the capitalization of the cash subsidy and partially of the land subsidy, on the strength of assurances from prominent capitalists in England, that in the event of the Government acceding to the proposition the necessary additional capital required would be forthcoming. The Government has accordingly entered into an arrangement with Mr. Hugh Sutherland, president of the company, to loan the company $2,500,000, the Government retaining the land grant and the annual subsidy already mentioned, namely, $80,000 a year. The loan which the Government will make is to be recouped by the sale of first mortgage bonds of the company, and as soon as the loan is refunded to the Government the company will again secure its land grant and the balance of the annual subsidy which will still be due it. Messrs. Isbester & Mann, contractors for building the line, will leave for Winnipeg in a few days.

A deputation from the Ottawa Ministerial Association waited upon Sir C. H. Tupper on Saturday and urged that the proposed Dominion reformatory should not be located at Alexandria, but in some larger city. The petition they presented said among other things: "We feel that a great wrong would be done the Protestant element of the population if the reformatory for Roman Catholics and Protestants be located in Alexandria, as Protestants are not numerous in that section, and it will be impossible for the inmates to receive the pastoral and religious oversight, instruction and aid essential to their reformation. We believe that if such a reformatory were built near this city both Roman Catholics and Protestants would be better pleased and religious work among the inmates more effectively carried on; but if it be imperative that a reformatory be built in Alexandria we beg most earnestly to submit that it should be for Roman Catholics alone, and that a reformatory for Protestants should be erected near this city, where both clerical and lay workers could unite in the religious instruction of the prisoners, aid them in finding employment when their sentences expire, encourage them in their efforts to reform and thus under divine blessing restore them to useful citizenship."

The deputation spoke in favor of the erection of two institutions. They thought Alexandria might suit for a Catholic institution, but felt that there were not enough Protestant clergy or lay workers there for a Protestant institution; that some larger place, Ottawa for instance, where there could be many more clergy and lay workers willing to do work in connection with the reformatory, would be more suitable for the Protestant institution. Sir Charles Tupper seemed to be of opinion that the Government was committed to erect an institution at Alexandria. However, he spoke favorably of the proposal to erect two reformatories, one for Catholics and the other for Protestants. He promised to take the whole matter into consideration.

A despatch from Washington, speaking of further Behring Sea treaty negotiations, contains many erroneous statements. It is possible that a Canadian official will leave for Washington shortly to make arrangements for assessing the damages suffered by Canadian sealers, on account of illegal seizures, as Congress has refused to pay the amount agreed upon, but the general question of Behring Sea regulations is not likely to be re-opened.

It is announced here with a certain amount of authoritativeness that Major Markham of the New Brunswick Hussars will be commandant of this year's Bisley team. Col. White, chairman of the Executive Committee of the Dominion Rifle Association, says that the official announcement of the appointment is not likely to be made for a few weeks, but in official circles the belief is that Major Markham is sure of the appointment.

The Government has not been officially advised of the date of the departure of the Newfoundland delegation for Canada. The belief is general here that it would have been far better if the deputation had consisted of representatives of both parties.

WILL CONSULT GLADSTONE.

British Ministers Want His Advice Before Dissolution.

London, March 23.—Mr. Gladstone's return to London has been hastened by the deadlock in the Cabinet over the question of the succession to the Speakership, and the still more serious difference in regard to the dissolution of Parliament, upon which question there does not seem to be any feeling of unanimity. It is certain that the advice of the ex-Premier will guide the Ministers in deciding both questions, and until he has arrived and the leaders have had the benefit of consultation with him nothing will be done. At the Cabinet Council, which was convened a week ago last Tuesday, it seemed very improbable that there would be a dissolution until the Ministerial program fixed at the beginning of the session had been carried out. The Executive Committee of the Liberal party had told the election agents that there would be no general election until November. The change in the situation is due to Lord Rosebery's increasing desire to withdraw from the Premiership, and there is a general realization now that something must be done to make a change in the state of affairs existing. The squabbles over the Speakership, and the threatened desertion from the Ministerial ranks on the question of local veto have also had their effect upon Lord Rosebery, and the other ministers are becoming disgusted over the tension caused by their working with a small and uncertain majority which is liable at any unexpected moment to become a minority.

Lord Rosebery is gaining strength slowly, but he has prolonged periods of insomnia and symptoms of serious nervous disorder. Nevertheless he will not withdraw from office until he sees the end of the present Parliament. Throughout ten days he has not had a night's sleep and his favorite remedy, that of drinking warm water, which he has found valuable upon previous occasions, when similarly attacked, has not been efficacious. Only drugs have given him relief and these only temporarily. His condition is such that his physicians have again urged him to take a sea voyage as the only thing that would give him permanent benefit. The Queen has been informed of Lord Rosebery's condition and desire to retire from office and has declared herself most unwilling to accept his resignation. Her Majesty has expressed her hope that his colleagues will allow the Premier time to recover from his ailments before taking action which would embarrass him, and this course may be pursued. However, there is a clique of Ministers, among whom Sir William Harcourt is the most prominent, who think that the easiest way out of a seemingly impassable road is an early dissolution.

The choice of the Liberals for the succession to the Speakership now lies between Right Hon. Leonard Courtney and Mr. William Court-Gully, and the latter will probably be the Ministerial nominee. Mr. Gully, who is a member of the House of Carlisle, is a grandson of the famous lightweight champion pugilist, John Gully, who, after retiring from the ring, became member of Parliament for Pontefract. Mr. Gully's father, James Manby Gully, M.D., was a noted hydropathic physician, whose reputation, however, was not enhanced by his connection with the notorious Bravo poisoning case. The present Mr. Gully is a high bred, courtly, dignified and clever gentleman and a Queen's counsel. He would unquestionably make a good figure in the chair, but he is so seldom in his seat that Sir Charles Dilke was recently moved to ask in connection with his candidacy, "Would you make a man Speaker who has been 10 years a member and 10 minutes in the House?"

The set-back which the Radicals received in the House of Commons last night in the vote on the question of paying salaries to members has given great satisfaction to the Conservatives, who greeted the announcement of the result of the division with prolonged cheers. In 1893, when the question was voted on, it was carried by a majority of 47. Last night the majority in its favor was only 18, and the Opposition went nearly frantic in their expression of delight at the shrinkage.

The Turkish embassies in London and Paris give absolutely wholesale denials of the stories that 2500 Armenians are in prison and many of them dying from the rigors of confinement. The Globe's correspondent in Constantinople quotes a statement made by a European commercial man who was traveling in Bitlis and Moosh last fall. This gentleman avers that he was passing through Djell Yeguzan on about February 23, when it is related that the most inhuman atrocities were perpetrated, one incident being the massacre of 360 Armenians of all ages and both sexes, by Turkish troops. It was alleged, too, that these persons had been induced to surrender by promise of protection, and that the dead and dying were thrown into an immense pit together. In refutation of this story he says he neither saw nor heard anything of the massacre, although he admits that the village was attacked in consequence of the hostile attitude of its inhabitants towards the Government. He saw ruins here and there as the result of the fighting, but declares the accounts published were gross exaggerations, and that the so-called details were pure fiction. This, he declares, is especially true of the stories of the brutal outrages of women. In another letter Sir Ellis Ashmead-Bartlett denounces as monstrous lies the statements that, owing to grave reports of outrages from the Russian Consuls at Erzeroum and Van Russia has appointed an Imperial commission to examine and report upon the alleged barbarities practised in Turkish prisons. It is needless to denounce this story, he says, as it is too obviously an ornate composition of a fictionist, inspired by the Anglo-Armenian Association. This letter, however, has not excited the public, and the members of the House of Commons who are connected with the Armenian Association have called a meeting to be held on Monday, with the object of organizing an extension of the anti-Turkish agitation.

THE QUEEN CRITICALLY ILL

"A Fatal Issue to Be Feared at Any Moment"

New York, March 25.—The World's London special cable says:

Mrs. Emily Crawford contributes to this week's Truth th efirst public mention of Queen Victoria's serious condition, concerning which there is much private discussion. Mrs. Crawford writes that on arrival at the railway station at Nice the Queen "seemed unable to raise her head. She looked up and around under her eyelids, as if wanting strength to look otherwise. One might have thought she, d idnot feel her feet under her, as with the assistance of her servants she tried to descend the sloping gangway from the train into the station."

"It is well known among those familiar with court affairs that rheumatism of the knees has lately not only developed complete loss of power over both legs, but has extended to the back and arms, and that a fatal issue is to be feared at almost any time."

BANKER CONN ACQUITTED.

After Three Trials the Alvinston Forgery Case Falls to the Ground.

Sarnia, March 35—Saturday's sitting of the Lambton Spring Assizes saw the end of the celebrated case of the Queen v. Conn for forgery and the uttering of forged paper in the name of Anthony Gilroy through the Merchants' Bank of Canada in St. Thomas during the time of Conn's transacting a banking business in Alvinston, Ont. Many notes turned up after the failure which were not signed by Gilroy, and which were very poor imitations of the proper signature. Proceedings were taken against Conn in Detroit, and the Ontario Government effected his extradition. At the Spring Assizes the jury disagreed. The case again came up at the Fall Assizes of 1894, and the jury disagreed again. The indictment this time being somewhat changed, he appeared for trial, and for three days the trial has been on. The end was an acquittal.

Radish is a hardy plant. The seeds germinate quickly, and the young plants start off at once, providing a supply on rich soil in a few weeks. Kale is another hardy plant, and the seed may be planted very early.

Such materials as straw and cornstalks should not be hauled out on the garden with the manure. They serve better on the corn land. For the garden use only well-rotted manure, free from litter, and work it well into the soil, so as to more evenly distribute it and give the plants an early start.

Waterproof paper, which may be used for protection to plants, is obtained by soaking manilla paper in a solution made by dissolving shellac in hot borax water. That is, the borax is dissolved in hot water, and the shellac

QUERY.

Is the duty always added to the price, as the Grits constantly assert?

By no means. Take farm implements—which are as cheap or cheaper here than in the United States—iron, and a thousand other things, and the falsity of the assertion will be proved.

RIEL WAS A GRIT.

The Montreal Gazette says: "Saskatchewan is not a constituency of Liberal traditions. Riel was defeated there." Riel was a Conservative. The only constituency in which he was ever elected was Provencher, and he resigned his seat there to make room for Sir George Cartier, at the request of Sir John Macdonald, conveyed by Sir Donald Smith. Liberals do not vacate their seats to oblige Tory Ministers.—Port Hope Guide.

The Guide is guilty of that sort of untruth which is one of the worst forms of falsehood, namely suppression of the truth. Riel's latest political affiliation was with the Grits. It was Dr. Fiset, the Grit M.P. for Rimouski, who took him privately after his election for Provencher in 1874 to the House of Commons, where he signed the roll, and smuggled him away after he had done so. It was the present Premier who moved for Riel's expulsion from Parliament immediately thereafter. From that time forward Riel dropped out of Canadian politics.

THE WISEST COURSE.

Commenting on the action of the Government in the vexed question of the Schools in Manitoba, the Montreal Witness, which is perhaps their most vindictive and insinuating opponent, says:

> The Government have on the whole chosen the wisest course now open to them. From the very first, any course in regard to the Manitoba School question must have been strewn with difficulties and embarrassments for any party. * * * * Nevertheless, the Government have chosen the least dangerous course open to them. It is better, too, that the Manitoba School question, which is increasingly causing strife between fellow citizens, should be settled one way or another by the present Parliament, that the way may be free for a clear verdict of the electors upon the issue of tariff reform.

And yet, so deeply chagrined is the irreconcilable Witness because the Government have—as it feels constrained to admit—"chosen the wisest course open to them," in settling a question which (it also admits) has been "increasingly causing strife be-"tween fellow citizens, and should be set-"tled one way or another by the present "parliament," that it violently assails the Government because of their action.

Surely the farce of mad, blind, unreasoning partizanship could no farther go. And yet the Witness is not alone in hating the Government for having acted wisely and patriotically in settling a question which threatened grave danger to the nation.

Roads in a terrible state, neither sleighing nor wheeling, the deep snow in cross-roads making travelling almost impracticable.—Mr. Nelson Giles and wife are now in Toronto at the bedside of their daughter Libbie, who is dangerously ill with pneumonia.—Miss Maggie Meyers, Belleville, has been visiting friends in this neighborhood and vicinity for the past few days.—Frank Eaton, Belleville, spent Sabbath with his brother, James Eaton. He gave one of his favorite renderings as voluntary at the public service in Central church, which was highly appreciated by the congregation.—George Johnston, teacher, near Bloomfield, was the guest of Mr. MacLout Saturday evening.—Mr. Alpheus Brickman, whose house was recently burned, is fast getting material on the ground for a new residence. Science Triumphant at Last.

Miller's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil is the outcome of the latest scientific researches. There was always a prejudice against taking Cod Liver Oil on account of its disagreeable to the palate, and that is one reason why it has become so popular with the medical fraternity, the hospitals of the country and the households wherever consumption or lung troubles prevail. Miller's Emulsion is the great nerve strengthener and blood maker, and cures Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis, Scrofula and all Lung affections. In Big Bottles, 50c. and $1, at all Drug Stores.

Like Lightning.

The rapid action of the "great pain cure," Polson's Nerviline, in relieving the most intense pain, is a matter of wonder to all who have used it. There is nothing surprising in its results, for it is made of the strongest, purest and most efficient remedies known in medicine. Nerviline cures toothache instantly; cramps in five minutes; neuralgia after two applications; rheumatism is at once relieved by its use; and the same may be said of all kinds of pain. Sample bottles costing only 10 cents, at any drug store. The large bottles only 25 cents. Polson's Nerviline sold by druggists and country dealers.

SWALLOWED HER TEETH.

A Remarkable Accident to a Young Lady in Milwaukee.

Miss Helen Burns made a startling discovery recently. She had neglected to take out her upper plate upon retiring, and upon awakening found that in some manner the teeth had fallen into her throat. She was awakened by the pain caused by their passage down her throat. After they had been swallowed they caused no more pain, and so far she has been in no way inconvenienced by their presence in her stomach. It was an upper set on a rubber plate and was whole except for the loss of three teeth on one side. The dentist was not inclined to believe that the young lady could have swallowed so large a plate, but she convinced him that she had. It was a temporary plate, which, having been worn too long, allowed the gums to shrink away from it, and become too large. Being too large, a piece had broken out of it and it would no longer hold itself in place. Miss Burns told the doctor that the plate did not cause her any pain, but she was frightened, naturally enough. The doctor assured her that there was no cause for alarm so long as she felt no pain.

Dr. Carmichael says that while people are sometimes choked by their false teeth getting into their throats, the cases where the teeth have been actually swallowed are very rare. Only one such case ever occurred in this city, to the doctor's knowledge, and then the teeth lodged before they entered the stomach and the man died in great pain. Dr. Carmichael thinks that having safely accomplished the feat of swallowing the plate, the young lady is in no danger and will perhaps never be troubled by the teeth. He does not think that the plate can pass into the intestines and he is in doubt as to what is likely to be its fate. He says that nothing can be done until the plate makes its position known by a pain. Then relief may be afforded by an operation or possibly in some other manner.—Milwaukee Wisconsin.

Three Wonderful Boys.

A Berlin correspondent of the Louisville Courier Journal says: We have had three wonderful boys in Berlin this winter. The one best known to Americans is Josef Hoffmann. After having broken down his health in concertizing through America, his parents brought him here to recuperate. That he is fully restored the hosts of admirers of that singularly winning child will be glad to know. Now he is studying diligently and will, I hope, return to you before many years—not a child wonder, but an artist. He has changed much since he left you. His childish face has become much more thoughtful, he is taller and wears long trousers. Last week I attended a private concert at which he played some of his own compositions. He came out quietly and bowed to the rather small audience before taking his seat at the piano. He was greeted with no applause, and I fancied I discovered a suspicion of a smile around the corners of his mouth as he glanced calmly over the heads of the assemblage that had greeted him so coldly, with his American triumphs still fresh in his memory, but it was only a suspicion—then he began playing. When he finished his sonata and rose from the piano the audience fairly rose with him. He played again an impromptu (also his own), which showed the remarkable talent the boy undoubtedly has. None is quicker to recognize talent than are these very Berliners, but they are a mercilessly cold audience toward a stranger. He may appear before them with ever so winning a bow and they remain absolutely calm until they see what he can do. Then, if they think him deserving, their enthusiasm is boundless. Another "boy wonder" is the frank, fair-faced little Raoul Kaulkowski, a Polish boy of 9 years. He is court pianist to the Czar of Russia, and his little coat is covered with orders and medals. He also has a decided talent for composition, and with such marked national characteristics as to recall to us the early compositions of Chopin. At the close of one of his concerts here last winter all of the women pushed and struggled to the front in order to kiss him. (Did you ever notice with what zest women kiss wonderful children?) He stood there gracefully receiving it all. Finally one little woman, finding it impossible to reach him, threw him a rose. That inspired another to throw him her breastpin. He took the rose and smilingly kissed it, and, picking up the breastpin, with a polite bow passed it back to its owner. The other little boy is a Belgian—Jean Gerardy. He is ten years old, and plays the 'cello like a man. Whether or not he composes, I do not know, but he is an artist. He made his debut here at one of Hans Richter's philharmonic concerts, and charmed me. I was speaking to our never-to-be-forgotten 'cellist Adolf Hartdegan, recently about little Jean. "Yes," he said, "I was asked to hear him, and I was so tired, oh! so tired, of these child wonders, that I looked forward to a stupid morning, but I was amazed. I was delighted. He is an artist."

Talking Canary Birds.

The story of the talking canary, which a few weeks ago attracted much attention in Liverpool, has brought out other instances of an acquired power of speech in the same bird. In the organ of the Selborne Society, where the story originally appeared, there are some further cases given, and probably many more may be forthcoming. Attention has been directed to an account of a talking canary at Norwood which was published in a natural history magazine for 1858. It began by repeating a word which its mistress had often used to it—"Kissie, kissie"—and by following the word up by an imitation of the sound of a kiss. Its mistress had been in the habit of kissing the bird and talking to it as if it were a child. After a time the bird repeated other words, until it has now a vocabulary of phrases, one of which consists of five words.

Again, in 1863, a talking canary was heard and seen at a cottage near Bath. Visitors crowded to the spot to hear and see it. Its vocabulary consisted of such phrases as are generally taught to parrots. A case is also recorded of a speaking canary having been exhibited in Regent street about twenty years ago. The explanation given is that the bird is gifted with unusual powers of imitation, and will pick up airs freely which it is in the habit of frequently hearing. Left to itself, it quickly imitates the notes of other birds, and in Germany and the Tyrol canaries are usually placed for this purpose beside the nightingale. In our country they are often taught to imitate the lark. The words which it imitates may be regarded as a mere development or variant of its musical notes.

Not Altogether a Bad Fault.

We are told by M. Delisle, the librarian of the Bibliotheque Nationale, that paper is now made of such inferior materials that it will soon rot, and very few of the books published nowadays have the chance of long life. Probably this fact is not greatly to be regretted. We could gladly spare the tons of rubbish which annually flood the world under the name of literature, and the books that are really valuable could be easily reprinted. Probably in days to come we shall see books advertised as "warranted to last a year," or "guaranteed to crumble up in a fortnight." This, what some have called "alarming information" of M. Delisle, should, however, by no means be the cause of sorrow. For it will give extra employment to printers, bookbinders and publishers. Possibly some people will be inclined to lament that certain authors are not well supplied with perishable writing paper, warranted to disappear within a day after the application of ink to its surface.—London Graphic.

DIAMOND THIEF JAILED.

Ordered Goods in a Wealthy Banker's Name.

RUN TO EARTH IN ST. MARY'S, ONT.

Attempted to Swindle Jewelers in Toronto, Hamilton and London—Caught by a Decoy Package—Jewelers Warned by a Trade Newspaper.

Toronto, March 25. — There are many ingenious and carefully contrived plans for defrauding jewelers, but the coolest swindle which has been perpetrated in Canada, at all events, for many a day, was that planned by a Southerner, variously known as J. C. Coleman, T. Hutton and by half a dozen other aliases. The sharpness of a Hamilton jeweler, however, defeated the carefully planned swindle, and Hutton is now in Toronto jail lamenting his ill-success, while the diamonds which he secured from unsuspicious dealers are in the custody of Provincial Detective Greer.

The scheme adopted was to use the name of a well-known business man in St. Mary's, who is rated as worth $60,000 in Bradstreet's, and order diamonds to be sent on approval, trusting that the jewelers would make no enquiries before forwarding the goods, and that before the fraud was discovered the swindler would escape with his spoils.

Among the passengers on the 3.45 train from the west who alighted at St. Mary's on Thursday afternoon last was a well-dressed stranger, weighing about 230 pounds, and with a blemish in his right eye. He was accompanied by his wife and a child of six years. They put up at the National Hotel, where the man registered as "T. Hutton, St. Thomas, wife and child." A few hours later this telegram, which, subsequent developments proved, had been sent by Hutton himself, arrived and was delivered to him:

> St. Thomas, March 21.
>
> T. Hutton St. Mary's:
>
> Party at Guelph wants the diamonds, Saturday sure.
>
> ROSSINGTON.

On Friday morning Hutton called at the express office, introduced himself to Agent Sharp and asked if there was an express parcel for him. There was, and Hutton opened it and displayed several cheques, at the same time handing this letter to Sharp:

> St. Thomas, March 21.
>
> My Dear Sir:
>
> Mr. H. returned yesterday, and he is also very favorably impressed with St. Mary's, and thinks it will make a good opening for your business. There is nothing new here since you left. The only mail of importance that has come is the enclosed two cheques.
>
> 1 for $683.55
> 1 for 229.00
> $912.55
>
> Perhaps you will soon get located. With love to your wife and child,
>
> I am, your loving
>
> FATHER.

The similarity of Hutton's name with that of T. Hutton, the well-known local broker and banker, who is rated in Bradstreet's as worth $60,000, struck Agent Sharp, and he asked his caller if he was related, and received an answer in the negative. The visitor then proceeded to explain that he had plenty of money, that it was very thoughtful of his father to send the cheques, but he purposed sending them back. Thereupon another package was made up and the cheques were returned to St. Thomas addressed to G. T. Hutton. They are probably still in the St. Thomas express office awaiting a claimant.

Incidentally Hutton told Agent Sharp that he expected parcels during Friday and Saturday from the following jewelers:

Peter Birtwistle, London.
Thomas Lees, Hamilton.
Levy Bros. & Co., Hamilton.
P. W. Ellis & Co., Toronto.
Goldsmith Stock Co., Toronto.
Samuel Frenkel, Toronto.
E. & A. Gunther, Toronto.
A. Kent & Sons, Toronto.
E. W. Morphy & Co., Toronto.
Ryrie Bros., Toronto.
Edmund Scheuer, Toronto.
John Wanless & Co., Toronto.

On opening his mail on Friday morning Clerk Boyd of Levy Bros. & Co., jewelers of Hamilton, found this letter:

> St. Mary's, March 20, 1895.
>
> Gentlemen: I wish to procure two diamonds. I don't care whether they are set in ring, pin or stud, or unset, each stone to weigh about 1 1-2 carats, to be perfectly white, well cut and without a flaw. I wish you would send by express several pairs on to select from, and will return promptly those I don't want. If you can arrange it so I can make 10 per cent. kindly do so.
>
> I presume the mercantile reports will be able to inform you as to my standing and respectability.
>
> The parties who want them are going to call on Saturday, so it will be necessary for you to send them by express on Friday. Yours respectfully,
>
> T. HUTTON.

He read it over twice and came to the conclusion that it looked suspicious. Then he took a run over to the rival jewelry establishment of Thomas Lees, and found that a similar epistle had arrived in their morning mail. Boyd's suspicions became proofs as strong as Holy Writ when a short time later he chanced to look through a copy of The Jeweler's Guide, which had arrived by the same mail. In it he read an account of a diamond swindle perpetrated in the south under identically the same circumstances.

Crown Attorney Crerar was communicated with. He wired the Attorney-General's office, and Detective Greer was detailed on the case. He visited Hamilton. Two packages containing rhinestones were expressed to St. Mary's, and the Government officer and Detective McMahon left for Stratford, with the intention of driving over to St. Mary's and arresting Hutton when he called for the packages.

Meantime Levy & Co. had telephoned P. W. Ellis & Co. of this city of their suspicions, at the same time enquiring if similar letters had been received here. They had not, but the 12.50 mail brought the letters to all the Toronto dealers whose names appear above. Ellis & Co. notified as many jewelers as possible and communicated with Inspector Stark. The latter decided to capture the swindler, if possible. A decoy package, containing only paper, was made up and shipped to St. Mary's and Detective Slemin went on the same train. He arrived in St. Mary's at 8 o'clock, went direct to the express office, and was granted permission to secrete himself in the office and await the arrival of Hutton. About 3 a.m. Saturday Detectives Greer and McMahon, who had driven over from Stratford, also arrived at the express office, and they, too, secreted themselves.

Shortly after 9 a.m. the stranger presented himself and asked for parcels addressed to T. Hutton. The three packages, purporting to come from Messrs. Lees, Levy and Ellis, were handed to him, and he signed the receipt book. He had turned to leave the office, when Detectives Slemin and Greer, who had been concealed behind a side door, arrested him. He was dumfounded at the contretemps, but made no remark whatever.

The prisoner was taken to the National Hotel, where he was searched, but nothing of value was found on him, excepting a diamond stud, which he wore in his shirt front. Two rings set with diamonds and turquoise and valued at probably $200 each were found in possession of his wife.

A visit was made to the postoffice and the mail addressed to Hutton impounded. It included letters from Messrs. Frenkel and Morphy of this city, who had not been notified with the other jewelers, but who gave reasons for not forwarding the diamonds. The more valuable find, however, was a registered letter containing two diamond rings, sent on by P. Birtwistle of London, in answer to Hutton's request. An account was inclosed, showing the rings to be worth $125 and $95 respectively. These rings Detective Greer took possession of. Two diamond studs and a diamond ring were discovered in the lining of Hutton's coat. He had a number of letters in his pocket addressed to "Prof. Jones."

Then a dispute arose as to whether the Toronto or Hamilton officer was to secure the custody of the prisoner. Detective Greer suggested that, as Slemin was first on the ground with his warrant, he was entitled to the quarry. The Hamilton officer finally reluctantly consented that the prisoner should be brought to Toronto, and he arrived here Saturday evening. His wife and child also accompanied him to this city, but are not in custody.

WARMING THE CARS.

The Present Status of Electricity to Heating Purposes.

Many of the cars on the electric railway lines are now heated in winter entirely by electric heaters, placed beneath the seats, where they take up no usful room, and their use for this purpose is rapidly increasing; but for domestic purposes—cooking or heating of residences—less progress has been made. For these larger uses, as well as for illumination, current must be brought into the houses from the street mains. It is out of the question at present to consider primary batteries as a source of current for either of these purposes.

As to the actual cost of electrical heating the following data are the most reliable obtainable. They have been translated into equivalents of 16-candle power electric lamps, the cost of an electric lamp being about 1 cent per hour. One pint of water can be brought from 60 degrees F. to the boiling point at the cost of two 16-candle power lamps for one hour; or, by the use of the equivalent of five lamps it can be made to boil in twelve minutes; or, by the use of the equivalent of 16½ lamps, it can be made to boil in 3.7 minutes. Four or five cutlets can be fried, including the time required for heating the pan, by employing the equivalent of five lamps for 12 minutes. For the electric oven, one authority states that the equivalent of 18 lamps will heat it from 53 degrees F. to 120 degrees in five minutes, to 256 degrees in 10 minutes, to 356 degrees in 15 minutes, and to 437 degrees F. in 20 minutes.

From this it will readily be seen that electrical cooking is considerably more expensive than the present methods, and must still be considered in the light of a luxury in more ways than one. It would be a luxury, indeed, if the dirt and heat attendant upon the coal stove could be done away with, and when this luxury ceases to be too expensive, as it will be when methods of generating electricity are cheapened, it will be widely adopted and more thoroughly appreciated.—Cassier's Magazine.

ATHLETIC MONGOLS.

They Are Not the Miserable Weaklings That Popular Impression Makes Them—Tough and Strong.

One of the surprises encountered by the traveller when he is first cast among the Mongolians is their physical development. Americans are wont to judge their bodily structure by the specimens in the laundry shops of Sam Lee or Wi Pung; and the loose clothing of the Chinaman conceals his brawny arms and legs when he has them. Seeing Thibetians in the Himalayas—stocky, chunks of men with an abnormal muscular development—had not brushed away my idea that the Chinaman was rather a slim, unmuscular Oriental, something like the willowy Hindu; but when I landed in Singapore and first saw numbers of coolies stripped to their work, I was thunderstruck at their massive proportions. The Chinese are commonly said to be a deceased race, a people permeated with blood poisons; but one does not see it in the average specimen, and one does see at every corner men with limbs and torsos like a Sandow, men who would be marked down for football players in any American college. Not but what disease is always an accompaniment of so crowded a population; not that its manifestations fail to impress you; but the Chinaman, far from being a taper-fingered mortal, is a tough, sturdy, fine fellow, with thews and sinews like an athlete and plenty of ambition and courage—within his racial lines. Nor have I found any exception to the rule. The Mongol, from the borders of India, where, going east, you first strike his homely coarseness, to the confines of Japan, where you say good-by to his lovely cherry blossoms and his smiling bows, is everywhere, in physique, the same strong, enduring man. The Chinaman is filthy in mind, body and estate; the Japanese is equally clean, but in mere physical quality they are very much alike. That the Mongol's nervous structure is less fine than Aryan's is evidenced by the fact that the average Chinaman will endure unblenched the pain of a surgical operation which would seriously compromise the reactionary power of most white men, and this, if anything, adds to his value as a mere human animal.—Forum.

Author's Copy.

Notwithstanding the lapse of time Sir Walter Scott still occupies a commanding position among our novelists. In early life he wrote a legible hand, though being

A clerk foredoomed his father's soul to cross,
Who pens a stanza when he should engross.

His stanzas displayed more character than his chirography. Toward the close of his career, when the great mind became obscured, his manuscript was crabbed, blurred and altered so as to be almost unreadable.

Fenimore Cooper appears to have written his numerous novels with a burnt stick. Nathanial Hawthorne's handwriting was irregular and indistinct. Dickens says he never copied, always sending the original draft of his works to the printer. The printer, however, would have been better pleased if Dickens had copied, for his manuscript is written in a galloping, slapdash style frequently blurred and altered and very diffiult for the compositor to set up.

W. M. Thackeray's manuscript is entirely the reverse. It is free from blots and erasures, the writing is clear, neat, regular, and nearly upright, the words well apart—in short, a pleasure to read.—Chambers' Journal.

Getting Rid of Tramps.

The hordes of tramps who now afflict the land like the locusts of Egypt are seriously puzzling municipal authorities everywhere. The jail has no terrors for the tramp—in fact, he rather prefers it, in winter, to the box car; in the jail he is kept warm, is fed, and has nothing to do. We commend to these puzzled municipal officers the plan adopted by the authorities of Tacoma. In that city there has been built in the jail a species of cell which might be called the "Tacoma torture chamber for tramps." It is about eight feet high and three feet square. Around the ceiling, the walls and the floor there runs a perforated one-inch pipe. The tramp is made to disrobe, given soap and a brush and induced to enter the torture chamber.

Then the water is turned on full head. The awful shrieks and yells which emerge from the torture chamber are said to strike terror to the soul of the stoutest tramp. When the victim has been released he strikes out from Tacoma, bearing his tale of horror to unnumbered tramps. The result has been a marked falling off of tramp travel in that locality. The people of Tacoma have discovered how to get rid of the tramp. They wash him.—San Francisco Argonaut.

LAKE CAYUGA NEVER GIVES UP ITS DEAD.

No Drowned Person Has Ever Been Recovered from Its Depths.

"If they succeed in recovering the bodies of instructor Merriam and Miss Yeargin from the depths of Cayuga Lake by means of electricity, as I see they intend to try to do," said a resident of this city who grew up on the shores of Cayuga Lake, "it will be the first time in the history of the lake that the body of any person drowned in its waters was ever seen again. I always had a liking for geological research, and indulged in it for many years in investigating the bottom of Cayuga Lake. My experiments satisfied me that the bottom of the lake is a series of large openings and cavities, many of them crater-like. Some of these are a hundred feet in diameter. These craters, as I believe them to be, lie at different depths, or, rather, their raised edges are of different height. Their depths are fathomless. They have undoubtedly become the receptacles of the bodies of the hundreds of people who are known to have been drowned in the lake since that country was settled, and of the undoubted thousands of people killed in the fierce battles that were frequently waged on the shores of the lake between hostile tribes of aboriginal warriors during the centuries preceding the coming of the white man.

"It was in Cayuga Lake that the fiendish murderer, Ruloff, lowered the bodies of his wife and child thirty years ago after he had murdered them. The bodies were inclosed in a chest, as he confessed before he was hanged at Binghamton for another murder. The weeks that were spent in dragging the lake for this chest was simply wasted, for it had sunk into the mouth of one of those bottomless openings, and, if it is not sinking yet, is still floating about in those mysterious depths.

"Within half a century more than 100 persons have been drowned in Cayuga Lake, to recover the bodies of whom the grappling iron and drag were used industriously, but in vain. If it were possible for one to make the rounds of the lake's crater-like bed he would without doubt encounter hideous charnel houses beyond number—caverns where hosts of grinning skeltons have found sepulchre, submarine catacombs without end. Perhaps the electricians, exploring the lake bottom with their intense lights, as they propose doing, may make some such discoveries.

"Another mystery about Cayuga Lake that used to puzzle me was its curious tides. They were irregular in their occurrence, but very decided. I remember one year when the phenomenon appeared twice. Three years passed before it appeared again. During one of these tidal motions of the lake, the water receded fifty feet. The recession of the water was gradual, but the returning tide came in with considerable force and rapidity. Water taken from Cayuga Lake from a depth of 390 feet, probably from one of the crater cavities, is highly charged with sulphureted hydrogen, nitrogen, carbolic acid, and the carbonates of lime, potash, soda, and magnesia.—N. Incompetent Wives.

There is no greater injustice that can be inflicted upon a girl than for a mother to allow a daughter to enter womanhood or wifehood without a practical knowledge of a household and its requirements, writes Edward W. Bok, in "At Home With the Editor" in the January Ladies' Home Journal. I care not how easy her beginning may be made for her, how everything may be provided her by generous parents when she begins her new career, nor how many servants she may have at her call, a woman is crully handicapped who comes to her own home without an intelligent conception of its management. It is a popular thing to certain "smart sets" to scoff at the utility of housekeeping, but nothing more surely stamps the intellectual calibre of a girl than an indulgence in such feather-brained commonplaces. The girl who believes she becomes fashionable by being untrue to the best instincts of her sex is the girl who some day wakes up to wonder why other women are so happily married, and she still retains her single blessedness (?). Wealth does not lessen the necessity of a knowledge of home-making and home-keeping on the part of a girl. The largest retinue of servants requires a head, and an intelligent one, just as the largest business requires a master, and servants, whether in a home or in an office, are quick to discover incapacity and take advantage of it. The woman who comes closest to the solution of the servant-girl problem is the woman whom her servants know is as capable of doing their work as they are themselves. Servants of any kind work best and only under direction, and proper direction requires knowledge. No study is more vital to a girl than this. Many a girl, after marriage, has wished that she knew less of conic sections and more about cooking. The strongest love of a husband for a wife is not a safeguard for the discontent which is sure to enter a home where the wife betrays constant domestic incapacity. If the husband be the master of his business he expects his wife to be the master of her home.

Writers and public speakers have done much harm in referring to cooking as a homely art; on the contrary no practical art exists which is more graceful. A woman who fills her home in every sense of the word elicits more true applause, worthy at all of the having, than the woman gifted of any orher quality. This fact cannot be too strongly impressed upon our girls.

In these days of keen competition no merchant is likely to mark too much profit on his goods. It acts with wonderful rapidity and never fails to effect a cure.

Kingston will celebrate the 24th of May in the usual loyal manner. Why can't Belleville celebrate this favorite anniversary in good style, as was the wont in former years, and make it one of the two days which it is proposed to devote to the dehorned "summer carnival" of water sport—one day in May and one in August, say, the latter at the convenience of the Lake Yacht Racing Association, who fix their circuit to suit their members and irrespective of any other considerations. If a yacht race, a horse race, or a sculling race is to be called a "Summer Carnival," then Belleville has, during many years past, unwittingly given many "Summer Carnivals" under less pretentious but more sensible titles.

DRESSED HOGS.

An Upward Move—Scarcity Throughout the Province.

Dressed hogs are advancing in price on account of a general scarcity throughout the province. To-day in Toronto they are $5.75 to $6 per cwt.

As a result all hog products have an upward tendency. The Chicago pork market, which has been fluctuating, is also advancing again the past few days.

Hard on the Legal Profession.

A bill entitled "An act for diminishing appeals and otherwise improving the procedure of the courts," introduced in the Local Legislature last week by the Attorney General will, if it becomes law, strike the legal profession of the Province a pretty hard blow. It provides for the lessening of fees for solicitors and imposes other restrictions that will meet with disfavor from almost every member of the bar. A prominent lawyer, in conversation with a reporter this morning, said that, owing to the large amount that it now cost a young man to acquire the profession and the heavy dues exacted by the Law Society, the lawyers have a heavy enough burden already without reducing their income in the manner proposed in Sir O. Mowat's bill. There is no probability, however, that the bill will become law without many amendments.

A Commendable "Move."

It has been the practice of a certain class of young men to hang about the entrance to Bridge st. church on Sunday evenings for years past and the police have tried by every means to abate the nuisance. These young loiterers hang on to the edge of the walk to the inconvenience of the large number of people who generally attend this church, and this is not all. Several ladies have complained of insulting and insinuating remarks from these young men. The police have taken a decisive stand in the matter and last night dispersed the crowd. They will hereafter keep an eye on this spot.

Officers Appointed.

The directors of the Richelieu and Ontario Navigation Company have appointed the following officers to command their steamers for the coming season: Captain T. J. Craig, Passport; Captain H. Eshford, Corsican; Captain H. Grange, Spartan; Captain A. Dunlop, Algerian; and Captain Baker will have charge of the Hamilton, better known as the Magnet. The pursers will be Messrs. Dubois, Sewell, Ford, Boyle and Perley. The company will probably use the Church street wharf at Toronto this year.

The Weather.

Spring is here in fact as well as in name. The sleighing, after lasting for eighty-two days, was ended by Saturday night's rain, and the temperature keeps up so well as to indicate that the season will not be so late for farming operations as was thought a short time ago. The ice on the river looks as though it's break-up will not be long delayed, and that on the bay is wasting very rapidly. Yesterday at noon the thermometer marked 50—the highest this year—and the readings since have been: During the night, 34; at 8 a. m., 40; at noon, 49.

PROBABILITIES.

Southwest to northwest winds; fair; continued mild weather.

Old Belleville Friends Join in the Celebration to the Premier.

We make the following extract from a letter received from Quincy, Ill. "Well you had a very exciting day honoring Mr. Bowell. We did our little share in the demonstration; we had a Union Jack fastened up in our sitting-room and Mr. Bowell's portrait pinned on it. I am sure L— and C— feel very, very proud of their father."

The Ice has Started.

The mild weather has so increased the flow of water into the old Moira that from a peaceful meandering stream she is being rapidly transformed into her annual angry mood. The ice from Walker's foundry down is cracked and twisted, and, in fact, about a hundred yards of it below the dam shoved down just before noon. If the mild weather continues an early breakup may be looked for.

Evangelistic Services.

Messrs. Crossley and Hunter commenced a series of evangelistic services in Parkdale Methodist church yesterday. Morning, afternoon, and evening the building was crowded, and at the latter service over two thousand people were present. At the close of the night meeting, over fifty persons expressed a desire for conversion. The meetings will be continued every night during the week.

No More Door Man.

The Oak Hall have come to the conclusion that having a door man in front of a store, hauling and stopping people, is not at all in keeping with a first-class establishment. We have thought that it was necessary, in order to protect ourselves, but have come to the decision that, controlling (as we do) the better class of trade in our line, it is unnecessary. We expect the public to note this fact, and back us up in (what we consider) conducting a business in a modern way.

Fatigue of Mind and Body.

Ambrecht's Cocoa Wine is a powerful nerve tonic and stimulant. LATEST NOTES OF SPORT.

AILSA AGAIN PROVES HERSELF A WONDER.

In a Light Air She Makes a Show of Britannia—What the Authorities Say of Her—Notes of the Cup Defender—The Oxford-Cambridge Boat Race—Athletics, Hockey, Bicycling and other Sports.

YACHTING.

The London Field says: "The Ailsa's performance on the 14th, without a shadow of a doubt justified our first opinion of her. She is far and away the fastest big cutter in light weather ever built in Great Britain or America. Going to windward and free reaching were against points in her racing display. When she is doing close hauled work she seems to settle down uncommonly by the head. She is, however, very easily tipped." The writer says the race in which the Ailsa was defeated was a poor and unreliable trial, and the result in no way dimmed her previous victories.

The current number of the London Yachtsman says: The Mediterranean racing proves that whether on the beat or the run, the Ailsa sails like a witch. Capt. Jay said to a Yachtsman reporter: "You can twist and turn her as easily as a half-rater. I truly believe that her owner has got the finest ship afloat. She is a fine sea boat, too. We did not have much time to get her out here and were required to drive her on the voyage. She makes a rare noise when she jumps into a head sea, but she is properly put together and is not going to shake herself to pieces in a hurry. During the bad weather we felt that the ship under us could laugh at any ordinary blow."

Arrangements have been made by the Herreshoffs with the National India Rubber Company, of Bristol, for the lease of one of the large rooms at their factory, in which to make the sails for the new cup defender. The Herreshoffs are to make one suit of sails for the new boat, and the syndicate will also have a suit made. The material of which the Herreshoff sails will be made is Ranice cloth, being much stronger and superior in many ways than the Sea Island and other boats in 1891. Nat Herreshoff continues to improve, and is at work a few hours each day on the plans for the new cup defender, which were not finished when he was taken ill.

At Nice on Saturday the Ailsa defeated the Britannia in a very light wind. The latter did not finish, but when last timed the Ailsa was 23 minutes ahead. The match will be resailed on Wednesday, as the yachts started before the gun was fired.

In the race at Nice yesterday for small craft the new French ten-rater Luciole II., owned by M. Louis Vilton, again defeated Mr. Henry Allen's American built Dakotah. Light airs and calms prevailed throughout the racing.

The attempt to buy Gen. Paine's Jubilee as a trial boat for the cup defender, has failed.

ROWING.

Barring accidents or a change in the programme, the fifty-second boat race between crews, representing the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge, will be decided on the Thames, over the usual course, from Putney bridge to the Ship Inn, at Mortlake, a distance of about 4¼ miles, on Saturday next. Both crews have been finishing their training on the Thames, with plenty of good hard work.

The Cantabs, who had luck in their early training, owing to stress of weather and sickness among the crew, have steadily improved in form. Their new Clasper boat is of Havana cedar and fitted with the latest improvements, including a patent countervail. Her dimensions are: Length, 42 feet 4 inches; width, 23½ inches; depth amidships, 9¼; depth forward, 6½ inches; depth at stern, 5½ inches. The names and the weights of the Cambridge crew, subject to change, are:

	Stone	Lb
1. T. B. Hope (Trinity Hall), (bow)..	11	0
2. F. C. Stewart (Trinity Hall)......	12	2
3. H. A. Game (first Trinity)........	12	2
4. W. S. Adie (first Trinity)..........	13	0
5. T. J. G. Duncanson (Emmanuel)..	13	0
6. R. V. Bonsey (Lady Margaret)....	12	0
7. A. S. Bell (Trinity Hall)..........	12	2
8. D. A. Wauchope (Trinity Hall, (stroke)......................	11	8
9. F. C. Begg (Trinity Hall), (cox)...	8	6

On the whole, the work of the Oxford crew, up to the present seems to have met with more approval from the experts than that of the Cambridge men. The Oxford swing is perfect and their new boat runs very smoothly. It is 61 feet 7 inches long, and is 23 inches wide amid-ships. The following are the names and weights of the crews, subject to change:

	Stone	Lb
1. H. B. Cotton, (Magdalen) (bow)...	10	0
2. M. C. Pilkington, (Magdalen).....	12	1
3. C. K. Phillips, (new)...............	12	0
4. T. H. E. Stretch, (new)............	12	8
5. W. B. Stewart, (Brasenose).......	13	8
6. C. D. Burnell, (Magdalen).........	12	12
7. W. E. Crum, (new)................	12	2
8. C. M. Pittman, (new) (stroke)....	11	12
9. C. P. Seroolld, (new) (cox)........	8	10

Oxford won last year, making five victories in five successive years, and six victories to their favor, as they have won 28 times and Cambridge only 22. On one occasion, in 1877, there was a dead-heat.

A. D. Crooks, the chairman of the committee, who is collecting funds for the Argonaut four of Toronto, to Henley, is now confident the money will be raised.

BICYCLING.

To the Editor of the INTELLIGENCER.

BELLEVILLE, March 25th.

MR. EDITOR,—A movement has been made to organize an Athletic Association in this city, which should long ago have been done. I heard a bicycle club mentioned. Has Belleville a bicyble club? Seems to me I heard of a Ramblers' Wheel Club, once. Since their meet on Sept. 3rd they have been dead. Now, over forty wheels have been already sold here this year, and I think it is about time some club was organized.

A bicycle club wants members who have some sport, some life in them. If I were a racing man I should join the club who would give me the most support. Now the Ramblers had only one man who was ready to compete with all comers, and they did not support him. Some of its members objected to giving a few dollars towards defraying his expenses to London. Toronto riders get their expenses and they number dozens. When the local races were going on some of the promoters wished to hurry them on and not give their man time to rest; even a Toronto rider noted that. Only one man remained after the races to look after their rider. More than that, they gave a foreigner a prize that was well earned by the Belleville man.

Now I am for organizing a club that is alive the year round. I am not struck on the name "Ramblers." Belleville Bicycle Club is good enough. A certain body of young men have talked seriously of forming a new club. I think the Bay City has better bicycling sport than has previously been shown. Let the Ramblers live if they want to. Better have two clubs than allow the very best young material to join no club. The Athletic Association will be all the stronger. I am going to ride a wheel this year and I will support the club who can do things in a gentlemanly, businesslike way. Thanking you, Mr. Editor, for the space and hoping that something will come from this, I remain

Yours truly,
BICYCLIST.

Kingston has wakened up and is going to push her claim, if she rightfully has one, for the C. W. A. meet. Peterborough has never had the meet and as far as Belleville is concerned the plate glass city can have it in welcome, and our wheelsmen will all go out, and help to push it along. Why don't Kingston get into line, for if they divide the vote on the East the West will get it sure.

There is every probability that within a few days another bicycle club will be formed in the city. Some of the best riders in town have already signified their intention of joining it.

The Kingston Athletic Association are trying to raise funds to relay their board bicycle track.

The Canadian Sporting News says: The Class A men may be banked upon to make a pretty "scrap" of it. McKellar, Harry Hulse, Cummings, of Belleville, Frank Moore and "old horse," Jimmy Milne, should be "dead" in the game."—Cummings is going to ride a Brantford this year and is now in as good shape for the track as he was on July 1st last year. In our opinion the above named men will be sweetmeats for Bert.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The curling rink has been closed. The season was a long one, but the majority of the members never took so little interest in the game as they did this year.

We have received a copy of the Canadian Sporting News, recently founded in Toronto. The new paper is head and shoulders above all its Canadian competitors in the line of general information on current events. Its proprietor is Mr. John F. Snetsinger, and Mr. Harry J. P. Good, one of the cleverest and best informed sporting men in Canada, is the editor. The Canadian Sporting News will no doubt meet with a large patronage.

They are playing hockey in Peterborough yet. In a game on Friday evening the Collegiates defeated the Peterboroughs by 11 goals to 6.

The match shoot between Capt Brewer and T. W. Morfey took place at Paterson, N. J., on Saturday. The match was at fifty birds for $150 a side; Long Island rules, 21 yards rise, one barrel, gun below the elbow, one trap. The score at the end of the 25th round was:—Morfey 16, Brewer 22.

"Colley" Cockburn, of Toronto, has challenged the world to a pigeon match at 100 birds, under Dominion rules, which prescribe one barrel and not more than 1¼oz. shot.

Kenneth Halpine, of Lord Hawke's team of cricketers, has accepted the invitation of the Germantown Cricket Club, of Philadelphia, to take to the United States in September next a team of English amateur cricketers.

MARCH 25th.—Some talk of starting at work on the land this week, but if they do it will be to put up fences and not sowing. —travelling is very unpleasant, at present there is neither good sleighing nor good wheeling.—There was quite a shower of rain Saturday night and Sunday morning. —The bear's track in Joseph Stapleton's swamp created quite a sensation here a few days ago, but by the time the young sports had got out their guns, etc., old bruin had skipped out for the north.—Gordon and Tripp, while out hunting a short time ago, came across six coons in a hollow log and captured the whole lot.—Two sleigh loads of people from the 3rd con. met here at Mr. Burley's one night last week and took the family completely by surprise. Like a Miracle

Wonderful Results From Taking Hood's Sarsaparilla.

Miss Hannah Wyatt
Toronto, Ont.

"Four years ago while in the old country (England), my daughter Hannah was sent away from the hospital, in a very low condition with consumption of the lungs and bowels, and weak action of the heart. The trip across the water to this country seemed to make her feel better for a while. Then she began to get worse, and for 14 weeks she was unable to get off the bed. She grew worse for five months and lost the use of her limbs and lower part of body, and if she sat up in bed had to be propped up with pillows. Physicians

Said She Was Past All Help

and wanted me to send her to the 'Home for Incurables.' But I said as long as I could hold my hand up she should not go. We then began to give her Hood's Sarsaparilla. She is getting strong, walks around, is out doors every day; has no trouble with her throat and no cough, and her heart seems to be all right again. She has a first class appetite. We regard her cure as nothing short of a miracle." W. WYATT, 89 Marion Street, Parkdale, Toronto, Ontario.

Hood's Sarsaparilla Cures

CANADIAN PENSIONERS.

Republicans in 1893 Cut off U. S. Pensioners Resident in Canada—President Cleveland Restores their Rights.

After two years of persistent effort President Cleveland succeeded, just as Congress adjourned a few weeks ago, in having the dependent pensioners living in Canada restored to the rolls. Consequently Mr. Hendrick, U. S. Consul for this Consular District, has had the pleasure of listening to a great deal of sincere commendation and heartfelt praise for his President and his Government, from the soldiers' mothers and widows that have been dropping into the Consulate again to have their vouchers executed. Not only have they been put back on the rolls, but they have received cheques for the period of suspension, ranging from $186 to $252. In all, some $1,500 has been paid at the Consulate, and probably $500 more at other places in the district.

One of the last acts of the late Republican Administration was the passing of the following law, which President Harrison signed just three days before he was succeeded by President Cleveland:—

"That, from and after July 1, 1893, no pension shall be paid to a non-resident, who is not a citizen of the United States, except for actual disabilities incurred in the service."

President Cleveland and the Democratic Commissioner of Pensions have ever since been urging the repeal of the act. They held that it "caused great trouble and annoyance to the excepted classes, who constitute the great bulk of non-resident pensioners, in compelling them to make proof that they belong to these excepted classes. And the final result is that payments under it are all withheld from but few, save widows and dependent mothers, who have little else for their maintenance. The saving is too little to offset the suffering inflicted in individual cases. If all non-residents were refused payments of pension some plausible argument might be made in support of such policy; but none can be urged in favor of this law, which, while giving annoyance to all, strikes only the most helpless."

In a letter addressed to Congress by the Commissioner of Pensions, under date of December 18, 1893, referring to this law he says:—

"It has caused, and is causing, great trouble and annoyance to a large number of pensioners, and the final result is that there are now about 2,000 cases suspended in which it is practically impossible to furnish the testimony necessary to secure a resumption of payment. I have already called attention to the propriety of repealing this act in my annual report for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1893. I believe that an early passage of this bill will be of inestimable benefit to a most worthy class of pensioners, for the suspension of whose pensions there does not appear to have been any satisfactory reason.

Pledges to be Kept.

Montreal Gazette.

The Privy Council judgment laid a duty upon the Government, and from that duty they did not shrink; but they have no desire and no need to shift the responsibility for their decision upon the shoulders of Her Majesty's judges. The Premier observed to Mr. McCarthy at the hearing of the recent appeal that the Ministry was not afraid to accept its responsibilities. The issue of the order means that the Government has decided upon the definite course marked out for it by the law and the constitution, and that decision it will stand or fall. But the issue is certainly not between Separate Schools and Public Schools, or between Catholicism and Protestantism, or between French-Canadians and English-Canadians. These appeals to racial and religious differences are only meant to distract attention from the real issue. The one question is whether the pledges given when Manitoba entered confederation are to be fulfilled. The Government intends that they should be, and will endeavor to keep the national honor free from stain. In so doing it appeals for support not to Catholics only, but to all Protestants who believe in the keeping of pledges solemnly given, and in the securing to minorities of their just rights, to whatever faith or religion they may belong. The cry of provincial rights will no doubt be raised; but the plea of provincial rights does not justify provincial wrongs.

ENGLISH TEMPERANCE NOTES.

(From the Woman's Signal, London, Eng.)

Much that took place during last week was calculated to inspire temperance reformers. First of all there was Sir William Harcourt expressing himself on two separate occasions as staunch and true to the Veto Bill. Answering a Welsh correspondent on the subject, he said: "You may rely on my utmost exertions being employed to forward the cause which we both have at heart." And then, at a great Alliance meeting held in Cardiff on Wednesday evening immediately preceding the meeting of the National Liberal Federation, a letter was read from Sir William Harcourt to the effect that he concurred in the opinion that the promotion of the temperance cause was amongst the first duties of the Liberal party, and that he should be quite prepared when the time arrived to do all in his power to promote the temperance measure to which the Government was pledged.

* * * *

The Alliance meeting at Cardiff on Wednesday in last week, was most enthusiastic and successful, and it could not but have had a salutary effect on the National Liberal Federation gatherings which took place on the Thursday and Friday. Energetic speeches were delivered by Sir Wilfrid Lawson, M. P., and Mr. W. S. Caine, M. P. The burden of these speeches was that the Government should, for tactical reasons, stick to its local Veto Bill as introduced by the Chancellor of the Exchequer in 1893. Other "options" were only objected to because it was believed that they would hinder rather than promote the prospects of the bill.

* * *

Sir Wilfred Lawson concluded his speech by saying it seemed to him that their duty as temperance reformers and prohibitionists was to give Sir William Harcourt's bill their thorough, their unanimous and their hearty support. Sir William, whatever might be said about him, was, in his opinion, about the best fighter they had in the country. If Sir William Harcourt would not fail them, let them see to it that they did not fail him. Let them be shoulder to shoulder with such a leader, and, with such a cause, bodily marching on until the vindication of their courage and their constancy should be found in a free, a sober, and a happy land.

The Patrons Again.

Once again have the Patron members in the Legislature hastened to the support of Sir Oliver at the expense of their own principles. When the local election was in progress the Patron platform was published. A prominent plank was this: "a "system of civil service reform that will "give each county power to appoint or "elect all county officials paid by them "except county judges." This was an old Conservative proposition justified by the fact that local offices have become the prizes for politicians, more particularly for those members of the Legislature who during their term are careful to vote at the party's call, and not "to think of "thinking for themselves at all." No doubt many Conservative farmers reconciled themselves to the Patron policy in the expectation that a measure of reform for which their party had fought would be secured through the new political agency. Dr. Meacham on Tuesday introduced a resolution embodying the Conservative and Patron planks, and declaring "that in the opinion of this "House the present mode of appointing "registrars of deeds and other county "officials is unsatisfactory, and should be "changed; and that the appointment of "all the said officials whose salary or re"muneration is provided in whole or "mainly by the counties for which they "are appointed, should not be vested in "the executive of the province, but in the "people of the locality through their "municipal bodies." There was no reason in the world why the Patron members should not have supported this resolution. It could not be said that it was a catch proposition; nor was there the excuse that the Fee Commission report is not down, for voting against it. Nevertheless, one of the Patrons spoke in opposition to it, and all united to bring about its defeat. Two prime questions, the fee system and the principle of appointment to local offices have now been declared upon. In both cases the Patron members were invited to support the policy they were elected to carry into force; in both Sir Oliver objected to the policy; in both the Patron members declared against their own platform, and gave the Administration their support. The Patrons, in a word, have been given the choice of voicing the opinions of the men who elected them or of turning over to the Government, and they have decided to take the latter course. These gentlemen necessarily are free to take whatever action they please on public questions as they arise. But they cannot, and of course will not, complain if under the extraordinary circumstances the mass of the electors come to the conclusion that they are simply partisans of one of the old parties under another name. In Haldimand it appears the electors thought, seeing that it had become a choice between party men, that it was just as well to send Dr. Baxter to the Legislature as Mr. Senn.—Mail and Empire.

Dangers of Delay.

If we were allowed to look into the future and see the fatal consequences that follow a neglected cold, how differently would our course be; could we realize our danger, how speedily we would seek a cure; but with many it is only when the monster disease has fastened its fangs upon our lungs that we awaken to our folly. What follows a neglected cold? It is not diseases of the throat and lungs, bronchitis, asthma, consumption, and many other diseases of like nature. Is it worse than madness to neglect a cold, and it is folly not to have some good remedy available for its frequent complaint. One of the most efficacious medicines for all diseases of the throat and lungs, is Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup. This medicine is composed of several medicinal herbs, which exert a most wonderful influence in curing consumption and other diseases of the lungs and chest. It promotes a free and easy expectoration, soothes irritation and drives the disease from the system.

"By proving that some one else did it," she said.

"Have you some one else in your mind?" I asked quickly.

She hesitated a moment and then said: "No, but there must be some one else. Is that not your first and only task?"

She was standing in front of me. The two beautiful children were clinging, one on either side, to her dress. She reached down and put her hands on their heads. It was a lovely group of innocence, and made a touching appeal.

"I feel sure that you will do it," she added.

When I came away, I felt that in some way my visit had been a failure. I had meant to place the obdurate facts before her and ask her to assist me in working out the alibi or establishing her husband's tendency to emotional insanity. She had looked upon both suggestions with a dignified contempt and asked me to find the person who really committed the deed.

I made up my mind that I was to get no practical assistance from the wife, and in my extremity I sent for Amos Daryl, who was then employed in the secret service in Washington.

I had not seen him in several years, but he owed his position to me and he was the only detective I knew for whose abilities I had a profound respecct. Luckily he was able to get away, and he came to New York promptly to see me.

Daryl was a great, brawny, raw-boned fellow with a child's simple mindedness; one of those men who deceive you completely in appearance and manner. He might easily have been mistaken for an Adriondack guide on a visit to the city. But he was well-known to the police authorities and most of the criminal lawyers.

He listened to me as I went over all the details of the affair, and I don't think he spoke once till I told him what Mrs. Clarkson had said; then he smiled, put his long hands in his pockets, and stretching out his interminable legs remarked: "A good idea."

"I have told you all that there is to it. What is your opinion?"

"My opinion is that Mrs. Clarkson suspects some one else and hasn't told you. Give me a card to Mrs. Prineveau, and three or four day's time."

Just before he left, he said: "You'd better give me a card to Mr. Greve while you are about it. I want to see that bullet, and I shall have to get an order from him."

After two days' time he came back. It was about ten o'clock in the morning and he sauntered into my study in his careless manner, unlimbered himself in a big chair, and then as usual waited for me to open the conversation.

"Well, Amos," I said, throwing down my pen and wheeling round, "you've come back a little sooner than I expected. Have you got anything to say to me?"

"Not much."

He said this with his aggravating vacuity, and stopped. One hand was thrust into his pocket, the other supported his head in an easy, indolent, sprawling position.

"I THINK I KNOW WHO COMMITTED THAT MURDER."

"I suppose you have made up your mind; it is a waste of time trying to save that man. Well, I about made up mind to that myself, some time ago."

"Do you mind telling me how you go into this case?" he asked.

"As that is a private matter and you are not disposed to take any share in the case, I don't see why I should make you a confidant."

"Did Mrs. Prineveau ask you to defend Clarkson?"

"Ah! Mr. Greve told you?"

"No he didn't."

"Then, Mrs. Prineveau?"

"Mrs. Prineveau would not talk to me. I scared her."

"Scared her? you must have lost your tact."

"No, I haven't."

"Look here, Daryl," I said, a little nettled. "You are one of the cleverest men in a particular line I ever met. This whole thing is in a nutshell. Either that man Clarkson shot Mr. Prineveau or he didn't. If he didn't shoot him he must have been somewhere at the time. He says he was drunk and if so some one must have seen him at some resort far away from the scene of the crime. It's a plain piece of work to find out the man's resorts and get hold of the persons who saw him there on that day. That's all there is to it, and I don't mind telling you that I haven't a bit of faith in the task, but there's a chance."

Daryl did not say anything for a moment. He worked his big fist in his pocket mechanically, and looked down at his heavy boots as if he were at a complete loss. Presently he said, drawlingly: "Yes, that would be a waste of time."

"Then you have made up your mind that Clarkson is guilty."

"No—o. I've made up my mind he is innocent."

"Have you seen him?

"Ye—s. Saw his wife, too."

"And he convinced you that he was innocent?"

"N—o. His wife convinced me."

I laughed. "You're more susceptible than I supposed," I said. "She would have convinced me, too, if I hadn't kept my wits about me"

Daryl threw his head back and pulled at his iron-gray whiskers a moment. Then he said in a schoolboy way: "I think I know who committed that murder, old fellow."

"Do you? Who?"

"Mrs. Prineveau!"

If he told me that he thought I had committed it, I don't think I could have been more astonished. I gave an incredulous start. "I wish you'd give me the facts upon which you have built that quick and—pardon me for saying it—that preposterous conclusion."

"I haven't got a single fact yet," he replied. "I'll look for the facts if you like, later on."

"What in heaven's name then have you got to warrant such a conclusion?"

"Kinder got the truth. It's different from facts. Can't foot it up, but you feel it all the same. I allers prefer it to facts—to begin with, for the facts kinder fit into it easy like."

I got up and took a turn or two. My mind did not easily adjust itself to this possibility. Daryl reached out his long arm and played with the paper weight on my table contentedly.

"Amos," I said, "I don't know what to make of this, and I think that you ought to tell me exactly how this notion got into your mind."

He toyed with the paper wight, and did not look at me. I could see that he was somewhat at a loss how to explain himself.

"Well," he finally said, "I ain't good at tracking my own notions, as you call 'em, and I don't mind saying in a general way that the truth slips into some people's system without their knowin' how. As a rule it's a woman's system, and ten to one it's a woman like Mrs. Clarkson. Why, if her husband had murder on his clothes she'd smell it over night. She knows every turn of his big lubberly heart. She knows he hasn't killed anybody, and I'd take her word for it. A woman knows a lot of things that a man don't."

"Yes," I said, "she knows how to play on a man's susceptibilities."

"Mrs. Prineveau don't want to play on my susceptibilities, does she? You saw her, didn't you?"

"Yes, I did."

"And she struck you as a conscientious, self-respecting, kindly old party, didn't she?" "She certainly impressed me as a woman who had nothing to conceal and was anxious that justice should be tempered with mercy." "Very cool, and colected, and dignified."

"Most assuredly."

"Well, when she met me, she gave a start. 'Who brought you into the case?' she said. 'Not you, madam, of course,' says I, and she gave a little twitch. 'I wanted,' says I, 'to take a look at that bullet.' She snatched at the back of the chair, and laid in a big breath. 'You had better go to my lawyer. I don't think he will let you see it.' 'I'm not sure that he has it, madam,' I said, 'I have seen it, and it was never made for a pistol barrel.'

"Say, old fell, that's a great woman, and she'll beat us in the end if we don't use a woman's tactics. She just braced herself and began to act, but it was too late. 'Ah,' says she, 'you have some new theory in the case or some new light. I wish you would go to my lawyer with it and if you wish any material assistance why you can come to me afterward.'

"I call that simply prodigious; she says to herself: 'Here's a dangerous man. I'll get Mr. Greve to handle him and I'll handle Mr. Greve, and I'll throw out a hint of money at the same time.'"

Then Amos Daryl struck the paperweight that he held in his hand emphatically on the table, and, turning round, said: "My friend, that woman had no sooner clapt her eyes on me than she understood the truth; and the truth was this: that somebody had arrived that she couldn't hoodwink. I tell you, a woman's thinking apparatus is lightning sometimes."

I sat down in front of Daryl. "You amaze me," I said. "Suppose you turn to the facts now. The bullet was not made for a pistol barrel."

"No. The pistol is a little French plaything. There are not twenty-five of them in the country, for we make those things better here. But it was made at a French factory where the cartridges are all moulded. The bullet from Mr. Prineveau's body was not moulded. It was cut from a piece of lead and shaped with an instrument. You can see the marks of a fine file on it if you use a glass."

"But," I observed, "the bullet entered Mr. Prineveau's side through his clothing, the hole was found in his vest. It must have been fired from that side, and Mrs. Prineveau was on the other side."

"See here," said Daryl, getting up suddenly. "I don't mind being a little rash just for once, and I'll bet you the trip ticket to Florida, where you can see my little orange grove, after this case is decided, that Mr. Prineveau didn't wear the vest with the hole in it when he was killed in the carriage. Have you been up to Sixty-sixth street and Fourth avenue to look the ground over?"

"No."

"Well, I have. It was five o'clock when Mr. Prineveau was killed, and there was a steady stiff wind blowing from the northeast with plenty of snow, but it was light enough to see westward across the open lots to the Fifth avenue. If there had been anybody within a thousand feet the coachman or Mrs. Prineveau could have seen him. To suppose that a little French pistol could have carried further than that straight to Mr. Prineveau's heart is one of those yarns that would make a marine sick. My dear fellow, I've talked more to-day than I have in six months. But Mrs. Clarkson was dead right when she said the thing to do is to prove that some one else committed the crime."

"Can we do it?"

"We can find that person, but to prove it—well, to tell you the truth, I don't believe we will, for that person is as clever as four lawyers and eight ordinary detectives, and has had the start of us for a year or more."

"Where are you going now?"

"I'm going over to take some things to that woman in Varick street. I don't believe she is comfortable, and I'm dead sure she hasn't any friends. I'll see you in the morning with some facts, if I run across 'em."

CHAPTER IV.

This interview, when I came to think it over, took the conceit out of me, and the retaining fee of five hundred dollars had an ugly look. Daryl, it was true, might be mistaken, but there was something in me that respected his opinions. Why did Mrs. Prineveau have such confidence in me and such distrust in Daryl? Why was I sent to her to be sized up, as it were. Evidently the kind of woman Daryl had insisted she was. She had counted on just the stupidity that I had shown. This reflection made my professional vanity a little vindictive. "So, so," I said to myself, "I am retained to defend Clarkson. Very well. He shall be defended to the best of my ability."

THE RETAINING FE[illegible] HAD AN UGLY LOOK.

"I always try to keep up with the times," remarked Charley Nolego, as the clock struck 11. "Yes," replied the fatigued young woman, "you are the latest thing I know of."

Hamlet—"I had a funny experience on the road recently." Yorick—"What was that?" Hamlet—"Why, the management gave us our salary regularly every week for two weeks."

A Dinner Pill.—Many persons suffer excruciating agony after partaking of a hearty dinner. The food partaken of is like a ball of lead upon the stomach, and instead of being a healthy nutriment it becomes a poison to the system. Dr. Parmelee's Vegetable Pills are wonderful correctives of such troubles. They correct acidity, open the secretions and convert the food partaken of into healthy nutriment. They are just the medicine to take if troubled with Indigestion or Dyspepsia.

THE DEPUTATION LEAVES TO-DAY.

A Peculiar Partnership Case in the Supreme Court—Selling Whisky to Bruce County Indians—Company Formed to Utilize the Offal From the Canneries.

Ottawa, March 26.—His Excellency received a cablegram from Sir Terence O'Brien, Governor of Newfoundland, intimating that Messrs. Bond, Morris, Ellison and Harwood, members of the Executive Council of the colony, will leave for Ottawa to-morrow.

Evidently Promoter Huddart's company is going to escape any trouble arising out of the Hawaiian rebellion. According to advices which have reached the Department of Trade and Commerce Judge Advocate Kenny of Honolulu has arrived at Vancouver, to negotiate with Messrs. Johnston, Miller and Cranston, who are suing the Canadian-Australian Steamship Company for $50,000 each for their forcible deportation from Honolulu. Before the ship's captain would allow the three men on board he secured a guarantee from the Hawaiian Government that they would be responsible for the consequences, and the Government is now anxious to settle with the three men.

Mr. McLeod Stewart of this city is interested in the organization of a company for the purpose of utilizing the waste fish and offal from the canneries on the Fraser River in British Columbia, and a company has just been organized by Mr. Pears, a friend of Mr. Stewart, in London for the purpose of raising the necessary capital. Competent authorities state that 400 tons of guano and 145 tons of fish oil can be derived from 1000 tons of residual matter and waste fish. Supposing the company were to start out with the object of utilizing this quantity of waste in one year, and to procure the product stated, it would realize in value £3775. The cost of manufacture would amount to £2100, leaving a net profit of £1675. The company is asking the Dominion for a grant of land on Lulu Island, at the mouth of the Fraser, for the purpose of erecting their factory thereupon.

Constable Chamberlain of the Dominion Police has been in Bruce County for some time inquiring into reports of illegal whisky traffic among the Indians and he has been successful in securing a number of convictions.

Mr. A L. Crocker, president of the Minneapolis Board of Trade, and chairman of the Deep Waterways' Convention, is in the city gathering information with regard to the Canadian canal system. He had an interview with Sir Mackenzie Bowell and other Ministers to-day. Mr. Crocker says that since the Toronto convention he has spent considerable time in looking into the transportation question. It is the great problem which the Northwest has to solve, and he believes the solution lies in the improvement of the waterways on the great lakes and the St. Lawrence.

Argument before the Supreme Court in Bathell v. Scotten was concluded to-day. Judgment was reserved.

The next case taken up was Wigle v. Williams, in which the respondent seeks to make the appellant liable as a member of the firm of S. Wigle & Son on notes given by his son in the firm name for the amount due respondent on deposits with the firm. The partnership had been dissolved in 1882, but prior to that the son, who managed the business, used to receive money on deposit, agreeing to pay 8 per cent. for it, and the respondent was one of the depositors. Appellant's counsel argued that, as the business carried on by the firm was only that of a country store, the son could not bind his partner by entering into what was really a banking business and never contemplated by the terms of partnership. He also relied on the Statute of Limitations. Argument was proceeding when court adjourned at 4 o'clock. McCarthy, Q.C., and Fleming for appellant; Hanna for respondent.

The Confederation Delegation Appointed—Whiteway Still Very Ill.

St. John's, Nfld., March 26.—The delegation to confer with the Canadian Government at Ottawa were appointed this morning. They are: Hon. Robert Bond, George H. Emerson, Q.C., Edward P. Morris and William H. Horwood. Emerson, the oldest, is only 42. They leave for Ottawa to-morrow night.

Trade is reviving. Sir William Whiteway is yet very ill, but consulted his Cabinet and nominated the delegates. He much regrets his inability to go with them to Ottawa.

Costly Blaze at Dunville

Dunville, Ont., March 25.—Fire destroyed a storehouse owned by Mr. W. W. Montague and used by John Brown and W. W. Krick as a seed warehouse with all contents. A frame building adjoining owned and occupied by Mrs. Rice was burned together with a piano and furniture. A brick dwelling owned by W. W. Krick was also damaged. The losses are: W. W. Krick, on seeds $850, insured for $400; on dwelling, $300, insured; on furniture, $300, no insurance; John Brown, on flour and grain, $1200; insured for $1000; Mrs. Rice, loss $1400, insurance $850; W. W. Montague, on building $600, insurance $400.

Orillia Hotel Burned.

Orillia, March 26.—The Bay Horse Hotel was gutted by fire and the stables burned this morning. Only the hard work of the firemen prevented the blaze spreading to surrounding frame structures.

Lion's Head, Ont., March 26.—The Tourists' Hotel of this place, owned and occupied by Captain Finley McPherson, was totally consumed by fire last night. The origin of the fire is unknown; partially covered by insurance.

An Oshawa Dwelling Burned.

Oshawa, Ont., March 26.—At 12.30 this morning fire consumed the frame dwelling owned and occupied by R. D. Kennedy, in Brock-street. The contents were almost a total loss, and were insured in the British North America for $400. There was also an insurance of $500 on the house in the same company.

CRACKED A C.P.R. SAFE

Midnight Mechanics Work for Nothing at Brampton Station

Brampton, March 26.—The C.P.R. Station safe was drilled and blown open by the use of powder between 1 and 2 a.m. Sunday. No money is kept in the safe and the burglars did not find a single cent. The explosion was heard by several householders in the neighborhood, but mistaken by them for thunder. This is the third time this safe has been cracked in a dozen years. An evil-looking tramp, who was seen hanging about a blacksmith shop, from which tools were stolen for the job, is the man Detective Ross is looking for.

WYCLIFFE COLLEGE SCORED.

Archbishop Lewis of Kingston Explains His Objections.

Kingston, March 26.—To-day being the 33rd anniversary of the consecration of Archbishop Lewis as bishop he was presented with an address signed by the clergy of the diocese of Ontario. In the address, reference being made to the Wycliffe College difficulty His Grace, in his reply said:

It may be well to make plain to you my attitude towards Wycliffe College. Up to the present time I have never made any public statement on the subject nor exhibited the least hostility to the college, though I never viewed its establishment with favor. Ever since I could reason on such subjects I disliked the multiplication of small theological seminaries. I believe that they beget narrowness, which ends in bigotry. This is inevitable when young men of a certain theological stripe are hived together in order to be moulded to order by professors as narrow as themselves. The policy of the first bishops of Canada, like Bishops Mountain and Strachan, was to concentrate the strength of the Church on the establishment of one or two great universities where theological students should be educated in the same building with students in arts, as in the great universities in England and Ireland. Thus I have been identified with Trinity College from the day of its foundation. I know its full history. I have fought its battles, and by virtue of seniority of consecration am now the Chairman of its Corporation. Is it not, then, too much to ask of even archiepiscopal good nature that I should view with equal esteem and favor a college intended to spring into popularity out of the ruins of Trinity College?

But this is not the only ground for my dislike to Wycliffe College. I seriously object to some of the text books used there, notably, and as a specimen, Hatch's Bampton Lectures, a book characterized by my dear friend the late Bishop of Lincoln, in my hearing, as a gross perversion of the objects sought to be attained by the founder of these lectures, the Rev. John Bampton, I also object to it as an authorized "Book of Reference" for candidates for holy orders.

Further, I disagree with a great deal of the theological teaching given in Wycliffe College. I give as an illustration the following passage taken from the calendar of the college: Among the "distinctive principles" of this college is an "historical episcopate traceable to apostolic direction as conducive to the well-being, but not necessary to the being of the Church." This I believe to be a fiction without a particle of support from the New Testament, primitive authority, or the Book of Common Prayer.

BELL A MURDERER.

Finding of the Jury in the Inquest on Mrs. Swallow.

Toronto, March 26.—A jury was empanelled at the Morgue yesterday afternoon to inquire into the circumstances of Sunday morning's double tragedy. The warrant was issued for an inquest into the death of Mrs. Swallow. The blood-stained razor found in the hand of Bell was passed among the jurymen. Nothing additional beyond the story told in yesterday's World was adduced. The evidence of several of the tenement lodgers, of William Gorrie and of the police officers and detectives who were summoned to the scene was taken. A post-mortem examination made by Dr. Oriando Orr showed the internal organs to be in a healthy condition. The fatal wound extended from the middle of the left side of the neck to one inch beyond the medial line. The cut was downwards and forwards, severing the external and internal jugular vein, death resulting from hemorrhage. The verdict was that Sarah Swallow came to her death at the hands of John Bell.

RELYING ON THE PORTE.

British Confidence in Turkey Re Release of Armenian Prisoners

London, March 26.—In the House of Commons to-day Mr. Francis S. Stevenson called the attention of the Government to the fact that there were three thousand Armenians confined in Turkish prisons.

Sir Edward Grey, Under Foreign Secretary, said there was no reason to suppose that the number was anywhere near so large. The Government had no precise information as to how many prisoners had been released under the Sultan's decree relating to ecclesiastical prisoners, but they relied upon the good faith of the Porte to carry out the terms of the decree.

Rosebery Better for a Sleep

UNIVERSAL COPYRIGHT.

Mr. Conway Contends That Canada Seeks to Retard This Ultimatum.

London, March 25.—Mr. Conway, chairman of the Committee of the Society of Authors, will have in The Times to-morrow a reply to Mr. Lancefield's recent defence of Canadian copyrights. After reproducing some of his former arguments he says: It will pay to undergo material expense to secure the United States market, but a much smaller expense to secure the Canadian market would not pay. Canada's retrograde action threatens to postpone indefinitely the only sound argument, namely, a universal copyright following publication everywhere.

Courtney Abjures the Speakership

London, March 25.—Leonard Courtney has withdrawn positively his candidacy for the Speakership owing to the Unionist resolution not to oppose the Conservative nominee, Sir Matthew Ridley, Lord Tweedmouth's brother-in-law.

London, March 26.—Lord Kimberly, Secretary of the Foreign Office, will receive on March 29 a deputation of peers, Commoners and clergymen interested in the Armenian exiles and prisoners.

A BONUS TO DAIRIES.

Manitoba to Follow the Lead of the Dominion Government

Winnipeg, March 25.—The Government has in contemplation the introduction of a bill to bonus the private creameries or cheese factories operating or to be operated in the province dollar to dollar to the amount of the capital invested up to $500. This bonus will be in the form of a loan, repayable at a low rate of interest, and the measure, when it becomes law, will no doubt have the effect desired of stimulating the energies of the farmers in the direction of properly equipping themselves with the most modern aids to successful dairying.

SKIPPED OUT FROM A HOSPITAL.

A Hamilton Man Levants to Avoid Monetary Complications.

Hamilton, March 26.—William C. Hiles, insurance and general agent, who was at Joseph's Hospital, disappeared from that institution Sunday. Hiles was convalescent. He was in business troubles, and it is probable his affairs would have been ventilated in the courts upon recovery from illness. Hiles was agent for several large estates, and the handling of certain moneys requires explanation. Hiles' household goods have been sold by the bailiff. Hiles' liabilities are heavy.

PATRON BILL TO ABOLISH PASSES

Amendments to the Municipal Act and House of Refuge Bill—Revision of the Public Health Act—Petitions Against the Medical Bill.

Toronto, March 26.—At the session of the Local Legislature yesterday, which was very short and unimportant, Mr. Kerns moved for an order of the House for a return showing the names, residences and occupations of all parties who gave evidence before the Fees Commission.

Sir Oliver Mowat, in reply, stated that this information was in many cases included in the report; but in some instances no note had been made of the residences and occupations of witnesses, and he did not know how these particulars could be obtained except by correspondence, which, he thought, was hardly worth while. He presumed the motion had been made under the idea that the information was in the possession of the Government. Mr. Kerns contended that it was most important they should know the residence and occupation of the witnesses in order that they might know how much weight to attach to their evidence. He understood that they principally resided in the cities.

Hon. Mr. Gibson said that in nearly every case the evidence indicated the locality and occupation.

Mr. Howland thought it a matter of observation that no deputy-registrars had been called, to which Sir Oliver replied that no deputy-registrar had presented himself for examination, and no one had suggested that they should give evidence.

At the request of the Attorney-General Mr. Kerns withdrew his motion.

Replying to Col. Matheson, the Provincial Secretary said that in 1894 the average cost per 100 pounds, live weight, including expenses of purchase and delivery of the cattle bought by the Government agent, for the public institutions, was $3.57, and the average cost per head of cattle was $36.89.

On the motion of Mr. Gibson (Huron) the House ordered a return showing the municipal indebtedness of the province up to Dec. 31, 1893; how much on account of roads and bridges, railway bonuses, aid to manufactures by way of bonus, municipal waterworks, waterworks belonging to companies, gas and electricity, High and Public schools and other purposes.

Mr. Gibson thought it was most desirable to learn the reason why municipalities were running so much into debt. Taxation was, he said, increasing at such a rate it was time to call a halt, and he condemned the system of granting bonuses and exemptions to manufacturers. He blamed Toronto for showing a bad example in this latter respect.

At the suggestion of Mr. Howland, it was decided to include in the return the debenture debt for local improvements of municipalities.

Mr. Hardy brought in a bill respecting railway lands, providing that the Lieutenant-Governor in Council may withdraw from the operation of the act respecting aid to railways the lands set apart by that act to form a fund for payment of the aid granted and made upon the lands for settlement.

Mr. Harcourt introduced a bill to amend the Municipal Act, extending the powers now conferred upon cities or towns with regard to constructing drainage works as local improvements, upon the recommendation of a Local Board of Health, to incorporated villages.

Mr. Cleland brought in a bill to amend the act respecting Houses of Refuge, to enable municipalities to establish such institutions upon farms of 10 acres, instead of 45 acres, in order to enable them to share in the grant made in the act passed in 1890.

Mr. Gibson (Huron) introduced a bill to amend the Public Parks Act, by conferring powers with regard to the construction of parks upon the trustees of police villages.

Mr. Evanturel introduced a bill giving incorporated villages, having a territorial extent of 2000 acres, the same powers as are possessed by townships with regard to passing bylaws relating to statute labor.

Mr. Howland introduced the bill of the Toronto City Council providing that the municipal election shall be held on Jan. 1, instead of the first Monday in January in each year; empowering police officers to enter public buildings and remove obstructions in the aisles; authorizing the council of a municipality to license, regulate and govern riders of bicycles; permitting the establishment of an official benefit fund for civic employes and other minor purposes.

Mr. Haycock introduced the bill prohibiting members of the House to accept a free pass from any transportation company.

These bills were read a second time: To amend the Municipal Act—Mr. Haycock and Mr. Wood; to enable the corporation of the town of Port Hope to issue debentures for High school purposes—Mr. Fallis; to authorize the corporation of the city of Brantford to sell a part of Mount Hope Cemetery—Mr. Hardy; to enable Herbert Stanley Reynolds to practice dentistry—Mr. Caven; to incorporate the village of Bridgeburg—Mr. German; respecting the town of Gananoque—Mr. Awrey.

Hon. Mr. Harcourt has given notice of a bill to amend the Public Health Act, modifying the method of appointment to local boards of health with a view to greater permanency in the membership of the boards. The bill also amends the clause governing the appointment of county health officers to secure the undivided services of such men as are appointed, at a reasonable remuneration, and aims at preventing the feeding of refuse, offal, etc., for fattening animals for the market.

The Attorney-General will bring in a bill to make further provision against transfers in fraud of creditors.

Three petitions have been received against the Patrons medical bill. These are from the Toronto Medical Society, Toronto Clinical Society and the staff of the Victoria Hospital.

SETTLEMENT OF SEALERS' CLAIMS.

Sir C. H. Tupper to Visit Washington and Consult Sir Julian Pauncefote Re Arbitration.

Washington, March 26.—Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper, the Canadian Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and the other gentlemen who will accompany him to Washington will probably not arrive until the middle of next month. The purpose of their visit, as has been announced, is that they may be consulted by the British Ambassador, Sir Julian Pauncefote, in the preparation of a treaty looking to the formation of a commission to consider the claims of the Canadian sealers against the United States under the findings of the Paris Tribunal. The Canadians will take no part in the drawing of the treaty, but in view of the direct interest which Canada has in the matter it was thought well by Her Majesty's Government that they should be consulted as to the phraseology and spirit of the treaty, which result could be more expeditiously gained by Sir Charles H. Tupper being in Washington than if the conclusions reached were subject to a correspondence between himself and Sir Julian. The Canadians will remain about one week, at the end of which time it is thought the treaty will have been agreed upon by Secretary Gresham and the British Ambassador.

Meanwhile the British Government is still hopeful that when Congress meets the appropriation of $425,000 will be speedily passed with a view to compensating the Canadian sealers for the losses sustained by them. If not, then the treaty will be sent to the Senate for ratification. The British Government argues that these claims are not for prospective profits and ought not to be so considered. The vessels, they contend, represented a certain earning capacity and when they were seized or driven out of the only business for which they were adapted the result was a distinct loss to their owners. It is known that the claim originally aggregated $700,000, but that, agreeably, to an understanding between Secretary Gresham and Sir Julian, a compromise of $425,000 was reached.

Some doubt is expressed here as to the correctness of the report that Lord Rosebery has promised the Canadians that the British Government will advance this amount to its Canadian subjects and look to the United States for a reimbursement. No such information has reached here.

True Bill Against Marquis of Queensberry.

London, March 26.—In the Old Bailey to-day the Recorder, Sir Charles Hall, in charging the grand jury, referred to the libel proceedings instituted by Oscar Wilde against the Marquis of Queensberry. He said that if the Marquis wrote the words which it is claimed he did, upon the card produced, whether he was justified or not in so doing, it constituted a libel. Moreover, the Recorder added, the defendant intended to plead justification as his defence. The grand jury eventually returned a true bill against the Marquis.

Washington, March 26.—According to statements made at the State Department no official information has been received concerning the case of ex-Consul Waller, convicted and sentenced for complicity in the plot to overthrow the French in Madagascar. This lack of advices is considered as very strange, and cannot be accounted for. The nearest cable office is on the Island of Mauritius, and is held by the British, so that there is practically no ground for suspecting that the French Government is purposely preventing any of our consular officers from communicating with the State Department. While the case is by no means so likely to lead to serious results as the other matters concerning foreign affairs which confront the State Department, yet the United States Government will not let it pass without making a determined stand for the principle that no United States citizen shall be tried by a military court in a foreign country unless captured while actually engaged in insurrection with arms in hands.

BELLEVILLE, TUESDAY, MAR. 26.

TESTIMONY OF MR. MACKENZIE.

Comparisons of the speeches of the leaders of the Opposition made twenty years ago with their present line of action reveals, says the Ottawa Citizen, the wide change that has taken place in their views during the interval. The opinions they gave utterance to at that time are in sharp contrast to those they hold to-day. There is another comparison, however, which is equally striking and equally as suggestive. Sir Richard and his friends have recently displayed a sneaking affection for unrestricted reciprocity, that old and exploded fad which bore him and his party to defeat in 1891. As everybody knows, the project was subjected to a masterly analysis by Mr. Blake, whose opinion of its danger to the independence of Canada on this continent and to her national future was such that he deemed it of sufficient importance to warrant his severance from the party of which he had long been the most eminent leader. Mr. Blake's destructive attack has been quoted time and again, but less attention has been given to an expression of the Hon. Alexander Mackanzie upon the subject of commercial union. It is true that there is a theoretical distinction between commercial union and unrestricted reciprocity, but as Mr. Blake pointed out, the latter leads logically and with certainty to the former.

In a letter to Lord Dufferin on Oct. 9th, 1878, Mr. Mackenzie said: "Attempts more or less direct have been frequently made in the United States to enlist the sympathy and co-operation of Canada in a policy which would soon extinguish British influence on this continent. Any action which will to any extent assimilate the commercial system of Canada to that of the United States, will to that extent weaken the ties which bind her to the Empire, and which it was the aim of my administration to strengthen. We already find that the advocates of a customs union, or Zollverein, in the United States (which system really means a political alliance with that country) are greatly encouraged by the result of the elections."

The passage quoted strengthens and confirms the estimate formed by Mr. Blake of the policy which his friends adopted on the suggestion of Wiman, Hitt, and others. The best answer to those who urge such a change in our trade relations is furnished by their own leaders.

The demand for Dr. Price's Baking Powder on the Pacific Coast has more than doubled since it received the highest award and gold medal at the Midwinter Fair.

EDITORIAL BREVITIES.

The effect upon the country of Mr. Laurier's declaration in favor of "Free Trade as it is in England" has been so discouraging that all the organs of his party—from the Globe down to the Belleville Ontario—have joined in a howl of repudiation.

The Globe is trying to lead its party on the Manitoba School question. As a leader the Globe has not been a success. Some years ago it tried to force Free Trade upon its party, but the Woodstock Sentinel-Review and several others of its Reform confereres gave the chief organ such a drubbing that it was forced to drop it very quickly.

With a leader whose utterances they are obliged to repudiate and an organ which is trying to usurp the functions pertaining to the leader, the Grit party are in a bad shape—but not worse than they deserve to be in.

GRITS' BROKEN PROMISES.

MESSRS. GREENWAY AND MARTIN ARE RESPONSIBLE.

They Pledged their Word Not to Interfere With the Catholic Schools—Affidavits Made by Reputable Witnesses on the Subject—Mr. Joseph Martin's Public Statements — Conservatives and Liberals Testify as to the Truth —Premier Greenway Visits Archbishop Tache.

OTTAWA, March 24.—Some interesting documents have just been issued from the Government press. They throw a curious light upon the early history of the school question with which Mr. Greenway and the Liberal leaders in Manitoba are now troubling Canada. For whatever injustice has been done by Manitoba two persons are mainly responsible; they are Mr. Thomas Greenway, who was the head of the Government which initiated the Act of 1890, and Mr. Joseph Martin, M. P., the author and finisher of the same. Now that these two gentlemen have the highest legal authority in the realm in support of the declaration that to some extent, at all events, a wrong has, at their instigation, been done, everyone is asking whether they will allow the province to right it or exert themselves to prevent a remedy. Already it is declared on their behalf that, by the recent order-in-Council, the rights of Manitoba have been invaded by the Dominion, and the province is urged to resist the indignity. Wherein have any rights been invaded? The question, it is true, has been relegated to those to whom it primarily belongs. But this does not coerce Manitoba. It merely conveys to it the judgment of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. If anyone thinks the Government could have refused to do so, let them read this declaration, which accompanies the report of the Privy Council: "And her Majesty, at court at Osborne house, in the Isle of Wight, on the 2nd day of February, 1895, after taking the said report into consideration, was pleased, by and with the advice of her Majesty's Privy Council, to approve of the said report of the Lords of committee, and to order that the recommendations and directions therein contained be punctually observed, obeyed, and carried into effect, in each and every particular, whereof the Governor-General for the Dominion of Canada for the time being, and all other persons whom it may concern, are required to take notice and govern themselves accordingly." The Government of Canada has taken notice and governed itself accordingly, in order that, as directed, "the recommendations and directions therein contained be punctually observed and carried into effect" by Manitoba. It is of importance in this connection to know the measure of respect which those who denounce this as an invasion of rights, have for the rights of others and the pledges they have solemnly made. This is a point touching which the sworn evidence is now for the first time put before the country in its present complete shape.

MR. MARTIN'S PLEDGE.

The promises given by Mr. Joseph Martin, M. P., are dealt with in several affidavits. The story goes back as far as 1886, when a bye-election, which was to decide the fate of the Norquay Government, took place. At that time it was charged that the Liberal candidate was anti-Catholic. Mr. Joseph Martin was called in to deny the rumor. Mr. James Fisher, who at the time was the President of the Liberal party in Manitoba, testified as to what took place. He swears as follows: "At the request of Mr. Joseph Martin, I attended a meeting with him at the Roman Catholic school house on the evening before election day. Our special object in attending there was to meet this particular charge as to the attitude of the Liberals towards those particular privileges of the French and Roman Catholic population. Mr. Martin then delivered a strong address to the meeting, in which he characterized these allegations as to the attitude of the Liberals as being utterly without foundation; he declared in the most positive terms that the Liberals had no thought of interfering with these institutions, and made a positive declaration that if they attained office they would not do so."

The next evidence is that of Mr. A. F. Martin, who was the Liberal organizer in the election, He said: "I found during the campaign that I was being constantly met with the assertion that the Liberal party was opposed to the further continuance of the Catholic Schools and the use of the French language, and I thought it was necessary that in a public way assurance should be given of undoubted character to the electors." He called two meetings, and adds: "I asked Mr. Joseph Martin, who was one of the prominent members of the Liberal party, to be present at both meetings, and to give assurances which I thought were necessary, as above mentioned. He made upon each occasion a strong address to the meeting, in which he characterized the allegations as to the attitude of the Liberals upon the questions aforesaid as being utterly without foundation. He declared in the most positive terms that the Liberals had no thought of interfering with those institutions; and made a positive declaration that if they attained office they would not do so, and said that if Liberals did such a thing he would leave the Liberal party forever."

The man who carried the Liberal banner in the election was Mr. F. H. Francis. He has written a letter confirming the statement regarding Mr. Martin's pledges, and adding that but for those pledges he could not have been elected. In addition to this there is an affidavit by Mr. Joseph Burke, the defeated Conservative candidate, to the effect that Mr. Martin made the promises he is asserted to have made. These are sustained by the affidavits of six electors to the same effect.

So that, as far as Mr. Joseph Martin is concerned, the charge that he bound himself solemnly and openly not to lay hands on the Separate schools of Manitoba is abundantly established. Now, as to the first Liberal of the province, Premier Greenway.

MR. GREENWAY'S PROMISE.

Two affidavits that have been printed bear upon the promise made by Mr. Thomas Greenway. One is by the Rev. Father Allard, Vicar-General of the Diocese of St. Boniface. Its most important parts are as follows:—

"I was during all the year of our Lord 1888 the Vicar-General of the said archdiocese of St. Boniface, having my residence in the Episcopal residence at St. Boniface.

"I distinctly remember that during the early part of the said year of our Lord 1888 the Hon. Thomas Greenway, with whom I was not then personally acquainted, called at the said Episcopal residence in St. Boniface in company with Mr. W. F. Alloway, whom I personally knew, and the said Mr. Alloway then introduced the said Hon. Thos. Greenway to me, and the said Mr. Greenway then stated to me that he had called to see his Grace the Archbishop personally, touching a confidential matter. His Grace was then sick and confined to his bed, and I so informed the said Mr. Greenway, and stated to him that as the Vicar-General of his Grace I could receive any confidential communications and communicate the same to his Grace, and I then assured him that he could rely upon my discretion in any confidential communication that he wished to make, and that his Grace the Archbishop would also respect his confidence. The Hon. Mr. Greenway then stated to me that he had been called to form a new Government in the province, and that he was desirous to strengthen it by taking into his Cabinet one of the French members of the Legislature who would be agreeable to the Archbishop, whereupon I remarked that I did not think that his Grace would favor any French member joining the new Administration unconditionally, and without any previous understanding as to certain questions of great importance to his Grace. Mr. Greenway replied that he had already talked the matter over with his friends, and that he, Mr. Greenway, was quite willing to guarantee under his Government the maintenance of the then existing condition of matters with regard to Separate Catholic Schools, to the official use of the French language, and to the French electoral divisions. I received the assurances of the said Hon. Thomas Greenway as above stated to me, and I promised him that I would convey the same to his Grace the Archbishop, and I further told him that I believed his assurances so made would give great satisfaction to his Grace."

The affidavit goes on to state that Father Allard communicated the statements of Mr. Greenway to Archbishop Tache, with whose approval they met. The following morning he met Mr. Greenway again in the office of Mr. W. F. Alloway, when the Premier received the assurances of his Grace and repeated his pledge not to interfere with the Separate Schools. The result of this negotiation was the entrance of Mr. Prendergast into the Cabinet with the approval of his Grace.

This affidavit is sustained by another, made by William Forbes Alloway, banker, of Winnipeg, who was present at both the interviews. The questions talked over were, says Mr. Alloway, the school question, the official use of the French language and the French electoral divisions: "Upon all these questions Mr. Greenway assured the Vicar-General, in my presence, that his Government was prepared to uphold the position of the Roman Catholic section of the population, and that they would neither interfere with the Separate Schools nor the use of the French language as an official language, or lessen the number of French electoral divisions." At the second interview Mr. Alloway was also present the greater part of the time and he says concerning it:—"There is no doubt whatever that the promises and pledges of the previous day were substantially repeated, and that there was a perfect understanding between Mr. Greenway and the Vicar-General, as representing the Archbishop, that Mr. Greenway's Government would respect and maintain the position of the Roman Catholic party upon all these questions."

This is the evidence concerning Mr. Greenway's pledge. It has been denied by him, and the public has to judge whether more weight is to be attached to the simple statement of one man, or the solemnly declared affidavits of two. If such a pledge was made, and Mr. Greenway violated it, how can he decline, in the light of recent decisions and the admissions of Mr. McCarthy, to do something to right the wrong?

Detectives in Possession of an Important Clue—Said to Know Where Williams' Horse was Kept the Night of the Murder.

(Toronto Star.)

The appearance of Walker at the Museo last week revived a certain amount of interest, and created some talk about the Williams' murder.

There are some people who profess to believe MacWherrell an innocent man, unjustly convicted, and serving a life sentence for a crime he never committed. The doubters base their theory on the fact that the Crown at the trial failed to prove where the horse and rig had been stabled on the night of the murder.

A great many scoffed at the evidence of P. C. Cross, who swore that he saw two men driving a rig going east on College street, which corresponded to the description of the missing "coltie," and the sleigh.

The detective department is in possesion of facts which they claim proves the rig was left at Sheppard's livery stable, College street, by two men the night of the crime.

The question is, who was the other man?

Mr. Weeks' Last Night Meeting.

Rev. W. W. Weeks held another of his very interesting services in the Y.M.C.A. rooms last evening. His address was based on the text 1 Kings,, II. 2: "Be thou strong therefore, and show thyself a man." Those words, he said, were used by David to Solomon's son, who was called to fill his father's place in the kingdom, and such advice can be applied to us to-day. The true qualities of manhood are only to be found in Christ, who took upon himself the title of the Son of Man. Solomon was called to a kingdom—and so the men of the present day are called to a kingdom, of which their opportunities are the subjects. He was called to build a temple, and the christian is the temple of the Holy Ghost. A man is either indwelt by the Spirit of God or the spirit of evil. The marks of true manhood are intelligence, self-sacrifice, faith and courage. Every man shows intelligence by being a christian. Self-sacrifice is the idea of giving up all to follow Christ. Everyone has faith of some kind. A man either believes in the devil's lies or God's truth. The courage of our convictions is what is wanted by men of to-day. A man is not afraid to be a sinner among sinners before God, and why should he be afraid to be a christian among christians before the devil? The address of last evening was conceded by all who heard it to be the best he has yet given. At the after meeting Mr. Weeks made a statement of his belief, on which point he has either been misunderstood or misrepresented. His explanation was quite satisfactory to all classes present.

At a meeting of the Committee of the Western section of the Dairymen's Association of Eastern Ontario, composed of T. B. Carlaw, Warkworth; E. J. Madden, Newburgh and Jas. Whitton, Wellman's Corners, held here to-day, George Bensley was appointed Inspector for Napanee and Kingston District and W. W. Grant for the Belleville and Peterborough District.

It was ordered that each Inspector send in to the Chairman of the different districts a report of work done every two weeks. E. J. Madden is Chairman of the Napanee and Kingston district and T. B. Carlaw, Chairman of the district west of Napanee.

It was also ordered that when the Inspectors find any adulterations of milk it shall be their duty to go and see the cows milked and report to the Presidents of the factories.

Science Triumphant at Last.

Miller's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil is the outcome of the latest scientific researches. There was always a prejudice against taking Cod Liver Oil on account of its disagreeable to the palate, and that is one reason why it has become so popular with the medical fraternity, the hospitals of the country and the households wherever consumption or lung troubles prevail. Miller's Emulsion is the great nerve strengthener and blood maker, and cures Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis, Scrofula and all Lung affections. In Big Bottles, 50c. and $1, at all Drug Stores.

Like Lightning.

The rapid action of the "great pain cure," Polson's Nerviline, in relieving the most intense pain, is a matter of wonder to all who have used it. There is nothing surprising in its results, for it is made of the strongest, purest and most efficient remedies known in medicine. Nerviline cures toothache instantly; cramps in five minutes; neuralgia after two applications; rheumatism is at once relieved by its use; and the same may be said of all kinds of pain. Sample bottles costing only 10 cents at any drug store. The large bottles only 25 cents. Polson's Nerviline sold by druggists and country dealers.

—Twelve Japanese warships made a concerted attack, on Saturday, upon the forts north of Makong, Pescadores. The firing began at 12 o'clock and lasted until 2 o'clock in the afternoon. The warships then withdrew, but renewed the attack on Sunday. The result is not yet known.

THE ORDER RECEIVED.

Manitoba May Make a Compromise Offer.

TO SECULARIZE ITS SCHOOL SYSTEM

Premier Greenway Hints at a Commission and Dissolution—The Order Will Be Discussed in the Legislature on Thursday—Mr. Patterson's Appointment.

Winnipeg, March 26.—The Remedial Order passed by the Dominion Privy Council on the Manitoba school question was received by Lieut.-Governor Schultz yesterday. It will be transmitted to the Legislature during to-day's session, and will be then laid on the table, after being first read by the Speaker of the House. As 48 hours' notice must be given of intended action, it is at present likely that the discussion on the question will open on Thursday evening. It is said there is some likelihood of the matter being handed over to a commission, to report at the next session.

Premier Greenway, being interviewed as to what course would be followed, intimated, but did not say so positively, that action might be delayed, and the Provincial Government go to the country on the question. It is very generally believed that the Premier and his Cabinet contemplate dissolution.

The Remedial Order continues to be the sole topic of conversation in Winnipeg. The papers continue to fill their columns with interviews with prominent public men on the important question. Some of these are fiery and declare there shall be no surrender, but others urge moderation, and appeal for compromise in order to avoid serious trouble. The appeals of such men as Hugh John Macdonald and E. L. Drewry for calm and dispassionate consideration are having good effect. Yesterday there was a hint from a supporter of the Government that the answer to be returned to Ottawa will contain an option of purely secular schools. An effort was made to ascertain if members of the Government authorized the statement, but all positively declined to speak till the matter was discussed in the House.

The appointment of Hon. Mr. Patterson as Governor of Manitoba is a great surprise to the people here, who were confident that Mr. Scarth or some other local man would get the position. The Free Press is the only Winnipeg paper, however, that editorially comments on the appointment. It urges the Government to reconsider the matter. The latest rumor in this connection is that Mr. Scarth will be appointed postoffice inspector or collector of customs at Winnipeg, the present collector, Col. Scott, to be superannuated.

South Grey Conservatives Delay Action.

Durham, Ont., March 26.—The Conservative convention for South Grey, held here yesterday was owing to the almost impassable state of the roads, very poorly attended, and in consequence they decided not to bring out a candidate until some future date.

ATTEMPTED MURDER BY FIRE

Deliberate Attempt to Burn Alive a Wealthy Kansan.

Wichita, Kas., March 26.—An attempt was made yesterday morning to burn alive Fritz Schenitzler, one of the wealthiest men in this city. Mr. Schenitzler's family is away visiting, and he was alone in the house and slept upstairs. Every hallway leading from his room was saturated with coal oil and set on fire. The keyhole of the fire alarm box for that precinct was plugged, so that no alarm could be turned in. Fortunately a railroad man saw the fire, broke open the alarm box and brought out the fire department, Schenitzler, who weighs more than 400 pounds, was not able to escape, but two of the firemen ran through the blaze and carried him out. All three men were badly burned.

Steamship Engineer Fatally Scalded

Southampton, March 26.—Engineer Furquhar of the steamship Berlin, who was terribly scalded on board the ship previous to her sailing for New York on Saturday, died to-day from his injuries.

MAY BE CHARGED WITH MURDER.

The Diamond Swindler Is Wanted for a More Serious Offence Than That Alleged Against Him.

Toronto, March 26.—Tobias Hutton, the alleged diamond thief of continental fame, appeared in Police Court yesterday morning to answer to the charge of fraud and false pretences which had been registered against him. Out of nearly a dozen aliases read over to him by Magistrate Denison from circulars which had been sent during last week, he chose the name of Hutton as the one he liked best. He declined to elect or plead until he had consulted his counsel, Mr. E. F. B. Johnston, who entered court as the prisoner's name was called.

An adjournment was asked and granted till Thursday. Mr. Johnston requested an order of the court for $157 found in the prisoner's possession at the time of his arrest. Sergeant Reburn objected to the order on the ground of it being the proceeds of stolen goods. It was represented that Hutton's wife and child were in the city devoid of means, and Col. Denison gave an order for one-half the money to be handed over to the prisoner's counsel, to be devoted to his defence and the provision of necesarie for his wife and child.

Inspector Stark was deluged yesterday with queries from American cities, asking for the prisoner. All doubt as to the prisoner being the party who swindled the Southern jewelers has been removed by the arrival of two photographs from Atlanta, Ga.

Macon, Atlanta, Savannah and Augusta, Ga.; Nashville, Tenn.; Kansas City and St. Louis, Mo., are some of the cities where his game was operated, and whose police yesterday wired Inspector Stark their willingness to deal with him. The Southern Express Company, the Wells, Fargo Express Company and the Pinkerton Detective Agency would also like possession of him. From the latter organization a brief outline of the man's previous career came. According to their despatches, his real name is Abraham Rothchild. His home is in Philadelphia, and before he entered upon his present course of life he was drummer for a leading firm of the Quaker City. The despatches also state that in the year 1880 Rothchild robbed and murdered his mistress, Bessie Moore, with whom he was then living at Marshall, Texas.

When in the police dock yesterday Rothchild said he thought the present charge was only a blind, and signified his intention of fighting to the last any extradition proceedings which might be taken.

MAN AND WIFE JAILED.

Fined and Imprisoned for Brutally Ill-Treating a Child.

Hepworth, Ont., March 26.—The trial of L. W. Henderson and wife, charged with stringing up a 13-year-old girl and brutally beating her, was concluded yesterday. They were each sentenced to pay a fine of $50 and costs and serve three months in jail.

PAWNED 30 TYPEWRITERS.

How a Buffalo Swindler Got Away With $900.

Buffalo, March 26.—Herbert Northrup, a young man who has figured prominently in a number of shady transactions for the past two years, has fled from the city to evade arrest for swindling the Smith Typewriter Co. out of $900. Last Saturday Northrup contracted for 30 typewriting machines, to be paid for in instalments. They were delivered to his office and he at once proceeded to pawn them, realizing $30 on each machine, and then left town with the proceeds

GIVEN UP TO DIE.

DOCTORS THOUGHT THERE WAS NO HOPE.

A Brantford Ont., Lady Says: "I Owe My Life to Paine's Celery Compound.

The Great Spring Medicine Always Saves and Cures.

Concise and brief is the letter that comes from Mrs. Currier, of Bradford, Ont. It comes from one who was near the gates of death, and whose gratitude and thankfulness are strong and sincere for rescue and deliverance.

Sickness for over a year, attended with pleurisy and inflammation, placed Mrs. Currier's life in jeopardy; indeed, the doctors pronounced her case hopeless, and said she would die.

Friends urged the use of Paine's Celery Compound. Mrs. Currier used the medicine, and to-day enjoys the blessings of sound health.

This remarkable cure proves conclusively that Paine's Celery Compound is as much superior to the ordinary physicians' remedies as the diamond is to cheap glass.

At no season of the year does Paine's Celery Compound show its healing virtues to better advantage than in the Spring time. It banishes disease, purifies the blood, enriches and strengthens the system, and adds to one's life. Mrs. Currier says:—

"I take great pleasure in sending you a testimonial for Paine's Celery Compound; I certainly owe my life to it. I may state that I was sick over a year with pleurisy and inflammation, and given up to die by three doctors and all my friends, when I was recommended to try Paine's Celery Compound. After using seven bottles of the wonderful medicine, I am all right again."

MOTHERS

Should Know all About What They Use For Bady.

Every mother should know something about the composition of the food that her baby is fed on from day to day. Many prepared foods now sold are vile preparations, and soon bring on serious digestive derangements.

Lactated Food is not a secret preparation. It is prepared in the most careful manner from the nourishing elements of wheat and barley, properly combined with pure sugar of milk. It is nourishing, strengthening and life-giving, and by its use thousands of children have grown from weak and puny babes to healthy, happy and hearty boys and girls.

"Eudora," is the name of the new black dress fabric put upon the market by the Priestley's, whose famous dress goods are a household word all over the world. It is like their much esteemed Henrietta cloths; indeed, it has all their merits, and a few things which they lack. It is made in black only, it is a perfect dust shedder; has extra weight and width; and, fitting easily and draping gracefully it gives a distinction to the wearer which all of Priestley's goods confer. This is their excellence, which sets them apart from all other goods. Wrapped on "The Varnished Board," and Priestley's name stamped on every five yards.

The Auditors' report was read and referred to the Executive Committee with the exception of one clause, which was referred to the Market Committee.

Sir Mackenzie Bowell's letter thanking the Mayor and Council for the demonstration tendered him on the 12th inst., as already published in these columns, was read.

Ald. Yeomans said it must be pleasing and satisfactory to every member of the Council to receive this acknowledgment from Sir Mackenzie Bowell.

The Mayor introduced a deputation consisting of Messrs. J. M. Hurley, John Johnston and T. H. B. Purdy, from the West Hastings Agricultural Society to ask for assistance. He understood that the Society proposed, beside their fall show, to start a monthly horse and cattle show. As this city was the hub of four of the most fertile counties in the Province, it was very important that we have a show and he recommended them to the members of the Council.

Ald. Yeomans, in moving that the deputation be heard, made some remarks explanatory of what the deputation wanted.

THE W. H. A. S. DEPUTATION.

Mr. J. M. Hurley was the first speaker of the deputation. He said two years they had no show, but they drew the Government grant of $800 and paid the Horticultural Society and the Sidney Agricultural Society their shares and had $500 left. Last year they drew $800 again and they started out with a prize list of $1,300. The show, owing to bad weather, was not well attended, but they had paid all the prize list and all expenses. This year the Society would like to give a four days' show and put up a list of at least $2,000. They already have subscribed about $500 and with the $800 Government grant they had $1,300. It was now for the city to say whether or not they would have a show this year. There will be a show of dairy products and appliance held in Eastern Ontario and either Kingston or Belleville would get it. He thought the Council should send a deputation to urge this city's claim at the Agriculture and Arts Association at Toronto on April 18th. He thought if they worked together they could have a good show.

Mr. John Johnston was the next speaker. Last year the West Hastings show paid a little over $1500 in prizes. The citizens had helped well in the show, but they did not care to start again this year till they had an assured sum. They could not hold a show unless they got a grant, and he hoped the Council would help them. The first day last fall they took in $72, the second day $800, and the third day $125.

Ald. Robinson thought the Society should ask the County Council for assistance.

Ald. Falkiner said the deputation wanted immediate assistance and could not wait till June.

Ald. Yeomans said he was sure all had been pleased to hear the deputation and he assured the gentlemen that the question would receive the careful consideration of the Council at an early date. He thought if the County Council would give a grant of about $500 he felt sure the city would supplement it by an equal sum. The interests of the farming community were being pressed at the present day, to the detriment of the cities, and now the Patrons of Industry were endeavoring to pass a bill to do away with fees on our markets, which would materially affect our finances.

THE HOSPITAL DEPUTATION.

The following deputation, representing the Hospital and Advisory Board, were introduced: Mrs. Clarke, Mrs. Tannahill, Miss Eppes, Mrs. Yeomans, Mrs. Thos. Stewart, Mrs. R. J. Bell, Mrs. St. Charles, Mrs. M. W. Maclean, Mrs. Denmark.

Advisory Board—Messrs. John Bell, A. G. Northrup, Robt. Richardson, J. J. B. Flint, J. L. Biggar and W. Hamilton.

The Mayor said the ladies of this association had been doing a noble work and at a saving of about $1500 on what it used to cost the Council. He recommended the deputation to the very best consideration of the Council.

Mr. J. J. B. Flint read the following petition:

To His Worship, the Mayor and Aldermen of the City of Belleville.

GENTLEMEN,—In the year 1884 your honorable body, the County Council and a number of benevolent citizens assisted by their contributions in erection of the buildings, which are now used as a Home for the Friendless and a General Hospital. The buildings were furnished as the requirements demanded and have been constantly in use for the purposes of the city and the surrounding country. The furnishings with which we began, though in many respects unsuitable for hospital purposes, were the best we could afford. Through the continued efforts of the W.C.A., which have been seconded by many kind friends, these have been replaced by the best and most modern equipments, and the Inspector of Prisons and Public Charities now pronounces our hospital one of the most perfectly equipped and best conducted in the province.

Not alone have the occupants had the thoughtful attention of our Board of Managers and of our Lady Superintendent and nurses, but also of the Hospital staff, which is composed of physicians in our city and who have been constant and untiring in their attendance.

The demands upon our building have been steadily increasing, until our Medical Board now demand that increased accommodation be given.

It can easily be understood that in our efforts to improve the furnishings and sustain the work in its greatest efficiency, it has required all the funds which we could command. Some bequests, however, have come to us especially intended for building purposes. These amount to $1,412.80.

In addition to this a special effort is at present being made by the Association through what is called the Talent Fund, to add to the amount in hand from these bequests.

We have found it necessary to provide an ambulance at an estimated cost of from $400 to $500 for the proper conveyance of patients to the hospital.

This work is in progress at the present time, but is distinct from that of the proposed addition and improvements of the buildings, and towards which we do not intend to appropriate the money which is now on hand for building purposes on that for which we are now making an appeal.

To your honorable body, the County Council, and the friends who originally helped in this good work, as well as the citizens generally, we now have to make application to assist in the extension and improvements which are considered necessary by our Medical Board and which will cost about $7,000.

We feel we have special claims for consideration from your honorable body.

When the poor of the city were looked after by a committee appointed by your Council, it cost for twelve years, preceding the time when The Women's Christian Association undertook this department of their work, as shown by your audited accounts, $25,322.01. For the twelve years since that time the cost to the city has been $18,500. If interest be calculated at the rate the city has paid upon their debentures this will show a saving of $10,197.17 that has been effected by the work of the W. C. A.

In addition to the care and comfort which is given to the city poor and which under our management has been better than previously, this part of our community now have medical treatment, nursing and medicines which they could not have had previously to the erection of the Hospital and Home for the Friendless. This care and attention has been constantly given by the Association at a cost of considerably more than they receive from the city for the same. The money which we now ask you to grant us, as well as that we raise from other sources, will all be expended in permanent improvements and will go into the hands of the mechanics and laborers of the city.

We appeal to you for a grant of $1,000, to be given as the work proceeds during the present year, and in duty bound, we, your petitioners, will always pray.

On behalf of The Women's Christian Association,

I have the honor to be
M. H. CLARKE,
President.

Mr. John Bell, Q.C., said the Hospital and Home belonged to the city. When the city was first surveyed, the hospital lot on Hotel St. had been set aside for a hospital, but owing to its unsuitability the Government allowed the old lot to be sold, and the proceeds, some $5,000, applied to the purchase of the present site. The full design of the present building had not been carried out, as there was one wing yet to be built. The building and equipment had cost over $20,000. Aside from the benefit the Hospital and Home have been as places for the sick and a retreat for the friendless, a training school for nurses had been established, which had proved its efficiency. He thought if the Council could give $1,000 towards these necessary improvements, it would be the best investment they could make.

Ald. Falkiner suggested that Mr. Bell ask the County Council for a grant.

Mr. Bell replied that the institution belonged to the city and the Home was expressly for the city poor.

Mr. Robt. Richardson spoke briefly, presenting his side of the plea for assistance. He was sure if the aldermen could see the hospital and equipment they would feel more of an interest in the work, and more like contributing towards these improvements. He hoped the Council would not divide the sum asked for.

Ald. Yeomans said the immediate necessity of this addition should be made clear to the Council.

Mrs. M. W. Maclean said she was sorry to hear that the city was so poor, but if the the ladies had not helped them they would have been $10,000 poorer off to-day. The patients from outside the city who are treated in the hospital are paid for by the municipality from which they come. She said before the Home was founded a young man, a stranger, had died while being moved about our Christian city, but she was pleased to say such a thing would never occur again.

Mr. A. G. Northrup spoke briefly and hoped the Council would not hesitate in making the grant asked for.

Dr. Gibson said it gave him much pleasure to support the appeal of the ladies. He thought if he had the members of the Council at the hospital for two hours he could better demonstrate to them the necessity for these improvements. Owing to the lack of space it was difficult to classify the diseases. For instance, it was not well to have a consumptive patient in the same room with other patients. A convalescent room was also needed, both for men and women. The private wards are frequently all filled, and patients have been refused admittance in several instances. There should also be a bath room for private patients and one for the nurses. There should also be a room for special operative work. They already had a good surgery, as good as any in the province, but some operations cannot be performed here. As already mentioned an elevator was greatly needed. A new system of heating was also required to keep a uniform temperature. He thought that the sum asked was not out of the way.

Mr. J. J. B. Flint also spoke. He had ample opportunity in his position to see the work being done by these ladies. He was sure there would have been a great deal more pauperism had it not been for the watchfulness of these ladies. This was a matter that interested them all and he hoped they would see their way clear to make this small grant.

In answer to a question from Ald. Yeomans, Mr. Bell said all doctors in the city had the same right as to taking patients to the hospital, whether they are on the medical board or not.

Ald. Yeomans assured the ladies and gentlemen that their case was an exceptionally strong one and had been very ably presented. The ladies having saved the city $10,000 and having also given the city an asset of $20,000, to which it had only contributed $2,000, made their arguments all the stronger. He promised the attention of the Council and also that he would present a notice of motion at the present meeting in the direction asked.

The deputation retired.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES AND CONSIDERATION.

The reports of the various committees, as already published, were read and the Council went into Committee of the Whole on Reports, Ald. Luscombe in the chair.

The accounts mentioned by the Executive were passed without discussion.

The Committee also recommended that an employers' risk be placed on the men employed on the stone crusher.

Ald. Yeomans explained that men at work on the crusher were liable to accident and the city could carry these risks much cheaper than assuming the liability of accidents. The clause carried.

The Committee ordered that a little box be placed in the City Clerk's office for instructions to the City Surveyor.

In regard to the clause recommending that the tender of James Zebedee for lighting the coal oil lamps of the city there was some discussion.

Ald. Wills wanted the tenders relet, as the previous tenders had not included the keeping in repairs of the lamps.

Ald. Robinson said Mr. Zebedee's tender was the lowest, but he had a note from this gentleman, offering to keep the lamps in repair for 45 cents each and he submitted it in addition to the contract.

Ald. Falkiner at once objected to this step as being unfair to the other tenderers and said the contract would be of no worth if this addition was made, and the City Solicitor concurred in this opinion. He spoke for some length on the action of Ald. Robinson and charged him with giving away what had been divulged at the committee meeting. He held that his action in this manner was dishonorable.

Ald. Robinson said he had been out one night and out of eleven lamps he found six not lighted. He wanted a change in the lighting of the city.

Ald. Clarke, Hart, Grills and Landenberger spoke on the question.

Ald. Falkiner moved in amendment that the report be referred back and that new tenders be asked, the conditions to include the repairing of the lamps and that the tenders be not opened till they came to the committee.

Ald Doyle claimed that the keeping of the lamps in repair should be embodied in the contract for lighting and because he thought it was a very important part of the work he wished it referred back for the purpose of having the matter duly settled.

Ald. LaRoche said in his experience the cost of keeping the lamps in repair had been about $2 each per year. He was in favor of the amendment.

Just at this point the clock struck eleven and Ald. Falkiner rose and said the Council stood adjourned, according to the rules, but the Mayor ruled otherwise, notwithstanding the protest of Ald. Falkiner. After the time had been extended, Ald. Falkiner warned the Council that all business transacted by them after that hour was ultra vire.

After some further discussion Ald. Doyle moved in amendment to the amendment that the report be referred back to have the matter of maintenance of lamps duly settled.

The report of the committee was carried.

The Industrial Committee's report was laid over, as was also the report of the Special Sewerage committee.

The Market Committee recommended that the Council send a deputation to Toronto to oppose the bill to do away with market dues.

Ald. Petty didn't see the use of sending a deputation up there to talk politics.

The Mayor, City Solicitor, and Chairman of the Market Committee, were appointed a deputation for the above purpose, if necessary.

The committee of the whole rose and reported. Report received, but on motiion that it be adopted Ald. Wills moved in amendment that the report be referred back for the purpose of considering the report of the Water and Gas committee re the tenders for lighting the coal oil lights.

The amendment was defeated, and the yeas and nays resulted as follows:

YEAS:—Bogart, Doyle, Falkiner, James Gordon, Green, LaRoche, Mackie, Walker, Wills.—9.

NAYS:—Clarke, W. H. Gordon, Grills, Hart, Hay, Landenberger, Luscombe, Marshell, Petty, Robinson, Yeomans.—11.

Ald. Clarke moved in amendment to the adoption of the report that the report be not now adopted but referred back for the purpose of considering the report of the Special Sewerage Committee.

The time was again extended for one hour.

Ald. Doyle contended that the work should be proceeded with at once because if it was to be done at all, it was absolutely necessary to have it done before the street railway was laid. As to the necessity for the work itself, he said that there was no work in the city more needed. There were promises made and money appropriated for it year after and voted away for something else afterwards. The people expect that it will be done now.

Ald Clarke's amendment was lost and the yeas and nays resulted as follows:

YEAS:—Clarke, Doyle, La Roche, Luscombe, Petty, Walker, Wills.—7.

The report carried.

INQUIRIES.

Ald. Clarke asked if the Street Surveyor knew of a broken railing on one of the overhead bridges.

The Street Surveyor had not heard of it.

Ald. Hay asked if the city received any revenue from the armory in the old market building.

The City Solicitor said there was no revenue from this source.

Ald. Gordon asked if it would not be a good idea to sweep Front st.

The Street Surveyor said it would, but he had no authority to do the work.

Ald. Mackie asked that the proper authorities be notified as to keeping box cars off the crossings on Pinnacle St.

The Solicitor promised to attend to this matter.

MOTIONS.

Moved by Ald. Yeomans, seconded by Ald. Wills, that a special committee consisting of the Mayor, Ald. Doyle, James Gordon, Green, and the mover and seconder be appointed to look after the interest of the city at the time of the breaking up of the ice and they be empowered to expend not more than $50.—Carried.

Ald. Gordon moved that the street sweeper be put to work on Front St.—Carried.

Ald. Yeomans gave notice that he would at the next meeting introduce a motion to give a grant towards the enlargement of the hospital.

The Council adjourned.

The exacting test applied to Dr. Price's Baking Powder at the World's and California Midwinter Fairs resulted in it receiving the highest honors at both.

THE ICE IS DOWN.

It Came with a Rush This Afternoon—Little or no Damage.

The ice in the river, which began to break up on Sunday, and which shoved slightly yesterday, came down with a rush at 2.30 this afternoon. It was not expected that the ice would move so soon, as it was known to be very heavy and there has been but little warm weather to rot it.

Yesterday afternoon the ice below Corby's distillery gave way and came down to Canifton, where it stopped. The pressure to-day broke the whole mass loose and, as above stated, it came down and is now piled up in the mouth of the river and up to the footbridge.

When the first jam came the water raised considerably and overflowed several of the cellars and back yards on the west side of Front st., but receded as quickly as it rose. Fairman's stable at the footbridge was flooded and it was with difficulty that some of the horses were got out. The river did not overflow at the mouth as on some former occasions, but the water seems to have a sufficient outlet, showing the wisdom of the dredging done in the harbor in the past few years and the harbor improvements generally.

The INTELLIGENCER's forecast on Saturday last that there would be no flood has been verified, as the ice in the river above the distillery can do no damage when it does come. A large number of spectators hastened to the bridges and other points of vantage to watch the ice as it rushed and tumbled on its way to the bay. The sight was a grand one. The ice was very thick, and with it came debris such as booms, timber and other material that it gathered on its way. Our citizens, and especially the merchants, will breathe easier now that the danger for another year is past.

The World's Fair award to Dr. Price's Baking Powder proclaims its superiority over every other.

A NOVEL ENTERTAINMENT.

The Young Women's Guild of St. Andrew's Church are Clever Entertainers.

The announcement that the now famous Peake Sisters would give one of their very amusing and edifying entertainments in Belleville Business College, last evening, was no doubt a cause of the large attendance which greeted the Young Women's Guild of St. Andrew's Church, under whose auspices the entertainment was given. The programme opened with Jean Ingelow's "Song of Seven," in which the following took part:

Seven times one, Childhood, Helen Donald; seven times two, Romance, Nora Lazier; seven times three, Expectation, Miss Hattie Hudson; seven times four, Maternity, Miss Ethel Robertson; seven times five, Widowhood, Miss Maggie Gordon; seven times six, Giving in Marriage, Misses Maggie Gordon and Ethel Robertson; seven times seven, Longing for Home, Miss Maclean.]

This was followed by a very laughable farce entitled "An Artist's Studio," in which the following took part:

Mr. Wm. Black, Artist; Miss Ethel Robertson, Maid; Miss Ethel Robertson, Statue; Miss Maclean, An Eastern Beauty; Helen Donald, A Little Girl; Miss Eva Kent, Italian Girl.

The entertainment was brought to a close by the inimitable Peake Sisters, under the management of Mrs. Leach. The following took part: Misses Falconer, Robertson, Gibson, Ethel Robertson, Maclean, Norah Lazier, Elsie Robertson, Graham, Frankie Graham, Kelso, Lillian Kelso, Bell, Norah Bell, Maggie Wilson, Blanche Lazier.

The proceeds of the entertainment will be devoted to the fund of the Guild.

Anniversary Social.

The Bethel or Stony Lonesome Mission held anniversary services on Sunday and last evening a social and the annual meeting of the Sunday School was held. Refreshments were served by the ladies, and after the large gathering had done ample justice to the delicacies, Mr. Whitmore, of Albert College, called the meeting to order and made a short address. He presented Mrs. Marsh, Mrs. A. C. Maybee and Mrs. G. S. Johnson each with a beautiful plant from Mrs. Stapley. Mr. G. S. Johnson then took the chair. The same workers hold their respective offices as: Teachers—Bible class, Mrs. Marsh; Girls' class, Miss Nicholson; Boys' class, Miss Craig; Secretary, Miss Nicholson; Treasurer, Mrs. A. C. Maybee; Librarian, Miss Wilson. Mrs. Johnson in a few well-chosen remarks, spoke of the difficulties encountered during the last year in this work and he took occasion to thank those who had contributed to the support of the mission. After some further unimportant business the meeting broke up.

Dangers of Delay.

If we were allowed to look into the future and see the fatal consequences that follow a neglected cold, how differently would our course be; could we realize our danger, how speedily we would seek a cure; but with many it is only when the monster disease has fastened its fangs upon our lungs that we awaken to our folly. What follows a neglected cold? It is not diseases of the throat and lungs, bronchitis, asthma, consumption, and many other diseases of like nature. Is it worse than madness to neglect a cold, and it is folly not to have some good remedy available for its frequent complaint. One of the most efficacious medicines for all diseases of the throat and lungs, is Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup. This medicine is composed of several medicinal herbs, which exert a most wonderful influence in curing consumption and other diseases of the lungs and chest. It promotes a free and easy expectoration, soothes irritation and drives the disease from the system.

EIGHT MINUTES OF THREE.

A DETECTIVE STORY

Now First Published. All Rights Reserved

When Daryl came to see me the next evening I told him frankly that Mrs. Prineveau had given me a five hundred dollar retaining fee. He said he felt sure of it, and advised me to send it to Mrs. Clarkson if it hurt me.

"And who is to pay you?" I asked.

"I don't think either you or I will get any pay out of this," he replied. "But we are into it and we might as well carry it through."

"I am afraid," I said, "that we have undertaken a hopeless task. Let's divide it up."

"You find out Mrs. Prineveau's antecedents and I will find out if Mr. Prineveau wore that vest with the hole in it when he was killed. If he didn't who made the hole in it and for what purpose?"

"Rather narrow ground," I said, somewhat hopelessly.

"O, I've been on narrower and more slippery, and pulled out."

"But tell me what kind of a theory can you invent that will enable Mrs. Prineveau to kill her husband with a bullet on her left side, while she is sitting on his right?"

Daryl fell into his vacuous attitude, stretched out his legs, thrust his hands into his pockets, and choked off a yawn.

"Did you read all the testimony at the coroner's examination?" he asked.

"Yes, all of it."

"Did you notice anything peculiar in the elements of time that entered into it?"

"No, I didn't."

He pulled out of his pocket a portion of the verbatim report. "Let me read you a portion of it. This is the girl Rose Kenny's testimony:

"Q. What time was it when your master and mistress left the house to ride?"

"A. Eight minutes of three.

"Q. What makes you so particular as to the time?

"A. I heard Mrs. Prineveau call to Mr. Prineveau and that was the time just as they went out.

"Q. Wasn't there a clock in the room?

"There the question of time stops. Now listen to Mrs. Prineveau's testimony.

"Q. What time was it when the shot was fired?

"A. Five minutes past five—suddenly correcting herself—or about that.

"Does it occur to you that this particularity of time is unusual?"

"Yes; somewhat. But what is its significance?"

"This—that something may have been arranged to occur at a particular time, and Mrs. Prineveau had charged her mind with it. Here is the coachman's testimony:

"Q. Can you fix the exact time of the death of Mr. Prineveau?

"A. It was five o'clock.

"Q. Do you carry a watch?

"A. No.

"Q. Did Mrs. Prineveau have a watch with her?

"A. No, sir.

"Q. How then did you fix the time?

"A. Mrs. Prineveau looked at Mr. Prineveau's watch when we were turning into Fourth avenue and said it is five o'clock and that I must hurry.

"Now here the matter is dropped by the examination just as it is getting warm. Let's recapitulate," and Amos Daryl picked up my paper weight for illustration: "First, Mr. Prineveau carries a watch," and Amos Daryl put the weight down; "second, Mrs. Prineveau knew to a minute when they left the house." Mr. Daryl picked up the mucilage jar and placed it by the side of the paper weight; "third," and he picked up a match receiver, "she was anxious to know the exact time just before they reached the fatal spot." He put the match box down alongside the paper weight and reached for an ash receiver; "fourth, she ascertained the time by looking at Mr. Prineveau's watch." Down went the ash receiver; "fifth," and he picked up the ink bottle, "if she ascertained the exact time by looking at Mr. Prineveau's watch, and that watch was carried in the usual place on his breast, then her fingers were at his heart just before the murder occurred," and down went the ink bottle. The usually scattered utensils of my desk were now in a little group covered by the massive paw of my friend Daryl.

"It is an interesting and startling theory," I said," "and I see now to what it leads."

"I doubt that," replied Daryl. "Let me tell you to what it leads—insuperable difficulties, for the woman has all the clews in her own hands, and will baffle us at every step of the search, and have public sympathy in doing it."

"Then if we cannot get hold of the facts to substantiate your theory we are on a wild-goose chase."

"Not altogether."

"Why, we haven't a leg to go on without the facts."

"O, yes; one leg."

"What is it?"

"The truth."

I shrugged my shoulders.

"The truth will develop its own facts, and that is where Mrs. Prineveau, like all merely cunning people, is a little superficial. Suppose we set out to ascertain if Mr. Prineveau did not have two waistcoats of the same material, one of which it was alleged was punctured by a bullet and the other was not, and we wish to learn if Mrs. Prineveau did not have the opportunity when the body arrived home, to change the waistcoats, we shall be baffled by her, for she has arranged for just such a contingency."

"And away go our facts."

"Yes, but in comes our truth. Why does Mrs. Prineveau object to our searching for that waistcoat?"

Daryl gave his legs a stretch, rammed his big fists into his pockets, and then continued: "Look here, old fellow, I am right; that calm, self-possessed woman is living with a slow burning hell inside, for fear somebody will bring an intuition into this case and look past the facts that she has arranged to the truth that she can't alter.

"I've got a working hypothesis that fits every circumstance. What we've got to do is to keep this woman from suspecting it till she gets on the witness stand, and then pump it at her and watch the results. The moment she suspects that we have got the whole secret—she will go to pieces."

Three weeks of the month of April passed by and very little was done. Daryl went to Washington and to all appearances had made up his mind to let things rest on his far-fetched hypothesis. Gradually I fell into the belief that it was a hopeless case of defense. I had learned nothing to strengthen Daryl's theory. The prosecution openly avowed that they had a clear case. My friend John Greve patronizingly told me to do the best I could, and reminded me that there was no charign in making a good fight in a forlorn hope. I called upon Mrs. Prineveau once and she received me with the utmost candor, without a sign of perturbation and offered to give me any assistance in her power. I felt when I came away that Daryl had made a great mistake. As the day of the trial approached the newspapers referred to Clarkson as the murderer whose guilt was unmistakable, and Clarkson himself in one or two interviews had talked wildly and desperately and hurt his own case irremediably.

I FELT DARYL HAD MADE A GREAT MISTAKE

I think it was on the 26th of April when I got an absurd and very brief letter from Daryl in Washington. This was all it said: "If you get discouraged go and see Mrs. Clarkson. Will be on with a fact or two on Monday."

The letter did not stimulate me, but the visit to Mrs. Clarkson did. I found her in improved but modest quarters up town and much more hopeful than I expected. She seized me by the hands and said: "I pray for you night and morning—that Heaven will preserve you till this is over. I tremble to think something might happen to you. O, sir, we never can pay you; but when you see that poor dear with his children in his arms once more I am sure you will feel that you have not been wholly unpaid."

I tried to let down the pegs of this strain as softly as I could and tell that it would not do to be oversanguine of the result, but she said, with calm assurance, that she had no fear of the result now, and shortly afterwards her two winsome children announced to me with pitiable importance that papa was coming home again.

So when Daryl arrived on Monday I told him that I felt as if I were the only guilty party in the case. We had allowed an estimable woman to build up the most unwarranted hopes only to cruelly destroy them in the end.

Daryl paid no attention whatever to this. "I have got an important fact," he said. "The Prineveaus were abroad in 1877, and staid two weeks in Geneva, I never should have known this but for Mrs. Clarkson, who hunted up a letter from Mr. Prineveau to Mr. Clarkson that had contained a remittance, and this sentence: 'We have been detained here a week over our time by Mrs. P., who has been making purchases.' "

"What do you see in that?"

"Geneva is celebrated for its watchmakers. I sent a cablegram from the Washington bureau to the department of justice there asking them to find out if Mrs. Prineveau purchased a watch while there. Here is the answer, translated. Don't read the official verbiage—look at that sentence. What is it? 'Yes, Mme. Prineveau purchased a large silver watch of Bringdat Frere, who was closing out business. Number and description of watch unattainable.' "

After reading this we both laid back and looked at each other in silence a moment.

"It is your sane opinion, Daryl, that Prineveau was killed by a watch."

"Just as sure of it as Clarkson's wife is that you will free her husband from this charge."

"But we haven't got a scintilla of proof."

"No, we'll make Mrs. Prineveau furnish it on the witness stand."

Do you know what I said to Daryl? It's a rather a humilating confession, but I was considerably younger then than I am now.

"Daryl, said I, "you are the senior counsel for the defense. I might as well put myself in your hands and go it blindly."

He pulled out his brawny and hairy hands as if to let me see that they were big and strong enough to take care of me. But he only said:

"Good. I shouldn't wonder if I pulled you out of it with a good deal of honor. I'm counting on one little thing that you don't think of."

"What is it?"

"That Mrs. Prineveau retained you for the defense."

"Is that sarcasm?"

"No. Inspiration. Don't you know why she retained you?"

"Because she thought I'd make the worst possible defense."

"That was a secondary motive. The primary one was compunction. She's a woman and she couldn't help feeling sorry for Clarkson, who was such a helpless victim of her conspiracy. So she eased up her conscience by providing him with a lawyer. She felt safe in doing it. She tried to steer you into the insanity plea. Now all that shows that there is a weak spot in her. We'll go to court and lie in wait for her and jump on it suddenly, and then you'll see something dramatic."

JURORS BILL PASSED.

Ten Men Can Now Bring in a Verdict.

THE PROPOSAL TO TAX BICYCLES

A Number of Bills Ready For Signature—Lively Scene Between Col. Matheson and Patron Leader Haycock—Regulations For Electric Railways

Toronto March 27.—After August 1 next ten jurors may in all civil cases give a verdict. Hon. Mr. Hardy's bill was yesterday reported by the committee of the whole; it now has to be formally read a third time and be signed by the Lieutenant-Governor, when it will become law. Mr. Whitney again expressed himself in favor of the abolition of juries in civil cases, and Col. Matheson suggested that the bill should be laid over for a year, as there were many other questions, such as that of costs, which would come into the discussion. Mr. Hardy said that public opinion was against the abolition of the jury system in civil cases, and while he believed that in the distant future juries might be abolished he thought that the time had not yet arrived. The bill was finally reported.

Hon. Mr. Bronson introduced an important Government measure, entitled: "The Electric Railway Act of 1895." The bill will stand in the same relation to electric roads that the Railway Act does to steam roads, and the provisions of the bill are based mainly upon that act. Here are some of the main provisions:

Directors cannot, directly or indirectly, be interested in any contract for construction.

Plant and material must be paid for in cash, not in stock paid-up, nor in bonds, at such prices as the directors see fit.

Stock must be sold at par for cash at the first or original issue. Subsequent issues must be sold by tender to the highest bidders, with suitable provision for keeping out parties hostile to the undertaking.

All contracts for construction, for leasing rolling stock, or electric power, must be at reasonable prices and subject to the vote of two-thirds in value of the shareholders.

Dividends are limited to eight per cent. on the money actually invested in capital stock.

Powers of expropriation are limited to such cases as may be approved by resolution of the municipal council, certified to by County Judge.

On all electric roads extending more than one mile beyond the limits of any city, town or incorporated village, Sunday service is forbidden.

Municipal councils, at the instance of interested parties, may bring action to compel the observance of the provisions of the act.

These bills were read a third time and only await the signature of the Lieut.-Governor: Respecting dower in mortgaged and other property—The Attorney-General; respecting convictions under municipal bylaws—The Attorney-General; to confirm bylaw No. 755 of the city of Hamilton—Mr. Middleton; to confirm bylaw No. 263 of the village of Preston—Mr. Moore; to incorporate the Advent Christian Church of Ontario in Canada—Mr. Bennett.

The House went into committee on and reported the Attorney-General's bill respecting the legal meaning of expressions relative to time.

These Government bills were read a second time: To amend and consolidate the acts respecting free libraries and mechanics' institutes—Mr. Ross; to make better provision for the widows of intestates in certain cases—The Attorney-General; relating to the Department of Agriculture—Mr. Dryden; to amend the Pharmacy Act—Mr. Ross.

Mr. Stratton introduced his bill empowering municipalities to license bicycles and devote the money to constructing wheelpaths. Many of the members showed their disapprobation, but the bill passed the first reading. The measure is strongly opposed by bicycle clubs all over the province, and it is their intention to send deputations to protest against its third reading.

The following additional provisions have been added to the bill: No license to exceed an average of one cent per day; licenses issued in one municipality to a bona fide resident shall be good in any other municipality for the year in which it was issued.

Mr. Biggar introduced a bill to amend the High Schools Act of 1891. The bill compels County Councils to contribute to the cost of maintenance of pupils from their counties who attend high schools situated in cities, towns or villages in adjoining counties.

The House had scarcely gone into Committee of Supply when a little "scene" arose between the Opposition and Mr. Haycock. The leader of the Patrons requested the chairman to insist that members speak out, as those who sat in his part of the chamber found it difficult to hear what was going on. "Possibly," said Mr. Hardy, "hon. members opposite don't wish their remarks to be heard in your direction." The Patrons laughed loudly at this, whereupon the ire of Col Matheson was roused. "When the hon. member for Frontenac commences to correct us I think it is time we should turn," said he. "The Patrons came here to do all sorts of wonderful things, cutting down everything to the last inch, and yet during the whole discussion of the estimates they have remained perfectly silent. While we have been doing the work, the hon. member has been prating all over the country as to what they are going to do." Continuing, Col. Matheson contended that he represented the farmers just as much as Mr. Haycock and his followers, and related how he had defeated his Patron opponent at the election.

Mr. Haycock: If I have not taken up the time of the House with criticisms, neither have I taken up the time of this House with blowing about the great victory which I won in Frontenac. (Laughter.) I do not think the time of the House should be taken up by any such bombast as we have listened to during the last few minutes. (Laughter.)

Mr. Conmee: Presumably Mr. Haycock has not criticized the estimates, because he has no fault to find with them.

Col. Matheson thought the Provincial Treasurer should tell them how he was going to make both ends meet. Last year the actual receipts fell short of the actual expenditure by $390,000, and the result was that the cash in hand fell from $1,000,000 to $600,000. This year there was an estimated expenditure of $3,632,715 and estimated receipts of $3,149,372, a deficiency of $483,343. How was that going to be met?

At the evening session the report of the Committee of Supply was received, and the House went into concurrence on the estimates.

The House went into committee on and reported Mr. Truax' bill to enable the village of Teeswater to lease or sell certain lands.

Mr. Howland has given notice of a bill for the establishment of a municipal union, providing machinery for the holding of annual or quarterly meetings of the heads of the different municipalities, together with their solicitors, engineers or treasurers, and to create a consolidated municipal fund for mutual investment of sinking funds in debentures of other municipalities.

Mr. German's bill to tax electric wires will be considered by the Municipal Committee on Thursday, April 4.

The Municipal Committee held its first meeting yesterday, with Hon. Mr. Hardy in the chair. Its initial business was to throw out Mr. Richardson's bill providing for the payment of reeves and permitting municipal treasurers to act as tax collectors.

The Public Accounts Committee continued the taking of evidence as to the best system of purchasing supplies for the public institutions. Foreman White of the Central Prison and Bursar Way of Hamilton Asylum were under examination. They both expressed the opinion that buying in the open market was preferable to tenders.

FREIGHT FERRIES ACROSS THE LAKE.

A Company Formed to Operate Ferries Between Oak Orchard, N.Y., and Port Hope, Ont

Buffalo, March 27.—As a result of a favorable report by the Board of Railroad Commissioners, engineers to-day began staking out the line for a new railroad between Batavia and Oak Orchard Harbor, on Lake Ontario. Coincident with the beginning of work on this railroad, the American and Canadian Navigation Company has been incorporated at Trenton, N.J., for the purpose of operating two freight and passenger ferries between Oak Orchard Harbor and Port Hope and Cobourg, Canada. The Navigation Company will at once begin the construction of two steam ferries, each 255 feet in length, with 45 feet beam, 10 1-2 feet draught. Each will carry 26 loaded cars, and will be equipped with ice-breakers so that they can run all the year round. It is said that the company has made large contracts for carrying coal to Canada. The cars will be put aboard the ferries right from the track of the new railroad.

Ex-Warden Laviolette Dead.

Montreal, March 27.—Godfroi Laviolette, warden of the penitentiary of St. Vincent de Paul from 1881 to 1887, died this morning from paralysis of the brain at the residence of his son, Dr. Camille Laviolette. He was in his 68th year. He retired on his pension in 1887, after the terrible ordeal he went through at the time of the revolt of the convicts on April 24, 1886. After he had been overpowered by the mutineers they sought to use him as a shield against the fire of the guards, but he ordered the latter to do their duty. The revolt was quelled, but the warden had received three bullet wounds; one convict had been killed and several wounded. He was complimented at the time for his heroic action by Lieut.-Governor Masson, Sir Hector Langevin and the late Sir John Thompson.

William S Kimball Dead.

Rochester, N.Y., March 27.—William S. Kimball, President of The Post-Express Printing Company, vice-president of the American Tobacco Company, president of the Union Bank, president of the City Hospital, president of the Industrial School, vice-president of the Security Trust Company, director in Rochester Railway Company, Lyceum Theatre Company and the Toronto, Hamilton and Buffalo Railway Company, died at Virginia Beach this morning.

Death of Detroit's Ex-Fire Chief.

Detroit, March 26.—James Battle, chief of the Fire Department for a third of a century, died at his home Sunday. In his youth he learned tin and copper smelting in Toronto, worked at his trade a short time in Hamilton and after a brief residence in St. Catharines drifted to Detroit in 1848. His death was caused by his leaving a sick bed to assume command at a fire which threatened to do extensive damage. He retired from active service on Feb. 9 last. He has relatives in Canada residing in the neighborhood of Thorold.

TROLLEY SUPERCEDES STEAM.

The New York Central Will Adopt Electric Power

Buffalo, N.Y., March 27.—The Courier says the New York Central Railway has decided to equip its line between here and Niagara Falls with a monster trolley system and motor cars of such power that trains of the latest and best in passenger coaches may be drawn over the line with no decrease from the present rate of speed, though comfort in travel will be enhanced and fares will be reduced. Orders have been issued to begin the work at once, and it is expected that the line will be ready to care for a large part of the heavy summer traffic.

MAY DAY NOT A BANK HOLIDAY.

Bill for Payment of Members to Be Brought in When Practicable.

London, March 26.—In the House of Commons to-day James Keir Hardie asked if the Government would introduce a bill making May-day a general holiday, or whether they would grant a holiday to Government employes that day.

Sir William Harcourt said the Government must answer both questions in the negative.

Sir William intimated that the Government would introduce a bill providing for the payment of members of the House of Commons when such a measure should become practicable.

Trouble Over Fred Douglass' Estate.

Washington, March 27.—Mrs. Rosetta D. Sprague, eldest child of the late Frederick Douglass and wife of Nathan Sprague of this city, filed a petition today in the Probate Court, in which she charges Mrs. Helen Douglass, her stepmother, and Lewis H. Douglass, her brother, with unlawfully retaining possession of her father's property and requests the court to grant her letters testamentary upon the estate. She further asks that temporarily the court appoint a collector to take charge of the property and compel her brother and step-mother to make a full and complete discovery and delivery of the estate. This is thought to be the beginning of a bitter contest between members of the family over the division of the estate.

Ran Amuck With a Razzer.

Saratoga, March 27.—Richard Jackson was killed to-night by Julius Bartlett. Jackson's throat was cut with a razor and William Palmer was also slashed in the throat by Bartlett and will die. Bartlett, who resides at Fort Edward, is under arrest. All are colored.

Shoppers Panic-Stricken by Fire.

Chicago, March 27.—The stock of the Bell Clothing Company, which occupied a building at State and Quincy-streets, in the centre of the retail district, was destroyed by fire this afternoon. The blaze started when State-street was crowded with shoppers and the store was filled with people. So rapidly did the flames spread that the frightened occupants of the building scarcely knew what was the matter before they were tumbling over each other in their haste to get downstairs. Some tried the windows and a half-dozen were hanging to the big sign, when the firemen arrived and rescued them with ladders amid the cheers of a tremendous crowd. The insurance on stock is $250,000 and loss estimated at $200,000.

SIR C. H. TUPPER RESIGNS

He Objected to the Summoning of Parliament.

MONTAGUE TAKES OATH OF OFFICE

Hon. J. C. Patterson Now Minister Without Portfolio—The Premier Explains Why Mr. Patterson Resigned—Dr. Montague Leaves for the Haldimand Bye-Election.

Ottawa, Ont., March 26.—The Cabinet changes which I announced last week took place to-day, but they are completely overshadowed by the announcement that Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper has resigned his portfolio. The Minister of Justice has not attended the meetings of the Cabinet for the past two or three days. Yesterday this fact began to be commented upon and to-day culminated in a report that he had tendered his resignation. Your correspondent set to work to verify the rumors current, and there seems not the slightest doubt of their accuracy. Sir Charles, it appears, has no difference of opinion with his colleagues on questions of policy He shaped the decision of the Government on the Manitoba school question and it was his report in favor of a Remedial Order that was adopted by the Cabinet. Where the Minister of Justice differs from his colleagues is with reference to the subsequent action reached, viz.: to meet Parliament before dissolving. A gentleman thoroughly well posted in political affairs told me to-night that he understood Sir Charles took the ground that the action the Government should have taken was to immediately appeal to the country on the great issue now before the people, that this was the correct constitutional course to follow. On the other hand it is urged that one of the prerogatives of the Premier is that he shall decide when dissolution shall take place. In political circles the hope is expressed that Sir Charles may be induced to withdraw his resignation.

Hon. Dr. Montague was sworn in Secretary of State this afternoon succeeding Mr. Dickey, who goes to the Militia Department.

Mr. Dickey is now in Nova Scotia, called there by illness of his mother. He will be sworn in as Minister of Militia immediately on his return.

Hon. J. C. Patterson remains in the Ministry without portfolio until June, when he goes to Manitoba.

The Premier said to your correspondent that it was not true that Mr. Paterson was taken into the present Ministry temporarily when the Ministry was formed. Previous to the departure of Sir John Thompson for England last autumn, Mr. Patterson had expressed a desire to be relieved from the cares of office, owing to ill-health, but the Premier had then refused to accept his resignation, urging that possibly his health might be recuperated before a session. When he (Sir Mackenzie) formed his Cabinet, Mr. Patterson again renewed his request to be allowed to retire, but the Premier had insisted upon his remaining. The change in portfolios to-day was the outcome of Mr. Patterson's renewed request to be relieved from the strain of departmental work, his physician having peremptorily ordered him to resign his office. The statement in certain newspapers that there is any friction between the Premier and Mr. Patterson is utterly untrue.

Dr. Montague left for Haldimand county to-night to make arrangements for his re-election, his seat having become vacant by his acceptance of a portfolio. The writ for the new election will probably be issued to-morrow or Thursday.

Some important changes in the militia force were sanctioned to-day. Major Lawrence Buchan, Toronto, receives the rank of brevet lieut.-colonel; Capt. James Sutherland, M.P., 22nd Battalion, is promoted to the honorary rank of major; Capt. John Williams, London Field Battery, is to have the rank of major on retired list; Surgeons G. S. Ryerson, M.L.A., Toronto, and William Tobin of Halifax are appointed Assistant Surgeons-General of Militia; Major Vidal of London receives the brevet rank of lieut.-colonel; Major W. A. Gordon of Fredericton becomes a brevet lieut.-colonel; Surgeon W. R. Bell of Ottawa Field Battery is promoted to be surgeon-major; Major John Hood, 1st Prince of Wales Rifles, Montreal, is to be brevet lieut.-colonel.

The report of Mr. W. L. Magee of the Marine Department, Commissioner, to inquire into facts bearing upon complaints respecting ocean freight rates on cattle, has been printed in pamphlet form. It will be remembered that the inquiry was the outcome of a bill introduced into the House of Commons by Mr. Mulock. Mr. Magee entered into correspondents with both steamship agents, and the president and secretary of the Dominion Live Stock Association, and endeavored, but unsuccessfully, to arrange a hearing. Steamship agents declined to attend until any grievance which might exist had been formulated and the report shows that Mr. Magee had great difficulty with the cattle men in inducing them to present any charges. Correspondence dragged along for some time, until Mr. Magee was notified that the Live Stock Association had collapsed. Thereupon he drew up his report to the Minister. Live stock men were greatly aggrieved over the report which appeared in the newspapers, that they had neglected to appear before the commissioner, urging that they knew nothing of the enquiry. Thereupon Mr. Magee, writing to ex-Secretary Gilchrist of Montreal on March 8, said, "As you are aware I did not correspond individually with cattle shippers, but I corresponded with yourself and Mr. Robson, president of the association, and if cattle shippers who now instruct you to write to me were in ignorance of the fact that machinery was provided for an investigation, the reasons for their not being notified can better be explained by yourself and the president of the association than by me. In regard to their desire to have the inquiry reopened, I may state that having waited a very long time for the association to appoint a delegation of their members to appear before me and furnish whatever evidence they had to furnish, and, having noticed indications that the association was about to dissolve, and for reasons connected with the printing of my report and laying it before Parliament, I deemed it expedient to leave the matter open no longer, and I am of opinion that when I closed and presented my report to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, I surrendered whatever powers I held as commissioner and am, therefore, unable to re-open the matter. As I stated, the correspondence was between yourself, the president of the association and myself, and I am inclined to think you will agree with me that if the shippers of cattle are given access to the correspondence they will be satisfied as to where the failure rests in the matter."

Mr. Schrieber, the Deputy-minister of Railways and Canals, has returned from a flying trip to the Maritime Provinces. He visited St. Peter's Lock, C.B., where new gates of creosoted timber are being put in. Timber of this character is said to be a great protection from the ravages of torredo, or sea-worm. The gates just removed from the lock were perforated through and through by this insidious little insect. Afterwards Mr. Schrieber went to Halifax, where new terminal facilities for ocean steamers will be provided. The loss by the recent fire exceeds a quarter-million dollars.

Now that the obstacle to preferential trade with Australia has been removed by Imperial legislation, the Premier stated to-day that Commissioner Larke is to be instructed to at once report on the commodities which Canada could interchange with Australia on a preferential basis.

The argument before the Supreme Court in Wigle v. Williams was concluded to-day. Judgment was reserved. Kirkpatrick v. Evans was next taken up, the question for decision being whether by a devise in a will to testator's son for life, remainder to his issue in fee simple, and in default of issue to a daughter for life, etc., son took a life estate, or an estate entail, the Court of Appeal holding that he took a life estate. Counsel for appellant argued that remainder to "issue" would create an estate entail which would not be controlled by the addition, as to the fee simple. The respondent was the daughter named in will, appellants claiming by purchase from the son. Judgment was reserved. Armour, Q.C., and McBrayne for appellants; Nesbitt, Q.C., and Bicknell for respondent.

Vancouver, B.C., March 26.—Vancouver will in all probability have a Lexow investigation into the police force. Last night Sergeant Haywood was suspended from duty and it is said several serious charges be made against him. Police committee have direct proof that for some years past all fuel used by him has taken from the city's supply and carried to his house by prisoners. He also had his house connected with the electric light system at the Police Station and never paid a cent for light, the same being charged to the city. Those two specific charges are the ones on which he is suspended, but it is understood that others of a graver nature will be brought forward shortly. The conduct of certain other officers will also probably be investigated.

PROTECTION AND WHEAT.

The Montreal Trade Bulletin, a strictly impartial and reliable trade paper, puts in the following exhibit of prices against the contention of a Liberal contemporary that the Canadian wheat market is none the better of protection—"If the Manitoba farmers sells his No. 1 hard in Fort William he gets 70c a bushel, against 63c in Duluth; if he sells his red winter in Ontario he gets 63c, against 57½c in Toledo. If he sells Manitoba No. 1 hard in Montreal he gets 77 to 78c a bushel; but if he sells in the English market he only gets about 68c." And adds:—"The Canadian farmer certainly has a most decided advantage over foreign competitors on every bushel of wheat he sells in the home market, owing to the protection afforded him by the duty, and at the same time bread is most abnormally cheap."

A DISGRACE TO ONTARIO.

We cordially concur in the following remarks of the Toronto Star: Whitby has just experienced the evils of the system of confining aged, inoffensive paupers in gaol. An old woman whose only crime was her poverty was kept in gaol for lack of a better place, and the loss of liberty and the solitude dethroned her reason and caused a collapse of her system, resulting in her death.

This poor, innocent old woman's pitiful case once more draws attention to the spasmodic agitation to provide a better system of caring for the aged poor, and some member of the Legislature should bring the matter up in the House. It is evident that a radical measure is necessary to provide a change in a system that has too long been a disgrace to the people of Ontario.

PROTECTION VS. FREE TRADE.

Now that the elections, if not near at hand, are in sight in the near future, the public speakers and the press are naturally declaring themselves on the fiscal policy of the respective parties.

Whilst there is no question as to the policy of the Conservative party, yet there is, according to the sayings of the Liberal leaders and the press of that party, a diversity of opinion as to what their policy should be upon such an important question to Canada, that it might be well for them to ask, "Where are we at?"

For instance, Mr. Wm. Paterson, M.P., in a speech at Brantford last Friday, said;

"Protection was the policy of the Tory party, while with the Liberal party it was merely an incident. The policy of the Liberal party was not free trade."

The Ontario of Saturday last exceeds this eminent party leader when it said:

"The 'Intell' asks 'Does Free Trade lessen taxation?' and goes on by a per capita comparison between taxation in England and Canada to prove that it doesn't. In the first place, seeing that no one is advocating Free Trade, we fail to find any bearing in the query upon the present political situation; and in the second place, the comparison would be a fairer one if Canada were to relieve England of her share of the defence of the Empire. This rotten chestnut of the Intell's of crying Free Trade when no one is thinking of Free Trade, is becoming a trial upon the patience, for it hasn't even the charm, in its senile decrepitude, of being original."

Yet it is not so very long since that this same journal was a strong advocate of Free Trade, and would be again, we presume, if it thought that the country was ripe for such a policy. In its issue of Oct. 20, 1892, the Ontario had a leading article on the question, which read in part as follows:

LET US HAVE FREE TRADE.

The Hastings Reform Club will hold their annual meeting in their rooms in the Ashley Block on Friday evening next, when the officers will be elected. The Hastings Reform Club is a creditable institution, and it is one of the few political clubs that have survived in Ontario. The Reform party was defeated at the polls at the last general election on the question of free trade because the people did not understand that policy. The question was not ripe, it was said, and it should not be said at the next election, which is not far distant.

Now we have the Ontario saying that no one is advocating free trade, although it has been proclaiming that policy itself; and again, we have it quoted by the New York Sun in its issue of Feb. 10, 1893, as advocating annexation, the Ottawa correspondent of our New York contemporary quoting it as follows:

POLITICAL UNION.

ANOTHER CANADIAN NEWSPAPER CONVERTED TO THE ANNEXATION IDEA.

OTTAWA, Feb. 9.—One of the latest Canadian journals to become an advocate of political union is the Daily Ontario published in Belleville. In its last issue this paper says:

"Continental union is the rather euphonious name under which a powerful organization is being formed in Canada. What does it mean? Just what the words signify—a union of the countries on this continent for political and commercial purposes. Those who are prominent in advocating this almost revolutionary doctrine are not all Liberals in political faith. There are just as many Conservatives enrolled as members of the new order of citizenship, and all are actuated by a single motive—the removal of trade barriers and the introduction of a freer and broader basis of international intercourse. They assert, with much reason, that a true patriot will seek to benefit his country by whatever means he finds most potent and available. They do not want a forced separation from existing regulations, but depend on the conviction of public opinion that such a union will result in the greatest good to the greatest number."

Yet the Ontario is not the only Reform journal which has at no distant date advocated Free Trade, as the Montreal Witness in a recent issue spoke as follows:

Tariff reform will help to restore the prosperity of the farmers, and the prosperity of Canada depends upon the prosperity of the farmers, so that manufacturers, with the exception of those dependent on pap, and workingmen and laborers and all large classes will be better off in Canada under free trade than under protection.

Even the Globe, in its issue of Jan. 31st, 1893, was not averse to the doctrine of Free Trade, as it said in referring to Mr. Laurier's speech on the address in Parliament:

"We believe that the country is with Mr. Laurier and the Liberals. The amendment was voted down, but the movement for freedom of trade can be neither resisted nor evaded by mere tinkering with the tariff. The reform which is wanted is a steady progress toward free trade."

Sir Richard Cartwright, another leader in the party, at the same time in speaking on the address, gave his idea of a fiscal policy applicable to this country, when he said that in his judgment continental free trade was the very thing that would give the country a great and durable prosperity. And finally Mr. Laurier, the titular leader of the party, said in a speech at Toronto, no longer ago than the 6th of February last, that protection is slavery, and said, as per the Globe's report:

"I have told you the policy of the Liberel party. We want a revenue tariff—a tariff not based upon principles of protection, but simply calculated to give the greatest amount of revenue with the minimum of taxation. This is the policy we have in view. Now, as to the method in which this policy will be carried out. Let me tell you this: I am not a revolutionist; I am a reformer; I am a reformer of the English school, and I know very well that it is impossible to change a system, economic, political or otherwise, without making some displacement of interest. But, sir, we have a precedent in British history, as I said the other day in Montreal; the precedent of Sir Robert Peel, who carried Great Britain from protection to Free Trade by a gradual process which avoided all financial complications. This is the precedent, the method, which we intend to adopt. There never was a time in my career when I did not proclaim myself a Liberal of the English school—a disciple of Fox, a disciple of Peel, a disciple of William Ewart Gladstone."

And the Ontario puts the telescope to its closed eye and, winking with the other to the Grit partizans, declares that it cannot see that anyone is advocating free trade.

Too late. The die is cast. No strangling of our system of moderate protection by a gradual process of Thugism—no replacement of our revenue tariff by "Free Trade as it is in England," as Mr. Laurier proposes, will be adopted by the people of Canada in the next election, and the Grits will not be allowed to shirk the issue which they have raised.

Gilbert Parker, and his Connection With Queen's.

(Kingston News.)

Students of Queen's in '85 and thereabouts will have no difficulty in remembering Rev. Horatio Gilbert Parker, lecturer on elocution. Mr. Parker was a Church of England clergyman, delicate looking, pale cheeked, refined, a favorite with the undergraduates, who soon discovered that the young parson had a vein of humor which sparkled gayly now and again. Mr. Parker lived at Miss Dunlop's "Saints' Rest" then, and there are Saints still resting there who were present on the evening before the departure of the talented and delicate young clergyman for the more genial atmosphere to be found under the Southern Cross—destined to be the gateway of his fame. There was a poem by the guest of the evening, and many a merry jest was bandied across the festive board through the tobacco smoke. One of Mr. Parker's stories about himself told of how a brawny young farmer and a blushing damsel routed him from his comfortable study on one occasion desiring to be married. The ceremony ended, the groom advanced, grasped in his ponderous fist the lady-like hand of the priest with a pressure that almost fractured the meta-carpal bones, and slipping him a 50-cent piece, said with great earnestness: "Parson, you done it good!"

Mr. Gilbert Parker, novelist, who has been delighting New Yorkers with his readings, is the erstwhile clergyman and elocutionary teacher. "Current Literature" says of him: "Mr. Parker has made the romantic field of the Hudson's Bay Company and Canada and the far North his own. He is the first man who has shown what the life and romance of the Hudson's Bay Co. really are As a romanticist of the deepest dye, Mr. Parker gets to the heart of the comedies and tragedies of life, but deals with them in the spirit of hope and courage. In all of his works there is the joy of fighting, the spirit of conquest, and yet the deep, intimate sense of humanity and observant sympathy.

"Mr. Parker is new; he is strong; he is daring. He is of the open-air life, not of the 'club room's green and gold.' A sweet, inspiring air blows through all his work. There has been no stronger revolt against the tragedy of the hairpin and the idea that men must write to please the ladies, 'with dandy pathos,' than that of Mr. Parker."

Mr. Gilbert Parker is a tall, handsome man, with an expression full of alertness and ability.

He was born in the famous old city of Quebec in 1862, the son of an officer of the Royal Artillery.

Science Triumphant at Last.

Miller's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil is the outcome of the latest scientific researches. There was always a prejudice against taking Cod Liver Oil on account of its disagreeable to the palate, and that is one reason why it has become so popular with the medical fraternity, the hospitals of the country and the households wherever consumption or lung troubles prevail. Miller's Emulsion is the great nerve strengthener and blood maker, and cures Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis, Scrofula and all Lung affections. In Big Bottles, 50c. and $1, at all Drug Stores.

Sunday School Institute.

The first Sunday School Institute held here since the Township of Huntingdon Sunday School Association was organized was at Moira on Friday the 22nd inst., and the interest and enthusiasm evidenced by the very large attendance was certainly sufficient to thoroughly encourage and stimulate the officers of the Association and the Sunday School workers throughout the township and surrounding district. The respective schools of the township were all fairly well represented, besides a goodly number from Roslin, Thomasburg, Hungerford and Thurlow, the spacious church being packed, especially at the evening session.

The choir was ably led by the President, J. B. Morton, of West Huntingdon, the exercises being conducted with promptness and despatch. The Rev. Messrs. C. L. Thompson and J. M. Gray, of Stirling, were present at the morning and afternoon sessions and took part in the discussions, and the ability and earnestness with which they handled the subjects allotted them was highly appreciated by all present.

The Rev. W. H. Adams, Ivanhoe, and Rev. T. P. Steel, pastor of the church, attended the convention throughout, and the Rev. J. A. Black, of Roslin, the afternoon and evening sessions.

The Revs. Black and Adams presented their subjects in a clear and forcible manner that held the undivided attention of the large audience during the evening session.

Thanks are due to Pastor Steel for the earnest and active interest taken in the Association and the Sunday School generally, and especially to those ministers who came notwithstanding the bad state of the roads, and who through their efforts and ability made the institute a success.

The business meeting resulted in the re-election of the following officers: J. B. Morton, West Huntingdon, President; J. G. Foster, Moira, Secretary; Hulsie Rollins, Treasurer, Ivanhoe. The Ministers in charge in the township are ex-officio the Vice-Presidents, and the superintendents of the various Sunday Schools, with the officers compose the Executive Committee.

Resolutions were passed admitting or adding to the Association the Eggleton Sunday School at North Hastings Junction and Salem Sunday School in the township of Rawdon.

The singing, led principally by members of the Moira and West Huntingdon Sunday Schools and ably assisted in the evening by Mr. Richard Porter and in which the whole audience heartily joined, was excellent, and the solemn spiritual earnestness that characterized the addresses pervaded the whole meeting. We trust the many practical hints thrown out will be utilized in the Sunday Schools and that many beneficial results will be realized. The meeting closed by all singing the appropriate hymn, "God be with you till we meet again," and the benediction by Rev. Mr. Steel.

CURIOSITY BOX.

An Undertaker's Observations on Funerals From City Flats.

"There are flats," said an undertaker, "that appear to have been built with a view of getting people in, but not with a view of getting them out. It is a work of difficulty to take a casket down the stairs, and great care is required. If there is an elevator the casket is carried down on that if it is large enough; if there is not room for the casket directly across, it may be placed in the elevator cornerwise; but it is not taken down in the elevator unless there is room for it to rest entirely upon the floor; if otherwise it is carried downstairs. If a funeral is held upstairs it is better not to let the casket be carried down by honorary pallbearers, but to have it carried by professional pallbearers, who know best how to handle a casket under such circumstances."

Power of Freezing Water.

The power of freezing water is one of the greatest in nature, and under its force the hardest rocks are constantly disintegrating. When the water in the crevices freezes it expands and often splits off bowlders from the side of a cliff. It is said that in the neighborhood of Hudson's Bay rocks often burst from freezing "with a noise equal to that of heavy artillery."

Not to Be Taken Seriously.

One of the curious outcomes of Mark Twain's assertion that there are only 33 jokes in existence is the fact that he is constantly receiving letters from men and women who desire to refute his statement by sending him an entirely new and original joke. Taking Mark Twain too seriously is of itself a joke.

Crocodiles Go to Sea.

The alligator never leaves fresh water, while the crocodile frequently travels long distances by sea. It has been seen 1,000 miles from land, and it is possible that these sea-going crocodiles have given rise to sea-serpent stories.

TOWN HALL, Moira, 18th March, 1895.

OLEOMARGARINE.

THE MEANS OF PRODUCTION AS SEEN IN A LARGE FACTORY.

Cleanliness is Insisted Upon—From the Oil to the Steam-Jacketed Kettle—Then to the Big Churning Vats, on to the Cooling and Salting Rooms, and Finally to the Packing and Distributing Departments.

The oleomargarine factory is a most interesting place. On entering the building a visitor is struck almost at once by the scrupulous cleanliness of the floors and tables. They are polished and repolished until they are almost as white as the proverbial New England kitchen floor. All the employes throughout the building are clad in white jackets and aprons, and the girls in the packing rooms wear dainty white caps.

The process of making the oleomargarine begins on the third floor of the building. Here in one corner of the room a stream of oleomargarine oil of a bright amber color is pumped into several large steam-jacketed kettles, where it is kept stirred by means of dashers similar to those in the trying-rooms. The temperature is carefully raised to 185 degrees to melt the oil thoroughly, and then it is conveyed into large tin-lined vats where it is stored and chilled. It is then passed through a bath of brine, where it is washed and deodorized, and when it comes back it looks a good deal like light brown sugar, and has a distinctly buttery taste. It is packed in tin-lined trays about six feet long by three wide, and placed in a cool store-room until it is needed for use. Everything about this store room must be kept free from dirt, for the reason that the oil, like butter, is so sensitive that it readily takes up foul odors. A single drop of kerosene in the room might taint and ruin a whole supply of oil.

Into the store-room "neutral," as it is called, or the purest leaf lard, which has gone through the process of deodorizing in brine, is brought and stored. As these two parts of the oleomargarine, both of which are practically without taste, are needed they are trundled out in trucks, and two workmen with their sleeves rolled up shovel them in equal parts into the flaring tin funnel of a chute which leads to the creamery below.

On reaching the next floor the mass falls into a big vat or churn heated to 180 degrees and is rapidly stirred by two men with wooden paddles until the lumps all disappear. To assist in this operation small sieves are also used. When the mass has been rendered homogeneous a certain amount of genuine butter and buttermilk sometimes to the amount of twenty per cent. of the whole, is put in, together with a little butter-color of the same kind that is used in ordinary creameries, and the stirring goes forward again. The genuine butter used is churned in a revolving churn exactly the same way as in a creamery. The cheaper grades of butterine do not contain as much butter and they are usually churned by machinery instead of by hand.

When the oleomargarine comes from the churn it has very much the appearance of butter. It is dumped on a circular table and a long conical butter-worker operated by machinery, squeezes out the buttermilk and works in the necessary amount of salt. A man in a clean white jacket helps along the process with a wooden paddle. When the butterine has been sufficiently worked and loaded into one of the tin-lined trucks it looks like real butter, tastes like real butter and no one but an expert can tell it from real butter. The creamery has a capacity of 20,000 pounds in twenty four hours and 100 men and 10 women are required to do the work.

After standing one day in a clean, cool, storage room and then being reworked, the oleomargarine is taken downstairs to the packing rooms. Here white-jacketed men and girls stand at tables with mountainous heaps of the moist yellow butterine in front of them. With a deft movement, the man scoops up a handful and plasters it into a mould holding one pound. Then he drops it out before a girl, who wraps it up in a piece of parchment paper, and it is then packed away in boxes. In this department the greatest care is taken to have everything sweet and clean. The floor and all the tables are scrubbed at least once a day.

All boxes and firkins have to be marked and stamped with great care. For Uncle Sam is very particular about butterine, and when a manufacturer wishes to make it he has to pay a license fee of $600 a year, and then if he wishes to sell it at wholesale is compelled to pay $480 more. Retailers are charged $48 yearly, and there is a further tax of 2 cents a pound on all the product manufactured. Each package must bear the factory number and the name "oleomargarine" in plain type, so that no one will be mistaken and take the product for butter. A list of all purchasers, with their addresses, must also be furnished to the authorities. Besides this, many of the States have separate laws on the subject which more or less restrict the sale. But, in spite of all these impediments, an enormous quantity of the product is manufactured and sold every year. Many persons prefer it to butter, especially in the large cities.

Chemically, butterine is almost identical with butter. Here is the analysis of the two:

	Butterine.	Butter.
Water	12.01	12.13
Palmitin	18.31	16.83
Stearin	38.40	35.39
Olein	24.05	22.93
Casein	.74	.48
Salts	5.22	5.22
Glycerides of the lower fatty acids	1.26	7.01

Lies Concerning Harriet Beecher Stowe.

Hartford, March 27.—The family of Harriet Beecher Stowe, has been in receipt during the last 48 hours of numerous enquiries as to her condition, owing to the publication in New York of a sensational story that she had become violently insane and was to be confined in an asylum. The following card has been issued: Hartford, Conn., March 26.—In accordance with the wishes of the family of Harriet Beecher Stowe, I desire to state as her physician that there is no change in her condition, except that she is in better health than usual. She spends most of her time outdoors, visiting freely her friends and neighbors. Edward Beecher Hooker, M.D.

TO DISCUSS THE ORDER.

The Document Now Before the Manitoba House.

THE MANITOBA ORANGEMEN MEET

Greenway's Supporters Shout "No Surrender," While the Opposition Favor a Compromise of Some Sort—The Debate Expected to Begin on Thursday.

Winnipeg, Man., March 27.—The famous Remedial Order in the School Case, which continues to engross public attention, came up in the Manitoba Legislature yesterday afternoon. It was read by the Speaker of the House, and listened to with close attention by the members. The Order was sent this morning by His Honor Lieutenant-Governor Schultz to the Provincial Secretary in the form in which it was received by His Honor, without note, comment or instructions added, and the Order was read as a communication from the Governor. Afterwards the House proceeded with its usual work. It is necessary that 48 hours, according to the rules of the House, must elapse before the Order can be discussed in Parliament. This might bring it up at a night session on Thursday.

There was a report in circulation that the House would shelve discussion of the Order altogether, and that Parliament would prorogue on Thursday, but there would seem to be no foundation for such a suggestion.

The Premier was asked if there was any probability of the Order being passed over in silence, and he replied that it was sure to be discussed in the House. As to proroguing the House, he added that Parliament might talk for a week on the Order if it saw fit to do so, and that the Order, therefore, would have a good deal to do with the length of the session. The business of the House, outside of that, ought to be about completed by Thursday.

Both the Government supporters and the Opposition were in caucus last night until a late hour. It is learned there was a strong feeling among the Government men that there should be no surrender. The Opposition, however, it is believed, will urge that a spirit of moderation be shown, or in other words, that some form of compromise be agreed to.

The Orange Grand Lodge of Manitoba convenes here to-morrow. It is expected the session will be a notable one, made so by the School Question discussion. The Orangemen are strongly opposed to the restoration of Separate schools, but as loyalty is their cardinal principle they strongly oppose revolutionary sentiments.

HAWAII WILL FIGHT THE SUIT.

The Three Deported Exiles Suing the Steamship Company for Damages.

Vancouver, March 26.—Some days ago a man named Houck, claiming to be a lawyer from Honolulu, arrived here and proceeded to interest himself in the cases of the three deported exiles, Mueller, Cranston and Johnstone. Saturday night Mr. Kinney, judge advocate, who presided at the recent court-martial in Honolulu, arrived here. When interviewed Mr. Kinney was very guarded in his statements, but it was ascertained that he had come here in connection with the suit instituted by the exiles against the Canadian-Australian Steamship Co., the exiles claiming $50,000 damages each. The Hawaiian Government had to give the steamship company a bond to indemnify them against any action that might be brought, and the Government has accordingly decided to fight the suit. Mr. Kinney engaged E. P. Davis, Q.C., of this city, to fight the case, and brought with him numerous documents relative to the expelled men. The Hawaiian Government claim that in the deportation they were acting within international law. Mr. Kinney left on Sunday, and it is understood that he has gone to San Francisco.

SUSPICIOUS DEATH AT OWEN SOUND.

John Flynn Found Dying With Wounds That Indicate Foul Play—An Inquest Being Held

Owen Sound, Out., March 27.—On Sunday afternoon, John Flynn, late night watchman at the Owen Sound Portland Cement Works, was found in an unconscious condition in a shed at the Cruickshank school house. On Friday afternoon he left home and came to Owen Sound, where he purchased numerous small articles, which he intended to peddle through the country to the farmers. He was seen leaving here between 4 and 5 o'clock and was also seen by Mrs. Cruichshank, passing the postoffice.

A young boy who was playing around the schoolhouse on Sunday afternoon discovered the unconscious man, and at once gave the alarm. Flynn was taken home and died 30 minutes afterwards.

After some investigation a wound was found on the right breast, besides one on the right side of his forehead.

Coroner Allan Cameron empanelled a jury last evening, but very little evidence was given and the inquest was adjourned until Friday.

A post-mortem was held by Drs. Campbell of Hepworth and McCullough of Owen Sound. The conclusion arrived at cannot be elicited until next Friday, but there is no doubt that the man's death was caused by foul play.

Deceased was the principal witness against a person named Thompson, now under indictment before the grand jury for firing the Shallow Lake Cement Works. Thompson is now out on bail.

The Chatelle Murder Trial.

Stratford, March 27.—The Assizes opened here this afternoon before Chief Justice Armour. The principal case on the list is that of the Queen v. Amedee Chatelle for the murder of Jessie Keith on Oct. 8, 1894. Over 90 witnesses have been subpoenaed by Government Detective Murray for the Crown. The case will not be taken up until Thursday.

First Murderess Chicago Has Condemned.

Chicago, March 27.—Maggie Tiller, a mulatto woman, who, in a fit of jealousy, shot and killed Charles Miller on Dec. 14, 1894, was found guilty of murder in the first degree, and sentenced to death by a jury in Judge Clifford's court to-day. She is the first of her sex in Cook County against whom the penalty of death has been imposed by a jury.

MOUNET-SULLY.

The Celebrated French Actor.

The features of Mounet-Sully are familiar to Canadians, as the great actor, during his American tour, played to delighted audiences in this country. Mounet-Sully mimics the passions to the life, and there is a subtlety, an intellectuality in his delineations which places him in the front rank of great players. Mounet-Sully is a patron of the famous "Vin Mariani," and it is thus that great actor speaks of it:—"When we drink it, we sing, are gay, we love, we dream of the future, of glory, of the infinite. In fact, nothing can be better for strengthening than 'Vin Mariani.'" And this is the universal testimony, that this famous tonic coca wine nourishes and strengthens when all else fails, building up the nervous and debilitated system, driving away the blues and all despondency, and giving a new lease of life to those who were disposed to cultivate a morbid pessimism. If you desire to know something about the celebrated persons who have spoken admiringly of "Vin Mariani," send your name to Lawrence A. Wilson & Co., Montreal, and they will send you an album containing their portraits, free.

BRANDOLATRY—FRENCH TREATY. BLOOD-MAKING WINES.

The public have recognized the fact that the day has passed that they should pay for labels or brands—BRANDOLATRY will soon be a thing of the past. This is proven by the enormous daily increase of our now famous wines,—all guaranteed sound and imported direct from the vineyards of France. We challenge the trade in general to prove that the brands we are offering at $3.00 and $4.00 are not the equal of those they have been and are now selling at double the price. If your dealer does not keep them, write for particulars and price list to the Bordeaux Claret Company, 30 Hospital Street, Montreal.

There is no reason why one should have a cough any length of time. All that is needed to allay soreness of the throat or to free the bronchial tubes from irritating mucus is Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. It is a wonderful cough-cure, and should be in every medicine-chest.

In these days of keen competition no merchant is likely to mark too much profit on his goods. But the man who buys low is the man that can sell low, that's why Haines & Lockett's prices are lower than others. They are able to deal direct with the factory for large lots for their four big stores. You buy from them and you get the benefit.

Cholera and all summer complaints are so quick in their action that the cold hand of death is upon the victims before they are aware that danger is near. If attacked do not delay in getting the proper medicine. Try a dose of Dr. J. D. Kellogg's Dysentery Cordial, and you will get immediate relief. It acts with wonderful rapidity and never fails to effect a cure.

MR. J. W. JOHNSON INJURED.

Run Down by Two Bicyclists at the Corner of Bridge and Pinnacle Sts.

Shortly after noon to-day as Mr. J. W. Johnson, of the Ontario Business College, was going up Bridge st. to dinner, when he was run into and knocked down by two boys on bicycles. It was said by eye-witnesses of the occurrence that the boys were racing on the sidewalk and they were certainly going at a rapid gait when they struck Mr. Johnson. He was thrown violently to the pavement and became entangled in the wheel with one of the riders. As soon as he could be extricated from the bicycle he was helped to Hotel Quinte, where he remained till taken home in a cab.

Mr. Johnson complained of pain in his legs and a dizziness of the head. He will no doubt be confined to the house for several days as a result of the thoughtlessness of these two young men, whose names are Mair and Brown. There is a by-law forbidding the riding of wheels on the sidewalk and the police should see that it is enforced. A careful wheelman can ride on the walk without danger to anyone, but some reckless youths are dangerous to footpassengers.

Mrs. Daniel McMullen Dead.

Mrs. Daniel McMullen died at four o'clock yesterday afternoon at her residence on Everett St., after an illness extending over a number of years. Deceased, who was in her 58th year, was Mr. McMullen's second wife, her maiden name being Miss Sarah Robbins of Cape Vincent. She was married to her husband who survives her about twenty-three years ago, but no children had been born to them. Mrs. John McMullen, of Everett st., is the only sister of deceased in this city. Mrs. McMullen was a highly respected lady and bore her long illness with patience and fortitude. The funeral takes place on Friday afternoon. Service at the house at 2:30 p. m. and funeral leaves for the cemetery at 3 o'clock.

Important to Dairymen.

A Utica, N.Y., despatch says that the agricultural department at Cornell University claims to have made an important discovery which will prove of great economic value to the farmers. It is found that butter fat can be extracted from whey by running it through a separator. The department now has in press a Bulletin explaining the process. It is estimated that general adoption of the process would save the agricultural interests of New York State nearly one million dollars every year; or to put it another way, that the entire expense of making cheese would be paid by the saving of what has heretofore been a waste product.

Ugly Tramps.

Almost every train that comes into Belleville brings two or three tramps. There seems to be more this year than at any time before, and they all seem very tough. On Saturday morning a gang of six boarded an eastbound train leaving Kingston, and when about a mile out, Conductor Wm. Pappa, who resides on Pearl street west, stopped the train to put them off. They immediately jumped on him and would have used him very roughly only for his two brakemen, who came to his assistance.

Boys' Odd Pants.

Good Words for the Intelligencer

Frank Wolever, of this city, sent his brother, Hame, now in Albany, a copy of the INTELLIGENCER containing the account of the demonstration and banquet to the Premier, and this is what he said of it: "Received the paper this morning and I must say that the INTELLIGENCER did some good work; that is, the cuts and the story. It beats most of the papers over here."

The Bridge Tenders Opened.

The Bay of Quinte Bridge Company met yesterday afternoon to open the tenders for the tolls. There were four tenders in all, and that of Richard Arnott, last year's lessee, was accepted. The amount of his tender was $4,510, over $200 above the amount paid last year. This speaks well for the earning capacity of the bridge and also for careful management by Mr. Arnott.

A MURDEROUS GERMAN.

He Failed in Attempts to Murder His Wife and Kill Himself.

TORONTO, March 27.—Arthur C. Zimmerman, who came to Toronto a couple of months ago, attacked his wife with a hammer this morning, dealing her two savage blows on the head.

The woman fell unconscious to the floor, and Zimmerman, thinking he had killed her, started to commit suicide. He first slashed one of his wrists, but finding this method too slow, he plunged a knife into his left breast. The blade, however, missed his heart and pierced one of his lungs.

Zimmerman is now at the hospital in a critical condition.

His wife is not thought to be dangerously hurt, her skull not having been fractured. The would-be murderer and suicide had been quarreling with his wife for some time and was to have appeared in the police court this morning to answer to the charge of ill-treating her.

LATEST SPORTING NEWS.

Belleville's Bicyclers Will Remain United in one Club—Meetings for To-Night—News Notes of Other Branches of Sport—Gaudaur Willing to Row at Belleville.

SCULLING.

Mr. W. W. Power, of the Queen's Hotel, received a letter this morning from Jake Gaudaur, champion sculler of America, informing him that he would be pleased to row for the championship of the world at Belleville. He does not at present think of going to England to row Harding, the English champion, but thinks he might be induced to come to Canada and have the race pulled off at Belleville. He thinks that a purse of $1,000 would be a fair offer. He also sent Mr. Power a programme of races for the regatta, consisting of single and double sculls and four oared crews, providing the committee saw fit to offer. He also intends taking part in the Austin, Texas, regatta in June, also the Boston regatta, the first week in July, and he assured Mr. Power that if the Belleville people intended having a regatta he would use his influence in inducing the oarsmen at those places to come to Belleville.

BICYCLING.

There was a very large attendance at the meeting in the Foresters' hall last evening to organize a new Bicycle Club. On motion Mr. I. O. Frost was appointed chairman and Mr. Hope McGinnis, Sec.-Treas., pro tem. After some discussion as to the advisability of having a new club it was resolved by a unanimous vote of the meeting to have only one club in the city if possible.

Then the question arose, what club will it be? Some of those present had objected to the old Ramblers or the managment, and they did not want to go in with them.

It was finally decided to accept the invitation of the Ramblers Wheel Club to attend their annual meeting this evening, and it was promised that they would be all accepted as members and have votes in the election of officers. This seemed to meet the views of the boys and they will turn out in large numbers to the meeting in the Institute hall at 8 o'clock this evening. Let every man or boy who has a wheel or who intends to ride be present this evening and we can have a grand club.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Kingston has a golf club. Why should not Belleville have an organization for the pursuit of this fine amusement?

Cricketers will bear in mind the meeting to-night at the Queen's Hotel for organization.

In the annual football match between Scotland and England, the former won by 1 goal and 1 try. to 1 goal. England defeated Ireland 9 goals to 0.

Arthur Zimmerman, the champion bicyclist of America, has decided to accept the challenge recently issued by Hubert Houben, the Belgain wonder, to a series of three races for 25,000 francs a side. The details of the match are not complete.

The Trenton hockey club telephoned to the Belleville team this morning asking them to come up this evening and play the deciding game for the Corby cup. Our team very wisely refused, stating that they had had good ice here and had offered to pay the expenses of the Trenton team to come here, but they refused. The Trenton team, when they found the local team would not play in that town for the cup, wanted an exhibition game, but this was also refused.

Mayor Walmsley received a letter to-day stating that the northern division of the Canadian Canoe Association, consisting of some three hundred canoes, could be induced to come here this summer if the carnival is held.

Griffo outfought Joe Harmon in a rattling set-to before the new Manhattan Athletic Club at New York last night.

Accident to a Building.

Part of the double house on Hotel st., just west of the John st. church, fell this morning, and happily no one was hurt. Mr. Hyman bought the property from the Soper estate some months ago, intending to remodel it. The kitchens being only one story high, the intention was to raise them so as to get rooms over and also excavate so as to get more cellar room. The brick work and excavating were going on at the same time, but before going very far with the excavation it was found that the brick walls of the kitchens had been built on a dry stone wall only 18 inches below the ground level and on a sand bottom. Mr. Hyman was notified to that effect, and a price agreed upon to underpin the walls, as the excavation proceeded. The contractor, in his anxiety to get the brick work ready for the roof before the weather broke, neglected to go on with the underpinning, although repeatedly told to do so. This morning about 9:30 about ten feet of the brick wall fell in; fortunately the men were not on the scaffold at the time, as some of them might have been injured.

Spraying Experments.

Mr. P. R. Palmer is in receipt of the following:

GRIMSBY, March 11, 1895.

To P. R. Palmer, Esq., Belleville:

DEAR SIR,—I am instructed by the Hon. John Dryden, Minister of Agriculture, to have conducted certain spraying experiments in a number of Electoral Districts in the Province, and I shall be glad to meet you and as many of the members of your Institute and fruit growers of the locality, as may find it convenient to attend at Belleville, April 10th, at 2 p. m.

I trust this matter will be of sufficient interest and value to members of your Institute and the fruit growers generally to merit their hearty co-operation in carrying out the work.

Yours truly,
A. H. PETTIT.

DESERONTO.

MARCH 26th.—Teams are crossing the bay on the ice between this place and Fredericksburg and Sophiasburg yet.—Snow has disappeared from the streets in town, but the roads in the country are full of snow banks and almost impassable.—Mr. Godfrey Kolp will build a brick block adjoining his block on St. George st.—Messrs. Stanley Vandervoort and Alex. Whyte, of Sidney, were in town last week.—Mr. and Mrs. E. C. French, who have been spending the winter in Montreal, have returned to Deseronto. We regret to hear that Mr. French is seriously ill.—Messrs. Randall, Moran and J. M. Farley, of Sidney, were in town last week.

Stricken With Paralysis.

Miss Mary Burdett, sister of the late S. B. Burdett, was stricken with paralysis at an early hour this morning. Dr. Farley was summoned and did all he could to restore the lady, but she still lies in an unconscious condition. One side is totally paralysed.

SOME DAMAGE FROM ICE.

Some of the Sidewalk and Railing on Mill St. Torn Up.

The ice shove yesterday did about $30 damage to the sidewalk and the guard rail on Mill st. The walk was torn up for a distance of about forty feet just above Brown's foundry, but none of the planking was carried away. Some of the rail was taken down the river, but $30 will repair all the damage.

Street Surveyor Hulme was on the spot this morning with a gang of men repairing the break. He told a reporter that had he been allowed to fill the piers under the walk with stone, as he had started to do last year, there would have been no break to speak of, and his contention is borne out by the fact that the walk upon the piers filled in was not moved.

The upper bridge had a close call, and it was more good luck than anything else that it was not carried away. The ice between the centre piers had not been cut or loosened, and when the jam came against it there was no outlet and it banked up level with the flooring. Parties who saw the jam expected to see the structure swept down stream, but fortunately the ice on either side gave way and relieved the strain.

All along the river from the railroad bridge down, the banks are strewn with immense cakes of ice, showing that the water must have been very high. A party who drove in from Corbyville says there is no ice to speak of from there down.

The head of the jam is below Walker's dam, and is gradually wearing away.

It is the general opinion that the cutting off of Ashery Point and the deepening of the western channel had the effect of carrying the body of ice in the direction of Holton's mill, where it could do no damage. The revetment wall built along the west bank of the river below the lower bridge, also proved an efficient guard and demonstrated the wisdom of these improvements.

The wood gatherers are reaping their harvest at the mouth of the river to-day and some venturesome individuals had narrow escapes this morning from duckings in the cold water.

Montreal Markets

MONTREAL, March 25.—Grain—Wheat is the feature at present. The demand is brisk and Ontario millers are doing the buying. Sales Saturday afternoon and to-day amounted to about 15,000 bushels No. 1 hard wheat, and the values were 77c to 78c. Oats are in fair demand, with sales at 42c. Peas and barley are quiet but steady. Wheat, No. 1 hard, 76c to 78c; wheat, No. 2 hard, nominal; corn, duty paid, nominal; peas, per 60 lbs., in store, 69c to 70c; oats, per 34 lbs., store, 39½c to 41½c; rye, No. 2, 52½c to 54c; barley, feed, 49c to 50; barley, malting, 58c to 59c.

FLOUR—The little flurry in Ontario flour for Quebec is pretty well over now, and things are consequently a little quieter; the amount of business in this direction probably amounted to 10,000 or 15,000 barrels during the week. Manitoba flour is in fairly good request with prices firm. Millers says they have refused a number of export orders. Straight rollers, $3 to $3.10; extra, $2.50 to $2.70; superfine, $2.35 to $2.40; fine, $2.25; strong bakers', Manitoba, $3.65 to $3.70; strong bakers', Manitoba, best brands, $3.70 to $3.75; spring patents, Manitoba, $3.90.

MEAL—Millers are still pretty firm in their views, but there is no radical change here. The amount of business doing is rather small. Granulated and rolled, per brl., $4.10 to $4.15; granulated and rolled, per bag, $1.90 to $2.05; standard, per brl., $3 to $4; standard, per bag, $1.90 to $2.

FEED—The market is about steady, with a fair demand passing. Bran, $19 to $20; shorts, $20; mouillie, $21 to $22.

CHEESE—There is a little new fodder cheese offering on the market, but there is very little demand for it. Finest old is quoted at 10c to 10½c, but holders are not anxious sellers at any price.

Butter—Scarcely any business is doing at present. A few tubs of real fine Government butter have sold at 21½c to 22c, but there is little or no demand for other grades. Creamery, finest late made, 21c to 21½c; townships, 15c to 17c; western, 10c to 12c.; rolls, 14c to 15c.

Eggs—Receipts were very light to-day and the market showed a little new strength, which in all likelihood will be lost to-morrow. Fresh sold at 15c to 15½c.

LIVE STOCK MARKETS.

MONTREAL, March 23.—There was quite a lot of business done in the country this week. Prices, however, for export stock are firm. Cable advices report steady markets on the other side. American cattle are quoted at 11c to 11½c per lb. and sheep from 12c to 15c. At the Point St. Charles market the only feature worth note was the arrival of seven cars of cattle consigned to Sheridan for export. Butchers' cattle were very quiet. There were about 500 head of butchers' cattle, 150 calves, 100 sheep and a dozen spring lambs offered for sale at the East End Abattoir to-day. Trade in cattle was not bad, but prices were rather lower than on Thursday, and considerably lower than on last Monday. The best butchers' cattle sold at from 3½c. to 4c. per lb.; pretty good stock sold at from 3¼c. to 3½c. and rough half-fatted beasts at from 2½c. to 3c. per lb. Bulls were plentiful, and some of them were rather scrubby looking. Prices of bulls ranged from 2c. to 3½c. per lb. The calves were generally a poor lot, and sold at from $2 to $4 for common and from $5 to $8 each for good ones. Sheep sell at from 3½c. to 4½c. per lb., with good yearling lambs up to 5c. per lb. Fat hogs are advancing in price, and sell at from 5c. to 5½c. per lb.

THOSE IRON AND STEEL INDUSTRIES

Kingstonians Think That They Have Secured them—Another Enterprise in Prospect.

The Kingston News says in its issue of yesterday:

There is a fair chance that the Dominion Steel Company will establish itself in this city after all. Mayor Wright has been in communication with the members of the Company for three or four days past, and has received a telegram from them which gives good ground for the belief that the terms proposed by Ald. Gaskin and McKelvey will be accepted. The Mayor is waiting for a letter which he expects will arrive to-day. If it does a meeting of the special committee will be called for this afternoon to deal with the proposals of the iron men.

If the Company should decide to accept the terms offered and settle here, four distinct industries will be erected, namely, a blast-furnace or smelter, the machinery of which is guaranteed to be of the most modern design, a steel plant, a billet and a rolling mill, equipped with the latest improvements in machinery. The contract price of the whole is guaranteed to be not less than $600,000.

The Company, it is understood, has invited the city to send an expert to inspect the plant in operation on the other side of the line before the bargain is made binding.

Mr. A. Chadwick said to-day that the matter would be settled within 48 hours. The Company had wired a general acceptance of the city's proposals and only details were yet to be arranged.

The industries, if established here, would employ from 300 to 500 men.

This does not accord with the statement of Mr. G. E. Hamilton in this city, that Belleville should have the first chance.

In the same issue the News says:

A former resident of this city, now connected with a large manufacturing establishment in the United States, is endeavoring to have the firm establish a Canadian works in Kingston. The company in question is doing a thriving business in the manufacture of a number of patented articles. Several offers have been made already by some Western Ontario municipalities, which are desirous of securing the factories of the firm. A letter from the former Kingstonian referred to states that the firm would erect a plant, costing about $16,000 and would guarantee to employ from 25 to 50 men all the year round, but probably double that number on condition of receiving a cash bonus of $10,000 and exemption from taxes and water rates for 20 years. These inducements has been offered already by a western town, but if Kingston would do the same the writer thinks that the works would be brought here, as the Company is desirous of settling in a city like Kingston or Belleville. "If Kingston will not," he concludes significantly, "probably Belleville will." An offer probably will be sent by the firm to the Council at an early date.

Wipe out the N. P., as the Grits propose, and such offers will cease to trouble Canadian municipalities. The Yankees would manufacture for our market in their own country, and not only keep at home the men whom they would employ and the money which they would be obliged, under our present tariff, to expend in Canada, but would also destroy many of our existing industries.

PLAINFIELD.

On Sunday last the annual missionary sermons were preached in our village. In the morning at the west church the Rev. Mr. Neville, of Canifton, preached a very practical sermon from the 15th verse of the 16th chapter of St. Marks. Mr. Neville has the appearance of a boy, but he is a grand pulpit orator. In the evening the Rev. J. A. McCamus, Chairman of the District, preached in the East church from the 1st verse of the 24th chapter of St. Mathew. We think it it a rare treat to listen to him. After the sermon the Rev. Mr. Neville gave us a short address which was also appreciated.—Mr. John H. Caverly, son of Mr. P. V. Caverly, has got home after spending four years in Uncle Sam's domains.—Mr. Mills Caverly, of Marmora, spent Sunday with his brother Mr. P. V. Caverly, who is seriously ill.—Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Caverly, of Foxboro, and Mr. Gilbert Horton also spent Sunday at Mr. Caverly's.—Mrs. Shire, of Tamworth, has been spending a few days with her father, Mr. Caverly. — We have to report the following on the sick list: Mrs. Thos. Carroll, Mrs. Bradshaw, Mr. John W. Hicks, Tweed; son of the Rev. Mr. Williams, and Mr. George Anderson.—George Shepard is moving to Forest Mills to get ready for making cheese.—Mr. W. W. Caverly, Dist. Treas. of the C.O.O.F., has gone to Port Hope to attend the Lodge.—The snow is about gone here, and sugar making will be the order of the day soon.—A taffy pull at J. F. McKenzie's last night.—Herman Hodgins has returned from the shanty, after putting in a successful winter there.

MELROSE

MARCH 27th.—Some of the farmers have tapped their bush, but with poor success, as the season is not right for sugar yet.—Mr. Joseph Patterson has rented the Tripp farm and has moved into the neighborhood. He is now in a position to do well, as the farm contains 150 acres and he has a large stock of cows, sheep and horses.—Mr. John Morden is home from a trip over to Prince Edward County.—Mr. Geo. Lazier is home again.—Two sleigh loads of the young folks went over to Plainfield one night last week to surprise somebody. They arrived at about six in the morning.

Tree Planting.

To the Editor of the INTELLIGENCER.

SIR,—As the season for tree planting will soon be here I would like to offer a few remarks on that subject.

Tree planting in beautiful Belleville has been done very extensively, but in many cases not too well. Along the streets where new avenues are to be planted the work should be superintended by the Street Surveyor, as the old system of allowing everyone to plant opposite his own lot has had the effect in too many cases of far too close planting, which makes not fine trees, but a lot of brushwood, and when thining out is resorted to the trees left are often unsightly. No avenues should be planted closer than forty feet apart; fifty is better. A very good plan is to put in a stake at each end of the street to be planted, then divide the length of the street into forty or fifty feet spaces, putting in a stake where each tree is to be planted. And why always plant maples? There are other trees far more graceful. Of course the maple is a handsome tree, but we have too many of them. If all the beautiful residences on Bridge street were alike, the eye would tire looking at them; and so with the trees. It is time lovely Relleville should get out of the old rut in tree planting. Why not plant elm or limes (basswood) or chestnuts, or the lovely weeping birch. And why not plant some of the catalpa, with its glorious leaves and immense trusses of lilac and pink flowers? In general trees are planted too large. They are unsightly and more apt to die than smaller trees, and trees if got from a nurseryman with poor roots should just be returned. A great many nursery men send out trees of all sorts lifted carelessly, the roots mutilated and more likely to die than to live. It is poor satisfaction to have to plant year after year in the same spot. I will say something about evergreens next week.

CANADIAN BUTTER.

(Montreal Star, March 25.)

Prof. Robertson passed through Montreal to-day on his return journey from the Maritime Provinces. He attended conventions at central places in New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island. The prospects are good for a large extension of dairying there during the summer. About thirty new factories are being put up and will be in operation after June 1. The snowstorms were very bad during the past fortnight. The Island railways were blocked several days, and Mr. Robertson drove over one hundred miles through what were called impassable roads to meet his engagements. The SS. Stanley was stuck out in the ice between Georgetown and Pictou and the return was made by the ice boats between the capes, where the crossings have been good during the winter.

When asked as to the shipments of butter to the Old Country, the Professor replied: "The shipment of butter under the Government auspices is meeting with excellent success in Great Britain. This week's shipments will number over three packages in nineteen different lots. Reports to hand from merchants in Manchester show that our butter is meeting with an excellent reception there. The fear was expressed by some of the Montreal butter merchants that winter-made creamery butter from Canada would not campare favorably with the fresh made butter from Australia and New Zeland. The facts quite justify the statement made by the Dairy Commissioner, that the Canadian butter when known, would more than hold its own. The following are extracts from the report of the first experimental shipment:

"The high color of Australian is against even the best qualities. The paler the color the better the demand in this market."

"We are much pleased with the quality."

"These will sell in preference to Australian in this market, being paler in color, and at least equal in flavor. For these we made 86s to 90s, which is more than Australian brought. Most of our customers were surprised at the quality of this parcel, as they expected Canadian to be somewhat inferior."

"If you can ship quality equal to 'Chesterville' (one of the Government Dairy stations) we can handle all you send."

Dangers of Delay.

If we were allowed to look into the future and see the fatal consequences that follow a neglected cold, how differently would our course be; could we realize our danger, how speedily we would seek a cure; but with many it is only when the monster disease has fastened its fangs upon our lungs that we awaken to our folly. What follows a neglected cold? It is not diseases of the throat and lungs, bronchitis, asthma, consumption, and many other diseases of like nature. Is it worse than madness to neglect a cold, and it is folly not to have some good remedy available for its frequent complaint. One of the most efficacious medicines for all diseases of the throat and lungs, is Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup. This medicine is composed of several medicinal herbs, which exert a most wonderful influence in curing consumption and other diseases of the lungs and chest. It promotes a free and easy expectoration, soothes irritation and drives the disease from the system.

EIGHT MINUTES OF THREE.

A DETECTIVE STORY

CHAPTER V.

The day of the trial arrived in May. Daryl and I had arranged our plan carefully. We were to let the prosecution sail along with only a perfunctory show of objections and the most careless of cross-examinations and wait for Mrs. Prineveau to get on the stand. Daryl kept out of court, and the state had everything its own way. The killing was shown, the post-mortem gone over and the bullet and pistol shown and identified, and the ownership established. I let each witness go by without an attempt to confuse or invalidate his testimony, and only cross-examined the girl, Rosy, in accordance with Daryl's suggestion.

"One moment, Miss Kenny," I said, as she was leaving the stand. "You have testified that Mrs. Prineveau alone assisted Mr. Prineveau to dress for the ride?"

Rosy—"Yes, sir; she always helped him to dress."

"When you came into the room was he completely dressed?"

"No, sir; he had his waistcoat on, but not his coat, and he was going into his own room to get it."

"And Mrs. Prineveau called after him to hurry, as it was eight minutes of three?"

"Yes, sir."

"Now, Miss Kenny, try and recall if Mrs. Prineveau did not say anything else before they left the house?"

"O, yes, sir. She called back to me on the stairs and told me to keep her door locked, as there were strange men working on the roof."

"What were they doing there?"

"Fixin' the tin."

"How many of them?"

"Two or three, I guess."

"That will do, Miss Kenny."

So transparently puerile and nude of any mark was all this to John Greve that he came to me at recess and in his large patronizing way said, as he laid his hand on my shoulder:

"Harry, my dear fellow, you'll have to get up some steam and make a show of earning your retainer. By Jove, I recommended you!"

Daryl on the other hand was in the best of humor when we met in my study.

"Capital, capital," said he. "Couldn't be better. The two or three men on the roof is a surprise. The evening papers are playing into our hands beautifully.

"One of them says: 'The counsel for the defense had to be waked up at intervals and asked to say a few words and then went to sleep again.' That's a godsend.

"If Mrs. Prineveau is not lulled into a profound sense of security by this time then I'm an Injin. Keep your eye on her when I come into court and sit down by your side."

The next day, after a good deal of medical testimony about the aorta and bullet wounds, all of which I let go without a word, Mrs. Prineveau was called. It was rather late in the afternoon. She came forward richly but plainly dressed, looked every inch a dignified but sorrowful widow and won everybody's sympathy at once. When she had seated herself in the witness box with calm and prepossessing candor, John Daryl came in through the crowd and sat down at my side. I was watching her closely, and saw plainly enough the muscles of her mouth twitch and her glance turn involuntarily toward John Greve for reassurance. But neither John Greve nor anybody else but myself saw anything.

Her testimony, given in a clear, direct manner and with the low, soft convincing tones of a lady, was merely corroborative of what we already knew. She was carried over the facts and restated them.

When the examination, without a single exception on my part, had been concluded, I began the cross-examination.

"Madame," I said, "it is in evidence that there was no clock in your dressing room, and that when you had put Mr. Prineveau's vest upon him and he had gone into his room, you called after him and asked him to hurry as it was eight minutes of three. Will you kindly tell the jury how you knew at that moment the exact time?"

The full import of this question, very rapidly put, came upon her all at once. According to Daryl's theory she had looked at the silver watch before putting it into Mr. Prineveau's vest pocket, and this was the first intimation she had received that we were in full cry after the watch.

There was a dead silence in the court room, caused by the curiosity of the listeners to find out what this question had to do with the murder.

I saw her hand tighten on the rail in front of her and her eyes dart from Daryl to me with a quick gleam of alarm. It was a critical moment for her, and she and the two men in front of her alone knew it.

Then, to my astonishment and chagrin, she seemed to recover herself, and with the same placid and candid voice as before she said:

"The clock on the church tower of St. Mary's is visible from my window, and I saw the time on that. It was eight minutes of three."

"Adjourn the cross-examination," whispered Daryl, hoarsely, to me.

"Your honor," I said, "it is now fifteen minutes of the hour of adjournment, and the witness is fatigued. I ask you to let the further cross-examination of the witness go over till morning."

I heard the suppressed laugh that went round the counsel table and was echoed by the listeners in the court room. But the adjournment was taken, and the moment I got Daryl alone, I said: "Well, you see your theory didn't work. What are we going to do now?"

To my surprise Daryl betrayed something like excitement. "I told you," he said, "that she was a smart woman. But I'll beat her now or hang myself. Go to your rooms and leave orders so that I can see you any time before daybreak tomorrow. I'll be back there, sure."

"What are you going to do?"

"Find those men that were working on the roof."

And with that he darted off, and had a sickly kind of feeling that if he kept his word he would hang himself.

About three o'clock the next morning he woke me up with an outrageous ringing of the door gong. I slipped on my dressing gown, rubbed a wet towel over my head and face and went down. His long legs were stretched out in the study.

"Now, look here," he began, at once. "Let me give you this as straight and briefly as possible. That woman never saw the church clock that day, for it was impossible. She deliberately lied, and that lie is her doom.

"Between her house and the church tower, which is on Twenty-second street, there is on the other side of Twenty-second street, nearest to her house, a building called Hibernia hall. There are two poles on either end of its cornice, and on the 17th of March, which is St. Patrick's day, there was a big banner stretched between them and nobody in Mrs. Prineveau's house could see the church clock. The men on the roof couldn't tell when the dinner hour came, on account of it. I've got the two men, and they will swear positively, and so will the man who keeps the hall. Go back to bed; get your rest and tackle her to-morrow just where you left off."

When the court opened John Greve, with the privileged sarcasm of an old lawyer, said: "The witness is yours, counselor. You can now investigate that church clock."

This was an unlucky speech.

"Madame," I said to Mrs. Prineveau, "at my learned brother's suggestion we will go back to the church clock. Now why did you say you saw the time on that church clock when it was impossible to see it from your house on that day?"

She was taken unawares and repeated after me: "Impossible?"

"Yes," I said, "impossible. There was a large stationary banner stretched on St. Patrick's day between your house and the church tower."

She showed some signs of distress and half turned towards her counsel. He was on his feet in a moment.

"Your honor," he said, "while I am perfectly willing to allow every latitude to my learned young friend in this interesting diversion, I submit that the time of this court cannot be taken up altogether with matters that are obviously irrelevant. The witness may have seen the time by a watch or computed it by the sun."

This was my chance. The witness did see the time on a watch. I said: "But she will not acknowledge it. I now ask you, madame: Did you not see that it was eight minutes of three by a watch?"

Daryl had come in now and his big cavernous eyes were fixed on her. She hesitated a moment and then said:

"I may have done so; I do not remember."

"Do you mean to say that you fixed the time to a minute and do not remember how you did it?"

"I do not remember."

"Then why did you swear yesterday that you fixed it by the church clock?"

"I have been in the habit of so doing when in my room."

"But now you say you may have done it by a watch."

"I may have."

"What watch?"

"I—I cannot say."

I heard Daryl whisper at this moment, hard and fast now: "Don't let her think."

"Was it a silver watch made by Bringdat Frere, Geneva?"

A look of weariness shot across her face. Her lids came down a little tremulously. She made a movement, very slight, of distress. John Greve jumped to his feet to protest, and some one gave her a glass of water.

"The counsel is simply wearying out the witness," said Greve, "with incomprehensible questions. On behalf of the lady, who is distressed and ill I protest."

"And on behalf of justice," I replied, "I ask the jury to observe that the questions about a watch distress both witness and counsel.

"Madame, was it not your husband's silver watch by which you saw the time when you put it in his waistcoat pocket, to be worn over that spot where the bullet hole was made?"

Here the prosecuting attorneys were all on their feet, of course, shouting exceptions. But I kept my eye on the witness. I knew that there was a profound sensation in the court room. I could feel it against my back like a magnetic wave. But I never took my eyes off the woman.

HIS FATE LIES IN THE ANSWERS OF THIS WITNESS.

"Your honor," I said, without turning my head toward the bench, "this is a question of life or death to an innocent man. His fate lies in the answers of this witness. She has deliberately lied in saying that she saw the time from a church clock; and she did it to conceal something. It will save the state and my learned friends a great deal of futile labor to permit the cross-examination to go on now."

"If the counsel will frame his questions to fall within the evidence there can be no objection," said the judge.

"Madame, your husband carried a watch?"

She bowed her head.

"Did he buy that watch or did you?"

"I may have done so. I have made many purchases for him."

"Can you produce that watch?"

"I suppose so."

"Could you identify it if I produced it?"

She did not immediately answer this question. I could see that a weird change was coming over her. She was making up her mind that Daryl and I knew the whole dire history of her crime, and were merely playing with her. The weary look became more pronounced. Daryl saw this, too, and whispered to me not to forget the waistcoat.

"I ask you, could you identify the watch if we produced it?"

"Yes, I suppose so."

"Could you identify the bullet that fitted into the back of it?"

I stood still while the indignant voices of the prosecution rang out. For I saw what was coming. During the wrangle of objections, she toppled over in a dead faint and struck her head on the bar of the box heavily.

The one thing that I distinctly heard in the confusion that followed was Daryl's husky whisper: "Look out now that she don't kill herself before she makes a confession. The jig's up. I'm going over to tell Mrs. Clarkson."

But he didn't go to Mrs. Clarkson's till the next day. He got shunted off quite unexpectedly. As soon as he learned that Mrs. Prineveau had been taken from the court room to a neighboring hospital, he went straight to the house and, getting in by some means, ransacked the whole establishment with one of the central office men, until he found the watch.

It was the most ingenious piece of mechanism I ever saw. If you set it of eight minutes of three it fired off a fulminating cap and drove the silver-plated bullet in the back with sufficient force to bed itself for half an inch in a soft piece of wood, for we saw it tried in Superintendent Byrnes' office.

To Purchase Carlyle's House.

A fund has been started in England with the object of purchasing, repairing and maintaining as a museum Thomas Carlyle's London house, 24 Cheyne Row, Chelsea.

The members of the Committee of the Fund include the Earl of Rosebery, Prof. Huxley, Lord Houghton, Lord Tennyson, Archdeacon Farrar and many others of rank and distinction.

It is proposed to raise a total sum of $20,000.

The Carlyle house is a handsome specimen of real Queen Anne archirecture. In one room may be seen the fireplace and mantel before which Carlyle spent a famous silent evening with Tennyson. The stone-paved kitchen has the same open grate on which Mrs. Carlyle made her marmalade "pure as liquid amber" in taste and in look almost poetically delicate. Here, too, Leigh Hunt's Scotch porridge was stirred. The house is now for sale, unoccupied, and in a dilapidated condition.

They are just the medicine to take if troubled with Indigestion or Dyspepsia.

Wall Paper

THE designs of our spring wall papers are beautiful and the colorings exquisite. The effects they produce upon the wall have been studied with intelligent sympathy and the "long-felt-wants" of a few years ago have been provided for with cultivated taste. A judicious employment of any of our papers leaves little to be done in a room. A few ornaments, according to the taste or wealth of the occupant, are all that is necessary to contribute to its beauty and comfort. Our papers thoroughly represent the standard of the prevailing taste in Interior Decorations.

MANITOBA'S ANSWER.

An Outspoken Editorial Inspired by Greenway.

A STAND THERE IS NO MISTAKING.

"We Shall Hold to the Principles of Equal Rights for All, and That Principle Shall Be Dearer to Us Than Confederation Itself"—Refusal to Accede to the Order.

Winnipeg, March 28.—The Tribune, which is the organ of the Greenway Government, contained this editorial last night. It is regarded as official, and may be taken as Greenway's reply to the Remedial Order. It is headed "Manitoba's Answer," and says:

The Remedial Order has been read in the Legislature. We are asked to restore the school system that was in operation previous to 1890. Let Quebec and Ottawa rest assured that the restoration will never be made.

Manitoba has too keen a sense of justice, too much regard for truth and equity, to recognize as a religious aristocracy an element of its population of by no means the most worth. As a civilized people attempting to realize in a measure the ideals of the nineteenth century Manitobans will not silently submit to the preposterous demand that they should turn back the wheels of progress 300 years. They will stubbornly refuse to supplant modern civilization by medievalism. This whole question is not a quarrel between Manitoba and the Dominion, it is not even a quarrel between races and creeds, it is a struggle as to whether the ideals of the nineteenth century, or the ideals of the dark ages, shall prevail.

The Act of 1890 was designed to give to every child in the land the benefit of a common school education. It recognized neither class nor creed, but placed all on the level of common citizenship. It aimed at developing in this noble land a unity of sentiment, a strong feeling of brotherhood, and it sought to sink all prejudices and class distinctions, through making all equal in the sight of the law. Could anything be more wise? Could anything be more just? Yet, what was the attitude of the Roman Catholic Church, standing aside, wrapped up in its black mantle of arrogance? It demanded that it should be considered a religious aristocracy. It refused to have children of its members receive instruction side by side with the children of those who are their superiors in intelligence and wisdom, and on what grounds? It said Catholics were promised different treatment from others by the act that called the province into existence.

Then, when shown that even if this were true, which it is not, no just citizen would claim a fulfilment of the promise, since it would violate one of the foundation principles of state organization, equal rights to all, it gave as a second reason that the Public schools are Protestant. If the refusal of a Roman Catholic to act as a member of the Department of Education, and of the Archbishop to act as a member of the advisory board, could make the schools Protestant, then they are so, otherwise not a shadow of proof has been advanced in support of their claim.

Why doesnotthe Roman Catholic Church out with the truth at once, why not advance the real reason for discontent? Rome is not in accord with the spirit of the age. It is wedded to a dead past. Medievalism cannot or will not coalesce with modern thought. In place of the act of 1890, what a substitute is offered! We are asked to set creed against creed and race against race, to break up the unity that should exist, to mutually support each other in wrong-doing, to make the state the teacher of religious truth, for when Romanists and non-Romanists combine their wealth and then draw from the joint fund, it is clear as day that each is a partner in the work of the other. How can any Romanist, believing that Protestant schools are teaching errors, conscientiously support them, and how can any Protestant, believing that the religious teaching of the Romanish Church is false, agree that a portion of his taxes should be devoted toward the support of such teaching? No, anyone who has the least sense of justice, anyone who is patriotic even in the slightest degree, anyone who believes that all citizens are equal in the sight of the law, and that what is good enough for one is good enough for all, must stand by the act of 1890. And this is our answer to Quebec.

We shall not allow the state to support religion; we shall not allow the church to control the state; we shall not return to the civilization of the dark ages. We shall not recognize Rome as better, or in any way different from others. We shall hold to the principles of equal rights for all, and that principle shall be dearer to us than Confederation itself.

The Free Press has the following to say, editorially: As we have before stated there is no probability of this Legislature complying with the Order, and we may add that the wisdom of sending an Order in the terms of the present is very doubtful; it is an attempt to coerce Manitoba at the dictation of those by whom this people will not be coerced, and tends to increase the difficulty of finding a solution of the question.

There is now little doubt that, whatever course the Government may pursue, the Opposition in the Legislature will vote against any proposal to reject the Remedial Order in its entirety, and will urge some form of compromise. They may suggest the settling of the question by arbitration. Premier Greenway is as dumb as an oyster as to his intentions; so also are the members of his Cabinet, but there is a growing idea that they may offer a purely secular school system as an alternative. This is not likely to help matters, however, for Catholic and Protestant clergy will undoubtedly refuse to sanction what they call Godless schools.

The Order will certainly come up for discussion to-morrow, probably at the evening session. Unless most of the members are anxious to air their views, the answer may be decided on and prorogation take place by the end of the week.

Non-Sectarian Schools in Minnesota.

St. Paul, Minn., March 27.—In the House yesterday Representative Soule introduced a bill which is aimed at the so-called Faribault school plan. It prohibits the introduction, use or display of sectarian instruction, influences or costumes in Public schools. The bill also makes it unlawful for any public school teacher to use any creed or sectarian book in any Public school, and no Public school is to be held in any building owned by churches. Penalties of fine and disqualification are imposed.

A PATRON SET-BACK.

Two of Their Bills Voted Down Yesterday.

LIVELY DAY IN THE LEGISLATURE.

Election of County Officials Bill Defeated By 45 Majority—Only 15 Votes In Favor of the Medical Bill—New Bills Introduced.

Toronto, March 28.—Mr. Haycock's "gallant little band" of Patrons suffered badly at the hands of the Local Legislature yesterday afternoon. The party brought up two of their pet schemes—one for the election of all county officials by popular vote, instead of by appointment by the Provincial Government, as at present; and the other the much-talked-of Medical Bill, which was so odious to the doctors. With neither of these reforms would the House have anything to do, and as a result the Patrons are sadly disappointed.

The first question came up on the following resolution, moved by Mr. McNicol:

"That in the opinion of this House all county officials, paid by the county, except County Judges, should be elected by a direct vote of the municipal electors, the existing system of Government inspection being continued, and office held during efficiency and good behavior, that where incompetency or irregularity occur in any office, the inspector shall lay his complaint before a non-partisan tribunal, to be specified by an act of this House, who shall have power to act."

Mr. Haycock seems to have been elected the spokesman of the party; to him is left all the talking. In accordance with this principle, Mr. McNicol allowed his leader to explain the motion. In doing so Mr. Haycock started out with a complaint against the Government for having declined to bring in a return showing the occupation and residence of the various witnesses before the Fees Commission. He had noticed, he said, that among the witnesses was a registrar and a sheriff, two officials to whose evidence he attached little weight. "We hold," then, continued the member for Frontenac, "that if the people of this country have enough intelligence to elect the men who appoint these county officials, they ought to have intelligence enough to elect the officers." But aside from that Mr. Haycock contended that the officers were not elected by the representatives of the people immediately interested, and gave as an instance the appointment of an official in North Toronto. In such a case, he argued that the vacancy shold be filled up, not by the people's representatives, but by gentlemen whom the people refused to send to the Legislature as their representatives.

"We contend," he went on, "that the appointments are merely rewards for political services. We contend that the Government have been strengthened and kept in power to a large extent by the use of these offices. We contend that some of these officers are too highly paid, that, over and above what is a legitimate rate, an additional sum is allowed, which serves as a reward for political services." He could, he asserted, give instances where sheriffs who were paid $1500 per annum employed a deputy at $400, and did practically no work at all themselves. Allowing another $400 for expenses, these sheriffs performed the duties of the office for $800. It seemed to him that these men had got more business ability than the Government, or else the latter were not using their ability in the best interests of the province. He further charged the Government with holding open, when vacancies occurred, the appointment of officers until after elections in order to influence the said elections.

No one else desired to speak to the motion, so, at the Patrons' request, a division was taken, with the result that the resolution was defeated by a majority of 45, the vote being: Yeas 20, nays 65.

The Patrons and the two P.P.A. members voted solid for the motion. The Liberals opposed it with the exception of Mr. McLean, as did the Conservatives with the exception of Mr. Reid. Mr. Haggerty voted with the Patrons.

The second debate occurred on the second reading of the amendment to the Medical Act, which was moved by Mr. Haycock. The bill has been a thorn in the side of the profession ever since it was introduced, and numerous petitions were presented to the House, praying that it be not allowed to pass.

In explaining his reason for proposing to restrict the powers of the Medical Council, and, instead, placing them in the hands of the courts, Mr. Haycock said: "While we agree that the public ought to be protected, we claim that the duty of protecting the public ought to devolve upon the responsible Government of this country, and not upon an irresponsible body." In place of the Medical Council, the leader pointed out that the bill provided for a Board of Examiners, who would prepare an examination which should be uniform in all the medical colleges of Ontario.

"'We do not,'" he said, "believe in class legislation; nor do we believe that any man has a right to be tried in any star chamber," and later on: "'I am informed that there are medical men in Toronto who sell blank certificates at $12 a dozen to undertakers, and the undertaker fills in the cause of death himself."

Mr. Stratton considered the bill one of the most injurious that had been before the Legislature for some time. He thought they should wait until the medical men asked for such legislation before bringing about such a revolution. He moved, in amendment, that the bill be read "this day, six months."

Mr. Haycock, in reply, said it would be just as well to wait for manufacturers to ask for a reduction in the duty on their cloths, or for the Senate to ask for its own abolition, as to wait for the doctors to move in the direction indicated by the bill.

Sir Oliver Mowat delivered a most vigorous speech in denunciation of the bill. It appeared to him that Mr. Haycock had demonstrated that it was not a bill in the public interest. The medical profession was the most important of all the professions; it was a most learned and an honorable profession. The bill which had been introduced was a revolutionary bill—(hear, hear)— and a very strong case ought to be made in order to induce the House to pass such a measure. To him it contained nothing which would justify them in retaining it or supporting it. (Loud applause.)

Mr. Whitney said Mr. Haycock had declared against class legislation. "Why," he shouted, "'Mr. Haycock sits here to-day as the result of class legislation; there is no class legislation in Ontario, except in favor of the protection of the class to which he belongs." He knew why the bill had been presented. Last spring a set of adventurers were let loose upon the eastern portion of the province and they had endeavored to persuade the farmers that the doctors and the lawyers were drawing the life-blood from them. (Laughter.) The bill had been introduced in conformity with those assertions, and to destroy the usefulness of the medical profession. He had no doubt the Patrons would go on and try and destroy the usefulness of other professions. "'There has been a time in British history," concluded Mr. Whitney, "when such bills as this were burned by the common hangman." (Laughter.)

When Mr. Speaker put the question, there was a loud roar of yeas for the amendment, which consigned the measure to oblivion, and a very weak response from the nays. The Patrons did not seem anxious for a record of the vote, but all the other members were, so a count was taken, with this result: Yeas 71, nays 15; majority 56.

The Liberals voted solid for the amendment, with the exception of Mr. McLean, who voted for the bill, and the Conservatives also registered solid for it. The Patrons all voted for the bill, excepting Mr. Pardo.

Hon. Mr. Dryden brought in a Government bill for the further protection of persons employed in places of business, other than factories. The bill gives the Government power to appoint inspectors for the enforcement of the present act, the salaries of such inspectors to be fixed by the Lieut.-Governor, and paid by the municipal councils, and one of the persons appointed is to be a woman.

The Minister of Agriculture also introduced a bill to amend the Factories Act, providing for additional fire protection, the reporting of accidents to the Minister of Agriculture, protecting machinery while in motion and for the appointment of a female inspector.

The Attorney-General introduced a bill respecting the relations of landlord and tenant. It allows the removal of tenants' fixtures at the end of the term, and amends the short form of Leases Act and several other particulars. It restricts the lien of the landlord for rent after an assignment has been made to arrears of rent of one year previous to and for three months following the assignment. It further enacts that the relation of landlord and tenant shall be deemed to be founded in the express or implied contract of the parties, and not upon tenure or service, and a reversion shall not be necessary to such relation, which shall be deemed to subsist in all cases where there shall be an agreement to hold land from one another in consideration of any rent.

Hon. Mr. Harcourt introduced a bill to make further provision for the public health. It relates to the constitution of local boards of health, the establishment of waterworks systems or sewerage systems to be subject to the Provincial Board of Health, and to prevent the feeding to hogs of blood or meat or of dead animals which have not been previously boiled or steamed when fresh.

Hon. Mr. Hardy brought in a bill to amend the Municipal Act.

Mr. Willoughby introduced a bill to amend the Game Protection Act of 1893 by repealing the subsection limiting the number of duck that may be killed in any one season by one person to 400, and by providing that no person shall be liable for shooting game upon the lands of other persons unless he knows or has good reason to believe that such game is preserved.

Replying to Mr. Whitney, the Attorney-General said he was unable to say what was the total cost of the Fees Commission, owing to the fact that he had not yet received the accounts of the commissioners. The amount so far paid to the secretary of the commission towards expenses was $3550.

Replying to Mr. Ryerson Mr. Ross said the Government was not prepared to make any proposition for the amendment of the school laws granting privileges to the teachers of Quebec in Ontario to which the British North America Act would not apply.

Mr. Whitney asked this question, drawn up on the lines of the Government amendment respecting aid to dairy farmers: Is it the intention of the Government to give financial aid to facilitate the carriage in cold storage of the dairy products of the province to the ports of shipment in Great Britain, and to supply cold storage for such products in such of the cities of Great Britain as may be necessary in the interests of the trade?

Mr. Dryden replied: The Government of the Dominion, having announced their intention to provide cold storage accommodation for the shipment of butter to the British market, it does not at the present time appear necessary that the province should duplicate such aid.

Answering Mr. McLean, the Minister of Agriculture said that the speakers at farmers' institutes were elected on the grounds of ability and experience and with no regard to political leaning whatever.

Mr. Harty told Mr. McKay that the Government intended at an early date to have the monument erected to the memory of the late Hon. George Brown removed to a more suitable location, south of the Parliament Buildings.

Mr. Ross told Mr. Whitney that it was not the intention of the Government to establish a Normal School at Woodstock or elsewhere at present.

In the Municipal Committee Mr. Reid's bill to extend the Statute Labor Act in force in townships to villages was lost. Mr. Little's bill to have farm lands assessed in summer met the same fate. Bill No. 88, applying the regulations respecting "gas" to "natural gas," passed. Mr. Stratton's bill to abolish the ward system in towns of more than 4000 was withdrawn.

The bill respecting transient traders will be considered on Friday, Mr. Richardson's bill re market fees on April 3 and Mr. German's bill to tax telegraph and telephone poles and wires on April 4.

Mr. St. John will ask if it is the intention of the Government to take any steps towards ascertaining the quantity, quality, acreage or value of the timber assets of the province?

Hon. J. C. Patterson Nominated in Kent.

Chatham, Ont., March 28.—The Liberal-Conservatives of Kent met in convention yesterday to nominate a candidate. The names of six candidates were presented, viz., Messrs. Hon. J. C. Patterson, H. A. Patteson, W. P. Killackey, T. A. Smith, Dr. W. R. Hall. A ballot resulted in the choice of Hon. J. C. Patterson, whose nomination was then made unanimous. The present member, Archibald Campbell, has been renominated by the Liberals.

Ben Tillet Sues for Libel.

London, March 27.—The trial of the action for libel brought by Ben Tillet, the labor leader, against The Morning (newspaper) began in the Court of Queen's Bench to-day. The ground of the action was an article in The Morning which asserted that Tillet had used his position as secretary of the Dock Laborers' Union to draw an extravagant salary out of the funds raised from half-starved laborers.

A Costly Victory.

Panama, March 27.—The Government has issued a bulletin claiming a victory over the rebels at Boyaca. It was a costly one, however, for out of the 2000 troops under General Reyes, which formed the expedition, 500 dropped off through fatigue or disease during the march, and of the remaining 1500, who gave battle to the rebels, 700 were killed before the victory rested with the Government forces.

Students Who Wear Muzzles.

Library students in Paris now, it is said, wear "muzzles" when perusing the old books in the National Library—"not because there is fear that they will bite the old volumes, but to prevent the inhalation of the book microbes into their lungs." The germ theory is responsible for many curious things, and this is one of them.

TUPPER'S RESIGNATION

Canada's Timber Wealth Fast Diminishing.

FIRST-CLASS PINE NOW ALL GONE.

Statistician Johnson Reports That We Must Soon Stop Exporting Forest Products—The "Third Power Clause" Does Not Apply to British Colonies

Ottawa, March 28.—Assurances have been received from the Imperial authorities that the term "Third Power" in the French Treaty could not be applied to a British colony, in other words, in the event of Canada making preferential trade arrangements with Australia or Cape Colony, France, under her commercial arrangement with Canada, would not be able to claim the same privileges in our markets as would be enjoyed by the sister colonies.

The reported resignation of Sir Charles H. Tupper has been the all-absorbing topic of conversation in the city, and indeed throughout the country, to-day. Telegrams of enquiry from all parts of Canada have been pouring in to Ottawa. The Minister of Justice was not at his office to-day, but the general impression in the city is that there ought to be no difficulty in inducing him to retain his portfolio. It is positively stated that he has no difference of opinion with his colleagues on questions of policy; it is simply one of procedure. Moreover, it is universally conceded that Sir Charles is far too able a man to be allowed to drop out of public life. At this juncture the Liberal-Conservative party needs the services of its best men, and Sir Charles, as one of its ablest leaders, is not likely to do anything that will jeopardise the party's chances of success at the next election.

The report published in a Toronto evening paper that Hon. George E. Foster had resigned is a lie pure and simple.

A splendid report on the forest wealth of Canada, certainly the most complete and voluminous document which has ever been published on this subject, was issued by the Department of Agriculture to-day. The volume is a tribute to the industry of Mr. George Johnson, Dominion Statistician, and his staff. It contains chapters showing the influence of forests on climate, agriculture, etc., the industries depending on forests, value of forest products, yearly consumption, wooded area of Canada and comparison of foreign areas of woodland, opinions of experts of several provinces and a mass of figures bearing upon different phases of the lumbering and timber industry.

Mr. Johnson says that in Canada, in various industries depending for their existence upon the supply of wood, tehre is an invested capital not far from $100,000,000, and an annual wage list of over $30,000,000, with an output valued at close upon $110,000,000.

In addition there are railways which are dependent on the wood supply for railway ties and dimension timber, and in whose freights lumber figures as nearly one-fifth of the total freight carried; canals, of whose freights the products of the forest constitute two-fifths of the total freight carried; mines which require wood for shoring purposes, ships which, themselves chiefly made of wood, find in our exports of products of the forest materials for full cargoes, without which freight rates on goods carried must be higher, nearly one quarter of the exports of home production being products o fthe forest; the leather industry, which depends upon nature's supply of tannin secreted in the bark of trees; the lucifer match industries;y those varied industries which depend in part upon wood such as agricultural implements, edged tools, etc., and the practically new industry of pulp-making, which, within 10 years, has sprung up into an industry with nearly $3,000,000 of invested capital, and over $1,000,000 of annual output.

The value of forest products consumed per capita is estimated approximately.

The value of our forest products, calculated from the census returns of 1891, was $80,071,415. Fore the fiscal year, 1890-91, our imports of wood articles amounted to $3,132,516, while for the same period our exports were $27,207,547, leaving for consumption in Canada $55,996,384, or a value of $15.59 per head.

With respect ot the quantity used the census returns show an aggregate of 2,045,073,072 cubic feet as the total cut of the year. About 30 per cent. of this is exported, leaving 1,431,551,150 cubic feet for annual home consumption. This is equal to 296.2 cubic feet per head of population. B. E. Fernow, chief of the Forestry Division of United States Department of Agriculture, estimates that the per capita consumption of the United States is about 350 cubic feet annually.

From a mass of cited data Mr. Johnson draws these conclusions:

1. That the first quality pine has nearly disappeared.
2. That of the second quality pine there is a considerable supply.
3. That of other timber woods there is a large supply.
4. That we are within measurable distance of the time when, with the exception of spruce as to wood and of British Columbia as to provinces, Canada shall cease to be a wood-exporting country.

Major McLennan, M.P., speaking to your correspondent this afternoon, gave an effective reply to the recent representations of the Ottawa Ministerial Association against the selection of Glengarry as the location for the proposed Dominion reformatory. The deputation, it will be remembered, desired Ottawa to be chosen in place of Alexandria. Referring to the statement that Protestants are not numerous in Glengarry County the Major pointed out that, according to the last census, Protestants form fully 45 per cent. of the population of Glengarry, while in Ottawa they represent only 43 per cent. In the three electoral counties of Stormont, Dundas and Glengarry, which are one municipally and judicially, Protestants are 64 per cent. of the whole, while in the counties immediately adjoining this city, Carlton, Russell and Ottawa, Protestants are only 36 per cent. The Major states that in Glengarry there are only one bishop and seven Roman Catholic priests as against 23 Protestant clergymen, all of whom are zealous and active in looking after the spiritual welfare of their flocks. Mr. McLennan says that the spiritual needs of inmates of the Reformatory at Alexandria would, as at Kingston, St. Vincent du Paul and other penal institutions, be looked after by resident chaplainse, both Catholic and Protestant. He strongly resents the statements made in the memorial presented by the Ottawa ministers, as a slur upon the Protestant population of Glengarry. In that county Protestants and Catholics work in harmony and neither attempts to interfere with the other. Seemingly it is the desire of big cities to gobble up all institutions of this king, and he does not see why they should not be generous enough to allow a country district to receive one without complaint. He was glad to know that Glengarry had been definitely chosen as the location for the site of this institution.

According to the report received at the Marine Department from the captain of the Government steamer Newfield, it appears that the present population of Sable Island is 37. During the past year 51 ponies have been shipped from this ocean graveyard and 32 barrels of cranberries; these representing the total exports; 120 bushels of potatoes were raised on the island. An effort was made to grow some cereals, but grasshoppers and drouth killed off the bulk of these crops. Foxes are increasing in great numbers on the island. The carrier pigeon service is being gradually perfected, 12 birds being now in course of training.

"NO CONFEDERATION."

8000 Newfoundland Hot Heads Parade to the "Dead March."

St. John's, Nfld., March 28.—A delegation, consisting of R. Bond, Colonial Secretary; E. P. Morris, G. H. Emerson and W. H. Harwood, sailed this morning for Ottawa.

At an early hour a crowd began to gather at the rooms of the Anti-Confederation League, until they numbered 8000 voters. A procession was formed, headed by a band and carrying flags and banners inscribed with "No Confederation with Canada," and "Welcome Annexation," and carrying the pink, white and green flag, the flag of the colony, draped with crape.

After parading the principal streets the procession proceeded to the steamer's wharf, where there was a huge throng. Nearly every man, woman and child in the city was there, ready to hiss the delegates, and as the steamer hauled off from the wharf the band played the "Dead March in Saul."

ANOTHER U S BANK CLOSED

Nashua Savings Bank With Three Millions Deposits Shut Up.

Nashua, N.H., March 27.—Great consternation was caused here yesterday by the closing of the Nashua Savings Bank by order of the Bank Commisioners. The bank is one of the oldest institutions of the kind in the city. There were nearly $3,000,000 on deposit, and much of this is the savings of the working people. It is believed the assets are sufficient to pay the depositors in full.

OLD JOHN KIDD IS DEAD.

The 98-Year-Old Husband of a 15-Year-Old Girl Gone to His Long Home.

Orageville, March 28.—John Kidd of Mono Mills died this morning. The old gentleman was in his 99th year, and failed to achieve notoriety until less than a year ago, when he became the husband of a 15-year-old girl. The old man and his bride did not live happily together, in fact the girl-wife deserted her spouse almost before the honeymoon was over. Kidd was an eccentric individual, reputedly wealthy. Mrs. Kidd is at present a resident of Toronto.

Toronto Markets.

Toronto, March 29.—Flour—Prices unchanged. Straight rollers sold at $2.80 to $2.85, Toronto freights.

Wheat—The market is firm, with sales of white at 63 1-2c to 64c west and 64 1-2c on Northern. Spring is unchanged at 65c to 66c on C.P.R. Manitoba wheat is nominal at 82c to 83c west.

Barley—There is a moderate demand for feed barley, with sales outside at 45c to 46c.

Oats—The market is easy, with sales of white at 33 1-2c to 34c, and of mixed at 33c to 33 1-2c.

Too Indulgent.

"I have such an indulgent husband," said Mrs. Peterby to Mrs. Yerger.

"Yes," responded Mrs. Yerger quietly, "my husband says that sometimes Mr. Peterby indulges too much." And now the ladies no longer talk to each other.

I immediately sent (fifty miles) and purchased four bottles, and with only two applications I was able to get around, and although I have not used one bottle, I am nearly well. The other three bottles I gave around to my neighbors, and I have had so many calls for more, that I feel bound to relieve the afflicted by writing to you for a supply."

An Open Letter.

During the winter of 1892-93, I was covered with Pimples on my right leg between the knee and ankle, and sought medical advice, but getting no relief I tried a bottle of B.B.B., applying some of it to my leg as well as using it internally, and the disease disappeared within three weeks, and I am thankful to say has never reappeared.

KNOWLEDGE

Brings comfort and improvement and ends to personal enjoyment when rightly used. The many, who live better than others and enjoy life more, with less expenditure, by more promptly adapting the world's best products to the needs of physical being, will attest the value to health of the pure liquid laxative principles embraced in the remedy, Syrup of Figs.

Its excellence is due to its presenting in the form most acceptable and pleasant to the taste, the refreshing and truly beneficial properties of a perfect laxative; effectually cleansing the system, dispelling colds, headaches and fevers and permanently curing constipation. It has given satisfaction to millions and met with the approval of the medical profession, because it acts on the Kidneys, Liver and Bowels without weakening them and it is perfectly free from every objectionable substance.

Syrup of Figs is for sale by all druggists in 75c. bottles, but it is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only, whose name is printed on every package, also the name, Syrup of Figs, and being well informed, you will not accept any substitute if offered.

BELLEVILLE, THURSDAY, MAR. 28.

A CITY AMBULANCE.

The people of Belleville are indebted to the energy and business capacity of the ladies for the beautiful hospital and Home of which we are all so proud, and it is therefore strictly in accord with the "fitness of things" that a lady should have undertaken to procure an ambulance for the conveyance of patients to the hospital. Miss Gordon, the Lady Superintendent of that institution, has entered upon the task of giving a series of lectures in that behalf, and her contributions toward the object in view will no doubt be very considerable. Still, a large sum will be required in addition, and we trust that the citizens will contribute the necessary amount within a short time. The institution is an excellent one and is fully appreciated by the public, as is proved by the fact that its accommodation is already fully taxed and that its enlargement is now in prospect. An ambulance is a necessity, and we again commend Miss Gordon's project to the favorable consideration of the public.

EDITORIAL BREVITIES.

There are doubtless Conservatives who are dissatisfied with the result of sixteen years of protection, yet doubtful if the policy can be reversed without precipitating a crash. They should recall the historical fact that Sir Robert Peel's tariff reform caused no crash in England. Nor need there be any in Canada, if the work is judiciously undertaken and carried out without faltering.—Hamilton Times.

And the Ontario cries out that nobody is advocating free trade.

Our Grit contemporaries have an interesting time of it denouncing protection and assuring manufacturers and artizans at the same time that the Liberals mean them no harm. "I won't hurt you," said the hangman, as he adjusted the noose on the felon's neck, "You'll die that quick you'll never feel it." Sir Richard Cartwright tells us that "every vestige of protection must be swept away." Mr. Laurier is going to give us "Free Trade as it is in England." The Globe declares that "the tariff must go some time, and the sooner it is abolished the better."

The Young Men's Liberal Club of Guelph provided a real sensation at their public meeting the other night. Among the speakers was Mr. G. B. Ryan, a leading local merchant. He told the audience that he was a Conservative, that he had helped to establish the National Policy, but was now convinced that its effects on Canadian industry were detrimental rather than helpful.—Globe.

No doubt of it. Conservatives who consider that the N. P. has been detrimental to the country's interests are so scarce that, when one sore-head of that sort is found, he causes a sensation amongst the Grits and becomes an oracle amongst them for the time being. Reformers who become converts to the N. P. are so numerous that only the most prominent of them are quoted in the press—such men, say, as Dr. Cameron, ex-M.P.P., and A. F. McIntyre.

Mr. Laurier said at Montreal: "The Liberal party believe in free trade on broad lines such as exists in Great Britain," and the organs of his party are trying to out-bellow each other in the shout "Nobody is advocating free trade."

In 1873, the total foreign trade of the United Kingdom was £682,292,137. In 1893, under the beneficent influence of free trade, it was £681,826,448. There's twenty years of free trade progress for you! Now, taking the population, as a fair estimate from the previous censuses, at 32,500,000 in 1873 and 38,500,000 in 1893, it will be found that the total foreign trade per head declined from about £21 6s in 1873 to £17 14s in 1893. In view of these facts, it would be quite proper to say, according to Grit logic, "Free trade as it is in England, is proving an effective trade destroyer."

A blight seemed to fall over the land when the Grits gained power at Ottawa. The exports of Canadian produce fell from the value of $77,000,000 in 1873 to $67,000,000 in 1878—including the Grit years of office; but rose again to $64,000,000 in 1882. The produce of the mine fell from $5,700,000 in 1873—their first year of office, to $2,762,762 in the year they were bounced out by an indignant and disgusted people. The produce of the forest fell from $8,500,000 in 1873 to $2,923,000 the year they left office. The exports of manufactures fell from $24,400,000 in 1873 to $17,700,000 in 1878. The bank notes in circulation fell from $27,000,000 in 1873 to $20,000,000 in 1878. The Post Office Savings ran down from $3,200,000 in 1873 to $2,600,000 in 1878. The deposits in special savings bank (gilt-edged) stood at $6,700,000 in 1873, but declined to $5,600,000 in 1878. Everything was on the down grade under Sir Richard Cartwright, Mr. Mackenzie, Mr. Mills, et hoc omne genus. Nothing seemed to flourish in their hands. Bank stocks declined in value, and smokeless chimneys multiplied under the malign and paralyzing incubus that had come upon the land.

CAMPBELL'S QUININE WINE.
It will tone up your system, and restore the appetite.
JUST WHAT YOU NEED THIS SPRING.
The best cure for Debility.

We were under the impression that sugar was taxed about 65 per cent.—Brockville Recorder.

Of course Grit papers don't care to inform themselves, or their readers either, as to facts which tell in favor of the Government. Sugar of excellent quality, fit for use on any person's table, is not taxed—sugar such as was taxed by the Grits, when in power, 2⅔c to 3c per pound. It sounds big to say that sugar is taxed 65 per cent., but when it is explained that it is only refined sugar—much of which is greatly inferior to that which is not taxed under the N.P.—that is taxed, and that only to the extent of rather less than two thirds of a cent per pound, the intentional attempt of the Grit press to deceive is manifest. The Mackenzie Government taxed all sugar, some of it as high as 3½ cents per pound. At present prices the percentage of taxation would be more than 100 per cent.

EDOUARD DE RESZKE.

The Celebrated Singer.

Mr. Edouard de Reszke is one of the foremost singers of the time; at present he is charming fashionable audiences in New York, in the lyrical version of "Romeo and Juliet." Recognizing that it is of the utmost importance to the success of the great singer that the system should be kept fresh and elastic, Mr. de Reszke says of the great tonic wine "Vin Mariani:"—"With pleasure I state that 'Vin Mariani' is an excellent tonic, specially useful to singers." This is in harmony with the testimony of many other prominent singers and orators, all of whom agree that "Vin Mariani" has the special virtue of strengthening the voice, besides possessing the power to build up body and brain, enfeebled from excessive strain or overwork. This celebrated tonic-stimulant, containing the medical properties of fresh selected coca leaves, has been used with benefit and delight by most of the great ones of the earth, and if you care to know, not merely what these great ones say, but how they look, send your address to Lawrence A. Wilson & Co., Montreal, and you will receive a number of celebrated portraits free.

Every swell hotel and club are now handling them, and they are recommended by the best physicians as being perfectly pure and highly adapted for invalids' use. Address, Bordeaux Claret Company, 30 Hospital Street, Montreal.

ORIGIN OF SUNDAY.

Mr. Gladstone Explains the Christian Change of the Sabbath.

"The opinion which required a great Sabbatarian strictness, has in all likelihood been largely consequent upon the reformation, and, without much critical investigation of the case, has rested practically upon the fourth commandment of the decalogue as it stands. It did not, however, arise at once out of the great movement, even in Scotland, where it eventually attained a pitch of rigor and exhibited a tenacity of life probably greater than in any other Christian country," writes W. E. Gladstone in McClure's Magazine. "If we measure things not as they are divinely intended, nor as they are in themselves, but as they are subjectively entertained, it might be a question whether the Scottish Sabbath was not for 200 years a greater Christian sacrament, a larger, more vital and more influential fact in the Christianity of the country, than the annual or sometimes semi-annual, celebration of the Lord's Supper, or the initiatory rite of baptism, or both together. I remember that when half a century ago ships were dispatched from Scottish ports to South Australia, then in its infancy, laden with well-organized companies of emigrants, I read in the published account of one of them that perfect religious toleration was established as the rule on board, but that with regard to a fundamental article of religion like the Sabbath, every one was, of course, required to observe it. Many anecdotes might be given which illustrate the same idea—an idea open to criticism, but one with which the Presbyterian church cannot well afford to part without some risk to the public power and general influence of religion.

The seventh day of the week has been deposed from its title to obligatory religious observance, and its perogative has been carried over to the first: under no direct precept of Scripture, but yet with a biblical record of facts, all supplied by St. John, which far toward showing that among the apostles themselves, and therefore from apostolic times, the practice of divine worship on the Lord's Day has been continuously and firmly established. The Christianity took upon itself to alter the form of the Jewish ordinance; but this was with a view to giving larger effects to its spiritual purpose. The seventh day had been ordained as the most appropriate, according to the decalogue, for commemorating the old creation. The advent of our Lord introduced us to a chain of events, by which alone the benefits of the old creation were secured to us, together with the yet higher benefits of the new. The series of these events culminated in the resurrection. With the resurrection began for the Saviour Himself a rest from all that was painful in the process of redemption, as on the seventh day there had begun a rest from the constructive labors that had brought the visible world into existence and maturity.

The seventh day was the festival of the old life, accompanied with an exemption from its divinely-appointed burdens. The first day was the festival of the new life, and was crowned with its constant and joyous exercise. The ordinances of joint worship exhibit one particular form of that exercise. The act of the church of Christian community in al ering the day was founded on this broad and solid analogy; and was also, as has been said, warranted by the evidence of apostolic practice.

The Diplomatic Dufferin.

"I heard the other day," says the editor of London Truth, "a story about Lord Dufferin, which goes to show his ability as a diplomatist. When the French Government had determined to have a Joan of Arc demonstration the French minister of foreign affairs went out of his way to explain to our ambassador that this was in no way intended against England. Lord Dufferin concurred, and pointed out that as the Burgundians had insisted on her execution it was fully realized in England that the demonstration was against Burgundians. The Frenchman had to concur in this. 'I shall be happy to take part myself in the procession,' said Lord Dufferin. The Frenchman smiled in a sickly way. 'Nay, more,' continued Lord Dufferin, 'there is a gentleman at my embassy who is a lineal descendant of the Lord Talbot of that day. He, too, will be delighted to join.' The smile became more sickly. 'In the ancestral halls of the head of his family there is probably the armor of the Lord Talbot of the days of Joan of Arc; his descendant would wear it.' The Frenchman changed the subject of the conversation."

New Women in Corea.

Among the many interesting facts to be gathered from Mr. Savage-Landor's book on Corea, lately published, by no means the least striking is the author's statement that the native queen "is much in favor of the emancipation of the Corean women."

But unfortunately the sympathy of her Corean majesty does not seem at present to have done much toward improving the lot of her feminine subjects; for we are told that work of every kind is done by the women alone, who are practically the slaves of their husbands.

It would seem, after all that the Corean queen's leaning toward general feminine "emancipation" is nothing more than what theologians call a "pious opinion," for Mr. Savage-Landor says "there are tongues in Seoul who say that the queen actually rules the king, and therefore, through him, the country and that he is more afraid of her gracious majesty, his wife, than of the very devil himself."

If this be so, the queen seems rather selfishly inclined to confine the practical realization of her "new woman" theories to her own palace.—Lady's Pictorial.

A Plucky Pandy.

After the man had lain apparently dead for about an hour, someone noticed that he had gradually dragged himself out of the water, till all at once he sprang to his feet and ran like a deer in the direction of the gate of the Badshahibagh. He was still quite within easy range, and several rifles were levelled at him; but Sergt. Findlay, who was on the rampart, and was himself one of the best shots in the company, called out: "Don't fire, men; give the poor devil a chance!" Instead of a volley of bullets, the men's better feeling gained the day, and Jack Pandy was reprieved, with a cheer to speed him on his way. As soon as he heard it, he realized his position, and, like the Samaritan leper of old, he halted, turned around, and putting up both his hands, with the palms together in front of his face, he salaamed profoundly, prostrating himself three times on the ground by way of thanks, and then walked slowly toward the Badshahibagh, while we on the ramparts waved our feather bonnets and clapped our hands to him in token of good-will.—Reminiscences of the Mutiny: W. Forbes-Mitchell.

QUEER DINNER FADS IN PARIS.

From the Shoulders up the Guests Appear in Historical Attire

Paris has a novelty in the way of dinners. The discovery that there were twenty-six carnival days in February led to this innovation in the fashionable world.

The new function combines the attractions of a masquerade with those of an elaborate set dinner. The guests are enabled to dress to suit their individual fancy, selecting characters from history or fiction for their models, and yet are not encumbered save as to their heads, with inconvenient apparel.

The guests come in ordinary evening dress, but from the shoulders up they are obliged to be in some fancy costume.

For men of middle age the following are some of the favorities: The head dressed as an alderman of Paris, with the beret and scarf twined around the neck, framing the picture; as a Leaguer, with a high felt hat, covered with plumes; as a nobleman of the time of Louis XIV. with curled wig, and Louis XV. with powdered wig and peruke tied with broad black ribbon.

The younger men select such headdresses as Pierrot, harlequin, Arab, Mephistopheles or Watteau shepherds, according to their age and type.

Brunettes aspiring to be blondes for one night choose the golden tresses of a Cybele or Ceres crowned with grain, Pomona, with fawn colored hair entwined with grape leaves; Diana, with crescent arising from the waves of her light hair, or the pearl studded cap of a Venetian with blonde curls.

Blondes in turn may don Titian, brown or gray locks, but to complete the illusion the face must be powdered. Even the men use powder, but the powder has to be used with discrimination and skill.

For the table decorations of the "dinners de tetes" the table should be dressed with flowers, which, however, can be replaced by sprigs of mistletoe, interspersed with nice roses and chrysanthemums.

The table cloth should consist of a long strip of bolting cloth, embroidered in natural colors and bordered with surah, upon which are placed the dessert dishes. Dishes of marrons, glaces and candied cherries are also appropriate. Fancy lace-bordered doilies in thin white paper have given place to circles of fine linen edged with fine lace.—New York Herald.

More Than She Wanted.

"Oh! have you gone in for the new costume also, Miss Fortyscue?"

"Yes, yes. And they tell me it makes me look five years younger."

"Five-and-twenty years younger, Miss Fortyscue."

A Railway Curiosity.

Work is about to begin on a railroad in Florida which is a curiosity of its kind. Some time ago the citizens of Avon Park and Haines City, Fla., believed that a transportation route connecting them would be of great advantage. The country is sandy and nearly level. A company was formed, but the people lacked in capital what they made up in enterprise. It has been decided, so The Manufacturers' Record is informed, to build the road with wood rails, which are large enough to be laid so that they will be half imbedded in the sand, without other ballast. They are to be held in position by wooden pins, two inches in diameter and eighteen inches long, while the ends are connected by plank couplers, placed underneath and held by pins. Not a pound of metal will be used in construction of the track, although the line will be forty miles long. Most of the "rails" will be furnished gratis by property owners along the right of way. The company believes that in a few years the fruit, vegetable and passenger business over the route will pay for regular steel rails, when the others will be used for ties. A small steam dummy will furnish power for the Avon Park and Haines City road.

Due to His Appearance.

A rather good story about the Duke of Westminster is now going the rounds. This enormous wealthy peer never did take a great deal of interest in the cut of his garments, and it was never a matter of much concern to him whether he wore a thread-bare and glossy coat or a brand-new one. Consequently, it was not surprising that a lynx-eyed policeman who had been detailed to duty in the grounds of Mr. Gladstone's country seat, Hawarden, at the time of the threatened dynamite plots, should have pounced upon a shabbily dressed individual whom he caught wandering apparently aimlessly about the grounds.

In an aggressive tone the "bobby" demanded to know the stranger's business. "I'm a friend of Mr. Gladstone—I'm—I'm the Duke of Westminster," stammered the astonished man. "Come along with me, will you," chuckled the policeman, hustling his captive off to the house, "and tell that tale up yonder."

The Grand Old Man happened to pass by, and, catching sight of the duke, ordered his immediate release, when the crestfallen policeman, who was too much abashed to make even an attempt at apology, slunk off, leaving his grace of Westminster in a by no means amiable frame of mind.—Chicago Record.

Growth of Cremation.

A large number have become converts to cremation on sanitary grounds. In Europe there are crematories in Dresden, Breslau, Milan, Lodi, Brescia, Padua, Rome, Gotha, Denmark, Belgium, Switzerland, Holland, Sweden, Norway, Paris and England. The first cremation in the United States was on the 6th of December, 1876, the body being that of Joseph Henry Louis Charles, Baron de Palm. The cremation took place at Washington, Pa. At this time there are crematories at Washington, Lancaster, Pittsburg and Philadelphia, in Pennsylvania; Brooklyn and Buffalo, in New York; Detroit, Mich.; St. Louis, Mo., and in San Mateo Co. and Los Angeles, Cal.—San Francisco Call.

In All Cases Paine's Celery Compound Cures and Restores Perfect Health.

Headaches are varied in character, of frequent occurrence, and are produced by a variety of causes. The common headache is often produced by some indiscretion in diet, or deviation from ordinary habits of life. We have also congestive headaches, rheumatic headaches, and bilious and nervous headaches. Women are oftener the victims of these troubles than men. When neglected from day to day grave and fatal consequences often occur.

Some of the ablest and best physicians freely admit that Paine's Celery Compound is the safest, surest and best medicine for every character of headache. Indeed, this opinion is strengthened by the thousands who have given testimony in favor of Paine's Celery Compound.

Headaches being more prevalent in the Spring season, it is of the utmost importance that every sufferer should know how to act. One bottle of Paine's Celery Compound will often permanently cure. Nature's marvellous Spring medicine will, at the same time, build up the entire system.

Science Triumphant at Last.

Miller's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil is the outcome of the latest scientific researches. There was always a prejudice against taking Cod Liver Oil on account of its disagreeable to the palate, and that is one reason why it has become so popular with the medical fraternity, the hospitals of the country and the households wherever consumption or lung troubles prevail. Miller's Emulsion is the great nerve strengthener and blood maker, and cures Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis, Scrofula and all Lung affections. In Big Bottles, 50c. and $1, at all Drug Stores.

Obituary.

The funeral services of the late Martha Way,—wife of Mr. Jos. Langdon, of Ameliasburg, took place on the 27th inst., at the Methodist church on Massassaga Point. One who was so widely known as Mrs. Langdon for her genial, kind christian character, deserves more than passing notice. She was in her sixty-ninth year, but up to a few months ago her years seemed to hang lightly on her head. She led a busy life, yet she had always a smile and a kind word for all. She and her bereaved husband seemed intended for each other, and where you saw one you could be assured the other was not far away. She joined the Methodist church when she was fourteen years old and it is said of her that, hot or cold, wet or dry, you might always expect her at her place in the sanctuary. She did not, either, live for herself. She and her husband loved to take a day visiting friends of other days. Not only that, their own romantic home was ever open, as were their hearts, to all comers. The best the land could afford was none too good for their friends. She leaves behind no children. Her daughter Alwilda, the late Mrs. Frederick, preceded her some years ago to the latter rest. She too left a daughter Alwilda, now Mrs. Franklin Lent, herself a great sufferer from disease. They reside with her grandfather who has our sympathy. The bearers were Messrs. D. Walker, H. M. Snider, Manly Snider, J. P. Gerow, Daniel Dunlop, Wm. Jose. A very impressive sermon was preached by Rev. Mr. McQuaig, from 1st Thessalonians, 4—14, after which she was conveyed to her long resting place in the Massassaga Point cemetery.

Albert College.

The Christian Guardian says editorially in this week's issue: "We are glad to learn that Mr. H. A. Massey has offered to give $10,000 towards the erection of an addition to the Albert College buildings, provided the same amount is contributed by other friends of the college. This is a generous and timely gift. We understand that it has given a fresh impetus to the canvass for funds, and that the required amount will soon be made up. Three subscriptions of $1,000 have been given, among them one from the Premier, Sir Mackenzie Bowell. We congratulate Albert College on obtaining the aid which will lead to increased efficiency in its excellent work."

E Company Organizes.

The officers, non-coms, and men of E Company, 15th Batt., met last evening for organization. Capt. Walmsley presided. B. E. Sills was appointed Col. Sergt., and F. S. Brown Ord. Sergt.; D. McCann and T. S. Clark, Corporals. There will be a great change in the formation of the Companies this year. A company consists of four sections of ten men each, and each non-com. has charge of a section, and is responsible for the men. There will be no sizing in company as formerly, but a man receives his number when he joins, and keeps it through the season. E Company wants good able-bodied men, and no young boys.

The Spencer--Chisholm Case.

The Magistrate decided that the two cows and harness did not belong to Alva Spencer, the father of plaintiff, but belonged to the son, and that although Chisholm wrongfully took the property, as he found on the evidence that he took it under a fair and reasonable supposition that he had a right to do so, he could not convict defendant. He held that Chisholm should give up the property. A. R. Dougall Q. C., for Spencer, S. S. Masson for Chisholm.

The Genuine Merit

Of Hood's Sarsaparilla wins friends wherever it is fairly and honestly tried. To have perfect health, you must have pure blood, and the best way to have pure blood, is to take Hood's Sarsaparilla, the best blood purifier and strength builder. Canadians in Chicago.

The Chicago Herald of the 3rd inst. gives an excellent sketch of the Canadian colony in Chicago, and gives the names of many persons from Canada who are prominent in various walks of life. The only Bellevillian named is G. B. Reeve, Traffic Manager of the Chicago Grand Trunk Railway, who was born here.

Most Likely.

Most men expect to buy a new suit and probably a light overcoat this spring. Have you the desire to make $5 to $8 on your suit and a similar amount on an overcoat? Most likely you have. Then, will you come to the Oak Hall and see what we can do for you? If you walk to the custom tailor and pay him his price, without first seeing what we can do for you, why, it is your own fault if you are 'sick' afterwards.

The Weather.

The features of the weather since last report have been a snow fall of two inches that lasted from about 4 p.m. yesterday until 10 p.m., and a southwesterly gale that succeeded. Lowest temperature during the night, 29; at 8 a.m., 32; and at noon, 31.

PROBABILITIES.

Fresh to strong northwesterly to northerly winds; generally fair and moderately cold.

BICYCLING.

At the meeting of the Ramblers Bicycle Club held last evening in the Mechanics' Institute hall, there were about fifty gentlemen present, and a more enthusiastic lot of young men never met in the city. After all had been enrolled as members for the ensuing year, ballots were distributed, and the election of officers began. It was not a formal election either, as there were warm contests for all the important offices, but the best of good feeling prevailed throughout. The election resulted as follows:

Hon. President—H. Corby.
President—I. O. Frost.
Vice-President—L. C. Lockett, (acc.)
Captain—Wm. Robertson.
First Lieutenant—F. S. Foster.
Second Lieutenant—F. Stortts.
Secretary—H. McGinnis, (acc.)
Treasurer—R. J. Orr, (acc.)
Bugler—Jas. Phillips, (acc.)
Standard Bearer—B. E. Cummings.

Handicappers—T. W. R. McRae and W. Kennedy.
Executive Committee—James Brown, F. B. Smith, B. E. Cummings, S.G. Retallack, F. Lewis, H. Austin and F. S. Foster.

A vote of thanks was tendered the retiring officers of the club by a standing vote for the able manner in which they had conducted the affairs of the club.

It was also moved, and unanimously carried that the club give the Institute and Library a donation of $10.

The Club decided to send three delegates to the C.W.A. annual meeting to be held at Toronto on Good Friday, and the following gentlemen were selected to represent the Club: F. B. Smith, H. McGinnis and I. O. Frost.

It was decided to place the membership fee at $1.50 and to join the C.W.A. as a club.

It is important that all who intend becoming members of the Ramblers Wheel Club should send in their names to Hope McGinnis, Secretary, by to-morrow evening, or give them to some of the officers of the Club.

Another meeting will be called shortly to discuss important matters in connection with the Club.

The Peterborough Bicycle Club have elected the following officers: Honorary President, Mayor Kendry; President, Alex. Gibson; First Vice-President, R. M. Denistoun; Second Vice-President, W. E. ROWING.

Of the fifty-one races rowed so far between the Oxford and Cambridge University eights, Oxford has twenty-eight victories to her credit, while the light blues can only claim twenty-two. The odd event took place in 1877, and resulted in a dead heat, although it was a virtual victory for Oxford, the bow oar of the dark blues having broken an oar at the most critical stage of the race. Even then his seven club mates managed to keep the craft going long enough to break even. The first Oxford and Cambridge race took place in 1829 from Hambledon lock to Henley bridge. The rivals met for the second time in 1836 over a course between Westminster and Putney. In 1845 the crews decided to race from Putney to Mortlake, and that course has since been adhered to. Cambridge opened brilliantly over the present course by scoring three consecutive wins. Their rivals responded in kind, and the honors changed yearly up to 1861, when Oxford captured the blue ribbon and held on to it for nine years. Cambridge started a big inning in 1870 and shut their rivals out until 1875. They then scored alternately, and in 1877 rowed a dead heat. Oxford came strongly to the front in 1880 and won straight along to 1884, when the light blues defeated them. Oxford again got in front the following year, but succumbed to their rivals for the next four years. Since 1890 the Oxford men have had a monopoly of the honors, and they also have the honor of making the best time on record, 18 minutes 47 seconds, March 22, 1893. Twenty minutes was only beaten on two other occasions, so that backers of the light blues (who have covered the course in 20 minutes) for the forthcoming struggle must feel justified in accepting the liberal odds of 2 to 1 against their favorites, if the recent trials count for anything.

YACHTING.

NICE, March 27.—The Ailsa, Britannia and Valkyrie II. started this morning in a race for the prizes sailed for last Saturday, when the judges disqualified the Ailsa and Britannia for starting before the signal was given. The prizes were 5,000, 2,000 and 1,000 francs, with gold, silver and bronze medals. The course to be covered three times, is 30 miles in all. The weather was clear, the wind light, and the sea calm. The Ailsa got away 52 s. ahead, followed by the Britannia and Valkyrie. At the end of the first round the Ailsa was leading by 4 minutes, having lost some by holding a bad course. On the second round the Britannia crept up close to her rival and at the end was only thirty-five seconds behind. The wind then got stronger and the Britannia went ahead. The sea also became very rough and the Britannia showed herself to be the best heavy weather boat. The Britannia reached home at 2.38.57; and the Ailsa at 2.45.43.

The official times of the Ailsa and Britannia are as follows: Ailsa, start, 10.44.40. First round, 11.22.46; second round, 1.28.13. Finish, 2.45.43. Britannia, start, 10.45.33. First round, 12.15.49; second round, 1.28.51. Finish, 2.38.57.

Britannia won by 7m 38s actual time.

CRICKET.

The Belleville Cricket Club met at the Queen's Hotel last evening for organization. There was not a large meeting, but it was thoroughly representative and the club promises to be stronger this year than formerly. Col. Lazier occupied the chair. The election of officers resulted as follows:

President—J. P. C. Phillips.
Manager—J. Brasier.
Secretary-Treasurer—W. E. Brown.
Captain—Ward Cutler.
Executive Committee—F. Lewis, W. Wallace and the other officers of the club.

A committee for soliciting funds was formed, also a committee to decide on suitable grounds to play on.

The following patrons were elected:—H. Corby, M.P., Thos. Ritchie, J. E. Walmsley, Mayor: Judge Lazier, J. J. B. Flint, U. E. Thompson, J. W. Murray, J. C. Jamieson, M. M. Thompson, Dr. W. J. What Will be Done.

The Whig says: Capitalists in Cobourg are under the impression that the Bay of Quinte Navigation Company does not treat that town as fairly as it ought to, and an agitation for oppositon on the route between Cobourg and Charlotte has been begun. The Company, it is held, favors Kingston and Port Hope in the matter of purchasing supplies and in improvements to their boats, because Kingston is its headquarters. The Company has the business solid, and will make it interesting for any opposition boat. It can hold the business, and will endeavor to do more for passengers patronizing its boats this year than it ever did. The str. North King will be very attractive. Extra accommodation has been provided, and a new electric light plant has been put on board; the steamer will be the best lighted boat on the lakes. An Italian orchestra will be in attendance on every trip.

From Harper's Young People.

The good detective is a man of resources. He must know how to adapt himself to emergencies that are liable to arise suddenly, demanding to be as promptly met. A detective who hesitates is lost, or his "case" is, which is the same thing. The blackmailer Welles, who wrote threatening letters to Jay Gould, eluded all the traps we set for him, and had fairly exhausted our patience and ordinary resources, when the novel experiment was tried of moving upon him en masse, as it were. Noticing that all his letters were stamped at one post-office station, and having tricked him by an advertisement in the "Personal" column of a newspaper into sending one the next day, we posted a letter-carrier at each letter-box in the district, and a detective between every two. The letter-carrier had a key to the box, and was to open it every time that a letter was dropped, and before the person who had dropped it was out of sight. If it was addressed to Jay Gould he was to raise his hat as a signal to the detective watching him. If not, he was to slip a rubber band over it so that the next might be more readily identified. It took some two hundred men to carry out this plan, but it succeeded, and blackmail ceased to be a safe or paying business in New York. In an hour we had our man. It is results that count in the detective business and justly. No effort or sacrifice is too great to achieve such an end.

The bogus hero of the story books has led more than one boy astray, and made altogether more mischief than all his vaunted smartness could repair were he real. My advice to the boys of to-day, if they will take it, is to let the lynx-eyed sleuth with the catlike step severely alone. Too many boys who were full of promise once, he has served as the introduction to the acquaintance of the real detective on business which neither they nor he relished.

The Thief was a Dog.

From Boston comes the tale of a dog who is a thief and who was caught in the act, arrested, taken to a police station, tried, and finally liberated because no law applicable to four-footed criminals could be found.

It seems that for the past two weeks a wicked milk stealer has been at work in the Eleventh Precinct of that city, and that many well-filled milk cans have disappeared from the doorsteps of houses, never to be recovered. Finally, says the Boston Traveller, one of the milkmen went to the station house and asked that an officer be detailed to help him watch for the culprit. This district about Morton street was the scene of the greatest depredations. Early on Tuesday morning, after the milk had been delivered to the customers along the street, the milkman and a policeman took up a position in a doorway to watch.

They waited until 6 o'clock. No thief appeared. As daylight was approaching the watchers were just making up their minds that there was little use in remaining any longer, when a big Newfoundland dog came around the corner and slowly ambled up the street.

"There's your thief," remarked the policeman, as he watched the dog cautiously peering into every doorway as he walked along.

"What, the dog?" said the milkman incredulously.

"Yes; keep your eye on him."

The dog paused before a doorway in which was a can of milk, and then he walked slowly up the steps and smelled the can. In a moment he took the can in his teeth, walked down to the street, and started off the way he had come. The policeman and the milkman followed at a short distance. They saw him turn into Armadine street, and climb up into the verandah of a house.

He set the can down for a moment and contemplated it, and then he picked it up in his teeth again and shook it gently. In a moment the wooden plug dropped out of the can, and, setting the can down, he proceeded to lap the milk from the can, contentedly. The men watched him until he had finished, and then they saw him pick up the empty can in his teeth and leave the verandah. He passed down into the back yard and out into a clump of bushes in the rear of the house. He was lost to view for some time, and then he came out again and proceeded to the verandah, where he lay down and soon was asleep.

The policeman and the milkman went out into the bushes to look around. There they discovered fourteen empty milk cans.

Humorous.

A SERIOUS QUESTION.

A young housekeeper who lives in a small Kentucky town had occasion to reprimand her cook for neglecting her duties.

"Well, Miss Laura, I's been worrited," was the reply. "I's studyin' a most 'portant question. Tell de trut, I don' know which to get, a winter cloak or a divohce."—From the "Editor's Drawer," in Harper's Magazine for April.

A PROBLEM.

Among the many slaves upon the plantation of a distinguished Southerner during the late war was a blind and decrepit old woman known as Aunt Idy. Aunt Idy, for some reason best known to herself, thought to better her condition by taking the oath of allegiance.

One of the younger members, hearing what had taken place, went to "ole miss" to get the solution, and after being told her friend had sworn to support the Constitution of the United States, exclaimed, "Fo' de Lohd! I don't know how Aunt Idy is gwine to s'pote the United States, when she can't s'pote herself."—From the "Editor's Drawer," in Harper's Magazine for April.

WHAT THEY WERE.

A gentleman walking along Lexington Avenue one day encountered two boys who looked so much alike that he stopped them and asked, "Are you little boys twins?"

They looked up at him for a moment as though they did not exactly understand, then one said, meekly,

"No, sir; we are Methodists."—From the "Editor's Drawer," in Harper's Magazine for April.

AN EASTER MAGAZINE.

Probably no two words in the English language are more misused and abused than "lady" and "woman," and there is much wisdom, therefore, in a popular discussion of the proper usage of the words, such as is given in the April Ladies' Home Journal, by Margaret Deland, Mrs. Burton Harrison and Sarah Orne Jewett. "The Burning Question of Domestic Service" is treated intelligently and interestingly by the Countess of Aberdeen. The cover of this April Journal is a reproduction of two of C. D. Gibson's most stylish and charming girls, and all through the issue is the freshness and daintiness of springtime and Easter days. This ideal magazine is sold for ten cents a number and one dollar a year by The Curtis Publishing Company, of Philadelphia.

The Patrons and the Butter Industry.

The Patrons are making a sorry sight of themselves on nearly every question that comes before the Ontario Parliament. It is now quite evident that they intend to vote the Mowat ticket every time, no matter what question arises. The Eastern Creameries Association at its meeting this winter petitioned the Dominion Government for aid in the way of marketing and exporting Canadian butter, as the keen competition of the Australian and Danish article was placing our butter at a discount. There is no doubt these creamery and cheese associations in the country represent farmers' views and opinions, as well as do the Patrons. And on this account the Dominion Government complied with the request of these farmers and butter makers, and have agreed to give 20 cents a pound for the best creamery made butter. But we find the Patrons voting against Mr. Whitney's motion, which was as follows:—

"That this House having regard to the butter trade in this Province, and the depressed condition thereof, has observed with satisfaction the announcement of the intention of the Government of Canada to provide for the immediate shipment of fresh-made creamery butter to Great Britain and to purchase at 20 cents per pound all creamery butter of the quality made between 1st January and 1st April, 1895, and bearing in mind the expenditure already incurred by the Government of the Province and Dominion to improve and foster the dairy interests of the country, respectfully urges upon the Government of Canada the advisability and necessity of providing such further or other aids as may be found to be necessary from time to time in order that the producers of fresh-made creamery butter may secure the full benefit of such expenditure."

What the Patrons should have done, as representative farmers and to be in keeping with their brother farmers of the butter trade was, to support this resolution, if they intended to be consistent with their profession and true to their own calling. But no; every one of them voted straight against it, and with the Mowat Government against the interests of their own class as butter makers.

Nothing could have been more inconsistent and suicidal than this action of the Patrons, as it shows they intend to vote Grit no matter what interests are at stake.

The present attitude of the Dominion Government toward the butter industry is urgent. An emergency has arrived in the way of a stagnant and ruinous market. The Australian and Danish butter does not get into the London market without Government help, and as the function of the Canadian Government is to develop all the resources of the country, it is trying to develop the butter trade in a way which these Grit Patrons are trying to put down. There would be very little use to encourage dairying and for the Government spending money in having a special dairy commissioner, and giving grants to establish Government creameries, if our butter is to be undersold by bonused Danish and Australian butter. At the outset, if those countries do this, Canada must follow suit.

The cheese industry has at different times been helped in a substantial manner by the Dominion Government and also by the Provincial Governmens of Ontario and Quebec, and there is no reason why the butter trade should not be helped likewise. The Dominion Government had no intention of going into commerce. Its sole object was to assist in developing the natural resources of the country, and in putting a new industry on its legs. It is the function of government to assist commerce and remove obstacles that retard it. It is far better that the Dominion Government should lose a little on a few thousand pounds of butter than to have the whole trade paralyzed, which would surely occur when Spring butter began to come in on top of the immense amount which is now lying in storage awaiting consumption or shipment. The Dominion Government's aid to the butter makers is just as legitimate as the large expenditures of Mowat in bonusing travelling dairies and Dairymen and Creamery Associations, and the Patron politicians in the Assembly were caught in a Grit trap when they consented to oppose it. If these men had designed to give the Patron order its quietus, they could not have gone about it better than by their votes of the past few days in the Assembly.—Mail and Empire.

Dangers of Delay.

If we were allowed to look into the future and see the fatal consequences that follow a neglected cold, how differently would our course be; could we realize our danger, how speedily we would seek a cure; but with many it is only when the monster disease has fastened its fangs upon our lungs that we awaken to our folly. What follows a neglected cold? It is not diseases of the throat and lungs, bronchitis, asthma, consumption, and many other diseases of like nature. Is it worse than madness to neglect a cold, and it is folly not to have some good remedy available for its frequent complaint. One of the most efficacious medicines for all diseases of the throat and lungs, is Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup. This medicine is composed of several medicinal herbs, which exert a most wonderful influence in curing consumption and other diseases of the lungs and chest. It promotes a free and easy expectoration, soothes irritation and drives the disease from the system.

COMFORT PEASE AND HER GOLD RING.
By MARY E. WILKINS.

CHAPTER I.

One of the most first things which comfort remembered being told was that she had been named for her Aunt Comfort who had given her a gold ring and a gold dollar for her name. Comfort could not understand why. It always seemed to her that her aunt and not she had given the name, and that she should have given the ring and the dollar, but that was what her mother had told her. "Your Aunt Comfort gave you this beautiful gold ring and this gold dollar for your name," said she.

The ring and the dollar were kept in Mrs. Pease's little rosewood work box, which she never used for needlework, but as a repository for her treasures. Her best cameo brooch was in there, too, and a lock of hair of Comfort's baby brother, who died.

One of Comfort's chiefest delights was in looking at her gold ring and gold dollar. When she was very good her mother would unlock the rosewood box and let her see them. She had never worn the ring; it was much too large for her. Aunt Comfort and her mother had each thought that it was foolish to buy a gold ring that she could outgrow. "If it were a carnelian ring I wouldn't care," said Aunt Comfort, "but it does seem a pity when it's a real gold ring." So the ring was bought a little too large for Comfort's mother. She was a very small woman and Comfort was a large baby, and, moreover, favored her father's family, who were all well grown, and Aunt Comfort feared she might have larger fingers.

"Why, I've seen girls eight years old with fingers a good deal bigger than yours, Emily," she said. "Suppose Comfort shouldn't be able to get the ring on her finger after she's eight years old what a pity 'twould be, when it's real gold, too."

But when Comfort was eight years old she was very small for her age, and she could actually crowd two of her fingers, the little one and the third, into the ring. She begged her mother to let her wear it so, but she would not. "No," said she, "I shan't let you make yourself a laughing stock by wearing a ring any such way as that, besides you couldn't use your fingers. You've got to wait till your hand grows to it."

So poor little Comfort waited, but she had a discouraged feeling about it sometimes that her hand never would grow to it. "Suppose I shouldn't be any bigger than you, mother," she said, "couldn't I ever wear the ring?"

"Hush, you will be bigger than I am; all your father's folks are, and you look just like them," said her mother conclusively, and Comfort tried to have faith. The gold dollar also could only impart the simple delight of possession for it was not to be spent. "I am going to give her a gold dollar to keep besides the ring," Aunt Comfort had said.

"What is it for?" Comfort asked sometimes, when she gazed on it shining in its pink cotton bed in the top of the workbox. "It's to keep," answered her mother. Comfort grew to have a feeling which she never expressed to anybody that her gold dollar was somehow like Esau's birthright, and something dreadful would happen to her if she parted with it. She felt safer, because a "mess of pottage" did not sound attractive to her, and she did not think she would ever be tempted to spend her gold dollar for that.

Comfort went to school when she was ten years old; she had not begun as early as most of the other girls, because she lived three-quarters of a mile from the schoolhouse and had many sore throats. The doctor had advised her mother to teach her at home, and she could do that because she had been a teacher herself when she was a girl.

Comfort had not been to school one day before everybody in it knew about her gold ring and her dollar, and it happened in this way: She sat on the bench between Rosy and Matilda Stebbins, and Rosy had a ring on the middle finger of her left hand. Rosy was a fair, pretty little girl, with long, light curls, which all the other girls admired, and begged for the privilege of twisting. Rosy at recess usually had one or two of her friends standing at her back twisting her soft curls over their fingers.

Rosy wore pretty gowns and aprons too, and she was always glancing down to see if her skirt was spread out nicely when she sat on the bench. Her sister, Matilda, had just as pretty gowns, but she was not pretty herself. However she was a better scholar, although she was a year younger. That day she kept glancing across Comfort at her sister and her black eyes twinkled angrily. Rosy sometimes sat with her left hand pressed affectedly against her pink cheek, with the ring finger bent slightly outward, and then she held up her spelling book before her with her left hand, and the same ostentatious finger.

Finally Matilda lost her patience, and she whispered across Comfort Pease. "You act like a ninny," said she to Rosy, with a fierce pucker of her red lips and a black twinkle of eyes.

Rosy looked at her and the pink spread softly all over her face and neck, but she still held her spelling book high, and the middle finger with the ring wiggled at the back of it.

"It ain't anything but brass neither," whispered Matilda.

"It ain't," Rosy whispered back.

"Smell of it."

Rosy crooked her arm around her face and began to cry. However she cried quite easily, and everybody was accustomed to seeing her fair head bent over the hollow of her arm several times a day, so she created no excitement at all. Even the school-teacher simply glanced at her and said nothing. The school teacher was an elderly woman who had taught school ever since she was sixteen. She was called very strict, and the little girls were all afraid of her. She could ferrule a boy just as well as a man could. Her name was Miss Tabitha Hanks. She did not like Rosy Stebbins very well, although she tried to be impartial. Once, at recess, she pushed Charlotte Hutchins and Sarah Allen, who were twisting Rosy's curls, away and gathered them all up herself in one hand. "I'd cut them off all if I was your mother," said she with a sharp little tug, but when Rosy rolled her scared blue eyes up at her she only laughed grimly, and let go.

Now Miss Hanks just looked absently at Rosy, weeping in the hollow of her blue gingham arm, then went over to the blackboard and began writing in fair large characters: "A rolling stone gathers no moss," for the scholars to copy in their writing books. The temptation and the opportunity were too much for Comfort Pease. She nudged Matilda Stebbins and whispered in her ear, although she knew that whispering in school was wrong: "I've got a real gold ring," whispered Comfort.

Matilda turned astonished eyes upon her. "You ain't."

"Yes, I have."

"Who gave it to you?"

"My Aunt Comfort, for my name."

"Were you named for her?"

"Yes, and she gave me a real gold ring for it."

"Matilda Stebbins and Comfort Pease, stand out in the floor," said Miss Tabitha Hanks, sharply. Comfort gave a great jump. The teacher had been standing at the blackboard, with her back toward them, and how had she seen? Never after that did Comfort feel quite safe from Miss Tabitha's eyes; even if they were on the other side of a wall, she could not quite trust it.

"Step right out on the floor, Matilda and Comfort," repeated Miss Tabitha, and out the two little girls stepped. Comfort's knees shook, and she was quite pale. Matilda looked very sober, but her black eyes gave a defiant flash when she was out on the floor and saw that her sister Rosy had lowered her arm and was looking at her with gentle triumph. "You see what you've got because you called my ring brass," Rosy seemed to say, and Matilda gave a stern little nod at her, as if she replied: "It is brass."

Poor little Comfort did not feel much sustained by the possession of her real gold ring. It was dreadful to stand out there facing the school, which seemed to be a perfect dazzle of blue and black eyes all fastened upon her in her little red gown and gingham tire, in her little stout shoes, which turned in for very meekness; with her little, dangling hands, which could not wear the gold ring, and her little shamed face and whispering lips, and little vain heart, which was being punished for its little vanity.

They stood on the floor until recess. Comfort felt so weak and stiff that she could scarcely move, when Miss Hanks said, harshly: "Now, you can go," She cast a piteous glance at Matilda, who immediately put her arms around her waist and pulled her along to the entry, where their hoods and cloaks hung. "Don't you cry," she whispered: "she's awful strict, but she won't hurt you a mite. She broght me a whole tumbler of currant jelly when I had the measles."

"DON'T YOU CRY," SHE WHISPERED.

"I shan't whisper again as long as I live," half sobbed Comfort, putting on her hood.

"I shan't, either," said Matilda. "I never had to stand out on the floor before. I don't know what my mother will say when I tell her."

The two little girls went out in the snowy yard, and there was Rosy, with Charlotte Hutchins and Sarah Allen, and she was showing them her ring. It was again too much for sensible little Matilda, weary from her long stand on the floor. "Rosy Stebbins, you are a great ninny, acting so stuck up over that old brass ring," said she. "Comfort Pease has a real solid gold one, and she don't even wear it."

Rosy and Charlotte Hutchins and Sarah Allen all stared at Comfort. "Have you?" asked Charlotte Hutchins, in an awed tone. She was a doctor's daughter and had many things that the other little girls had not, but even she had no gold ring—nothing but a carnelian.

"Yes, I have," replied Comfort, blushing modestly.

"Real gold?" asked Rosy, in a subdued voice.

"Yes."

Some other girls came up, some of the older ones, with their hair done up, and even some of the boys towering lankily on the outskirts. Not one of these scholars in this county district school fifty years ago had ever owned a gold ring. All they had ever seen were their mothers' well-worn wedding circlets.

"Comfort Pease has got a real gold ring!" went from one to the other.

"Why don't she wear it then?" demanded one of the girls. She had very red cheeks and her black hair was in two glossy braids, crossed and pinned at the back of her head, and surmounted by her mother's shell comb she had let her wear to school that day. She had come out to recess without her hood to show it.

"SHE HAS GOT A GOLD RING," SHE CRIED.

"She's waiting for her hand to grow to it," explained Matilda, to whom Comfort had slyly whispered the whole story.

"Hold up your hand," ordered the big girl, and Comfort held up her little hand pink with cold.

"H'm, looks big enough," said the big girl, and she adjusted her shell comb.

"I call it a likely story," said another big girl in an audible whisper.

"The Pease's don't have any more than other folks," said still another big girl. The little crowd dispersed with scornful giggles. Comfort turned redder and redder. Rosy and Charlotte and Sarah were looking at her curiously, only Matilda stood firm. "You are all just as mean as you can be!" she cried. "She has got a gold ring."

Choosing Partners at a Card Party.

At a progressive euchre party the other night the ladies were asked to go into an adjoining room and partners were put up at auction. The clever auctioneer mentioned the qualifications of the unseen article as "a man who is both witty and wise and skillful at cards;" or "Here I have one who, though elegant and agreeable, sometimes trumps his partner's aces." It was as noisy as a stock exchange for a few moments, and after once being awakened a company never relapses into that state stigmatized as dull.

At a recent charming private entertainment dainty baskets containing little packages wrapped in tissue paper were passed and were found to contain little stick pins, those having similar ones beginning the game together, while the "consolation" prizes were small heads of cabbage scooped out, lined with pale pink tissue paper filled with candies, then put together and tied with pink ribbons.

Another unique method of securing partners is by little rhymes written on a slip of paper, folded compactly and placed in peanut shells, which are then tied with ribbons and passed to the gentlemen.—Good Housekeeping.

Her Sweet Content.

In the impenetrable darkness she was alone with her thoughts. The chill of morning was stealing into her chamber.

"He comes," she murmured. "My husband comes."

Tears sprang to her eyes.

"Unfeeling man."

She hearkenned yet agian.

"Unfeeling man," she whispered, as she distinctly heard him rub his face against the hat-rack.

A sense of sweet content possessed her now.

A Dinner Pill.—Many persons suffer excruciating agony after partaking of a hearty dinner. The food partaken of is like a ball of lead upon the stomach, and instead of being a healthy nutriment it becomes a poison to the system. They are just the medicine to take if troubled with Indigestion or Dyspepsia.

GREENWAY'S STANDOFF

The Manitoba Legislature Adjourned For Six Weeks.

MANITOBA ORANGEMEN MEET.

Mr. Greenway States That the Question is Such a Vital One That Time is Required For Its Consideration—Views of Other Politicians.

Winnipeg, Man., March 29.—The Norwester, organ of the local Opposition, said last night: The present attitude of the Government on the school question is quite a contrast to the defiant tone in the Speech from the Throne and subsequent declaration of the Attorney-General, and even of the Premier on Tuesday. This sudden change of front was earnestly discussed in the corridors this morning. The Catholic members and their friends in the House are not at all pleased, and say that the Government is endeavoring to shirk the issue. The surprising and sensational feature of the school question difficulty to-day was the announcement that the Government had decided to adjourn the Legislature on Friday for the space of six weeks, or until May 9.

This afternoon, in moving the adjournment, Premier Greenway said in effect: "The Government has seen as yet no reason to change its policy in respect to schools in this province. But the matter is of the gravest importance, not only to Manitoba, but to every province in the Confederation, and we, therefore, desire time to thoroughly consider what action is best. When the House re-assembles in May we shall be able to definitely declare our intentions."

The Premier was asked to-day whether the Dominion Goverment would be likely to take this proposed adjournment of the Local House as a refusal on the part of the province to act in the matter of the Order, and replied that no such construction could be put upon the adjournment, inasmuch as the Provincial Government was taking the Order into consideration. The correspondent asked this question: "There is no likelihood, then, that the Dominion Government, having a clear three weeks of session before the Provincial House meets again and sends its answer, will act in the matter before hearing from Manitoba?"

"None whatever," said the Premier.

"You can depend upon it," said Hon. Mr. Watson, "that the Dominion Government is not going to touch this thing any sooner than they have to."

A. F. Martin, a prominent member of the Opposition, was asked how he thought the Dominion Government would construe the adjournment, and he replied: "As a refusal to act, of course. The Dominion Government will proceed at once to legislate, therefore; they will not wait until they hear from Manitoba, when the session at Ottawa would be half completed."

One of the ministers said: "The important point in the matter is whether the reply of the Provincial House will or will not be final, and whether the action of the Dominion Government will or will not be final. Of course, the Dominion Government will not act until they have received the reply from Manitoba. It is too important a question to hurry over."

At the Orange Grand Lodge meeting this resolution was passed:

"That we, members of the Provincial Grand Lodge, view with the greatest alarm the present state of affairs which exists between the Dominion and Local Governments, and we desire to express our approval of the stand taken by our representatives in the Local Legislature in brooking no interference by the Central Government in our educational affairs, and we call upon all Orangemen and Protestants to support no candidates for the House of Commons or the Local Legislature who will not openly and unqualifiedly pledge himself to determinedly oppose any and all attempts towards breaking up our public school system and re-imposing upon us and our children's children the accursed system of separate and sectarian schools."

The resolution goes on to say "that illegal interference will break the centre link and divide, if not endanger, Confederation."

Assistance has been asked from Ontario lodges to aid Manitoba and support is generously forthcoming.

CHATELLE TO HANG MAY 31.

Found Guilty of the Murder of Little Jessie Keith—The Trial Lasted Only One Day.

Stratford, March 29.—Amadee Chatelle was to-day found guilty of the murder of Jessie Keith near Listowel on Oct. 19 last, and was sentenced by Chief Justice Armour to be hanged May 31.

Chatelle pleaded guilty to the crime at the preliminary examination before a magistrate, and also confessed to a representative of The Toronto World the crime on his way from Listowel to Stratford after the preliminary examination. This morning he pleaded not guilty, and refused to be represented by counsel.

The trial began at 9 a.m. and was concluded before 4. The crown traced the accused's movements from Ailsa Craig to the scene of the tragedy, and presented an unbreakable chain of circumstantial evidence. Chatelle offered no evidence for the defence.

Chief Justice Armour decided that the confession made by Chatelle on the way from Listowel to Stratford was inadmissable, from the fact that Chatelle confessed in answer to questions put to him, and the admissions were thus not voluntary.

MAY RETAIN HIS OFFICE

Sir Charles Tupper Still Minister of Justice.

WRITS FOR BYE-ELECTIONS ISSUED.

No Remedial Legislation By This Parliament—Speech From the Throne Will Refer to the Order, But the Schools Will Be An Election Issue

Ottawa, Ont., March 28.—The political atmosphere has been heavily charged all day, but there are indications to-night of its being relieved shortly. All sorts of rumors were in circulation, but there is not much difficulty in sifting truth from falsehood. One report had it that after all Parliament was to be dissolved, but there came a quick refutation in the official announcement that the writs for the bye-elections in the four vacant constituencies had actually been issued. Then there was revival of yesterday's rumors that Hon. G. E. Foster had resigned. I saw the Premier during the afternoon and he flatly denied the statement. Mr. Foster, he said, was confined to his house by an attack of rheumatism and would probably not be up town for three or four days. Subsequently I saw the Minister of Finance at his home. He confirmed the Premier's statement, intimating that his illness had been brought on by cold caught at the University dinner. Thus was rumor No. 2 effectually disposed of.

Your correspondent has good reasons for believing that Sir Charles Tupper will retain his portfolio as Minister of Justice. To-morrow will see the matter definitely settled. I had a long chat with him to-night, but he would not say anything for publication. He remarked to your correspondent that he was still Minister of Justice, and that until he was not a member of the Government he would decline to discuss his intentions or any subject which might now be under the consideration of the Government.

Sir Charles was at his office for two hours this afternoon. During the day Sir Donald Smith called upon him and the two gentlemen were in consultation for a long time. Rumor has it that Sir Donald has offered his services towards securing a compromise on the situation. There appears to be no question now that the reason assigned by your correspondent for Sir Charles tendering his resignation, viz., that Parliament should have been dissolved immediately the Remedial Order passed, is the correct one.

Indicative of the hold which Sir Charles has upon the Conservative party, it may be stated that scores of telegrams have reached his office during the past two days urging him not to retire from the Ministry, and assuring him of the confidence and support of his party friends. The Minister of Justice dined at Government House last night, and it is currently reported that he had a chat with the Governor-General on the situation.

I met Dr. Bourinot to-day and put a few questions to him on the constitutional aspect of the situation, and his answers are interesting reading at this juncture:

"Does the recent decision of the Government on the Manitoba school case involve the necessity of a prompt appeal to the country?" your correspondent asked.

"Decidedly no, because this is only the initial stage of the matter. Only in case Parliament refuses to pass remedial legislation, following a determination on the part of Manitoba to do nothing, might the Ministry think it proper to ask for a dissolution. The Government, of course, must await the decision of the Manitoba Legislature before coming to Parliament, which is the court of last resort in this matter. In case Parliament refuses to pass remedial legislation, to which the Government are now pledged by their action of last week, then they might think it proper to appeal to the country."

"From your constitutional studies, when would you consider an appeal to the country imperative?" I asked.

"When boundaries of electoral constituencies are so changed or the franchise is so extended that it becomes necessary to get a verdict from the new or enlarged constituency."

"But what about the Representation Act of 1891? No appeal to the country followed the passage of that measure."

"True, but that statute does not come under the wide extension of franchise or representation to which I have referred. The changes made then were comparatively so few that Parliament could well run its course. I refer to a very general change in suffrage or of boundaries of constituencies as necessitating a prompt dissolution."

"Is it a prerogative of the Prime Minister to say when Parliament should be dissolved?" Dr. Bourinot was asked.

"It is his prerogative as First Minister to advise His Excellency, but I should say it ought first to be a matter of consultation in the Cabinet. In making these observations I am speaking simply from a general constitutional standpoint, and without any reference to existing conditions, of which I am entirely ignorant."

Point is given to Dr. Bourinot's opinion by the following, which appeared in to-night's Journal:

"The question of dissolution or session was one which Sir Mackenzie Bowell should have, as Premier, settled without direct reference to his colleagues. Having, however, referred the matter to the Cabinet, the view of the majority prevailed, and although the work of the campaign was well under way the French-Canadian Ministers forced a session, so as to be able to deal with the Remedial Order against Manitoba. When Sir Charles Tupper prepare his report on the school question, it is said that he did so on the distinct understanding that the matter was to be submitted to the people, and not to Parliament. Some say that the Premier had assured him that such was to be the case, so that the contention of the Minister of Justice is that Sir Mackenzie Bowell did not carry out his arrangements in respect to dissolution, and in this way Sir Charles Tupper's report on schools is going to be dealt with in a very different way from what he intended. It is even said that from the strong views which the Minister of Justice holds on this question, and in the manner in which it ought to be dealt with, he would have to oppose Parliament dealing with his own report as it now stands."

Evidently the writer of the foregoing does not grasp the situation thoroughly. He pre-supposes that Parliament, at its next session, will be called upon to pass remedial legislation if Manitoba refuses to obey last week's Remedial Order. Mr. Greenway, the Prairie Province Premier, is evidently playing a waiting game but your readers may accept the assurance as positive that remedial legislation would never be asked from a moribund parliament. The indications are that Mr. Greenway may effect a compromise on the school issue, but if he does not then the next elections will be fought out on the issue of justice to the Catholic minority of Manitoba.

The program at the coming session will be somewhat as follows: The Speech from the Throne will contain a reference to the issue of the Remedial Order, with an expression of hope that the Manitoba Legislature will follow the constitutional course and carry out the finding of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. Joe Martin, or some other member, will likely move an amendment to the address, deprecating any interference with Manitoba, and this will raise the whole issue. On a division the Government will probably have a majority of 80 or 90, as it is impossible to conceive how all the Quebec members can avoid supporting the Ministerial position.

At a meeting of the Cabinet held this morning an order-in-council was passed authorizing the issue of writs for bye-elections in Haldimand, Antigonish, Verchères and Quebec West. The elections will take place simultaneously, nominations being fixed for April 10, polling April 17, the day preceding the opening of the House.

A conference was held this morning, at which Sir Mackenzie Bowell, Chief Justice Davie of British Columbia, Hon. T. M. Daly and Hon. John Haggart were present, when the long-standing dispute between the Dominion Government and the Government of British Columbia in regard to lands in the railway belt in that province was finally adjusted. Briefly stated, the dispute arose this way: In 1884 the Government of British Columbia granted to the Dominion a tract of land extending 20 miles on either side of the C.P.R. route, for the purpose of aiding the construction of that line through to the Pacific Coast. The following year, however, the Provincial Government made grants of certain of these lands, situated in the Yale district, to a number of speculators. These grants the Dominion Government discountenanced, and went to the courts to dispossess the holders, and in the meantime granted patents to portions of the land to settlers at Revelstoke and other places. These purchasers were unable to perfect their titles in British Columbia, as the local land officers refused to register Dominion patents on the ground that the land was already covered by provincial grants. A judgment of the Supreme Court of Canada, obtained on appeal in 1893, confirmed the validity of the Federal grants and the speculators accordingly executed a deed of surrender to the Government. Thus the matter stood until during the recent session the Provincial Legislature passed an act wiping out the local grants and according the right of registration to the Dominion patents. By the settlement reached to-day the Dominion agrees, on receiving from the province the moneys it obtained in payment for lands in the railway belt, to issue Dominion patents to the holders thereof, provided such lands are not already covered by patents from the Dominion. The registration concession by the Provincial Legislature was also confirmed.

The third question settled to-day was that of delimitation of railway belt boundaries. It has been a subject of much futile negotiation for years, the difficulty being to locate lands in conformity with any system of survey and at the exact distance of 20 miles on either side of such a tortuous line as the Canadian Pacific Railway follows through the mountainous regions of British Columbia. It has been achieved, however, by so modifying the exact parallels which represent the 20-mile boundaries, as to make them conform to township lines. This involved, of course, a lot of "give and take" but in bulk the sections cut by the exact boundary have been pretty fairly apportioned between the railway company and the province. To the people of Revelstoke especially, provincial recognition of the Dominion patents will be a great boon, as they will now be able to record their titles regularly in the local land offices. During all this dispute they have been in the position that they could not make a sale or transfer of land that would "stand law" in the province.

At the conference to-day in the Premier's office the subjects of a sale of a part of the Songhish reserve to the city of Victoria for railway purposes; protection of Indians and prevention of smuggling on the northwest coasts of British Columbia, were also discussed; but no definite arrangement was come to on those points.

G. H. Macdonell, M.P., to-day introduced a deputation from Rat Portage to Hon. Mr. Costigan, which asked for concessions in regard to fishing in Lake of the Woods, and also for improvements in the navigation of Rainy River. Mr. Macdonell expects a great influx of miners to the gold fields of that district this summer. The deputation consisted of George Drury, President Board of Trade; J. T. Mackey, James Carmichael and William McCarthy.

The argument before the Supreme Court in Victoria Harbor Lumber Company v. Irwin was concluded to-day. Judgment reserved. The next case argued was Toronto Street Railway Company v. Grinsted, in which the question for decision was as to whether or not a man wrongfully ejected from a street car and in consequence took cold before reaching home, could recover damages resulting from illness produced by such exposure. The appellant company claimed that such damages were too remote. Judgment was reserved.

The next case argued was Toronto Street Railway Company v. City of Toronto. In this case a judgment had been recovered against the city for injury caused by the accumulation of ice and snow on the sides of the streets, and the city seeks a remedy over against the company. The latter claim that part of the snow and ice so accumulated was put there by the city from the sidewalks, which prevented the remedy over. Argument was proceeding when the court adjourned at 4 o'clock. Laidlaw, Q.C., and Bicknell for appellants; Fullerton, Q.C., for respondents.

The statement in a Toronto paper that Lord Aberdeen is to be recalled to take Lord Lieutenancy of Ireland was shown to Mr. Gordon, the Governor-General's secretary, to-day. He gave it a flat denial.

Several members of Parliament were in town to-day, among them J. H. Metcalfe, George H. Macdonell, Mr. Cargill, Major McLennan and others.

According to reports which have reached the Fisheries Department, British Columbia sealing schooners engaged in coast fishing are doing remarkably well so far. They have experienced considerable trouble, however, owing to certain sloops selling whisky to the Indian hunters.

Mr. Fee, the McCarthyite organizer, is also in town, and it looks as if there is going to be a McCarthyite in the field in opposition to the doctor.

London, March 29.—The House of Lords to-day passed the Marquis of Ripon's bill repealing the restrictions upon the Australian colonies regarding the imposition of customs, and the measure received royal assent.

ONTARIO LAW REFORM

Sir Oliver Mowat's Bill Passes Its Second Reading.

ANOTHER PATRON MEDICAL BILL.

Bill To Amend the Industrial School Act Introduced—The Fruit Fraud Bill Passed Its Second Reading—A Butter Bonus Asked For.

Toronto, March 29.—There was a long debate in the Local Legislature yesterday, but it was of such a technical character that the ordinary listener found little to interest him. The subject under discussion was law reform, brought up on the second reading of Sir Oliver's bill: "For diminishing appeals and otherwise improving the procedure of the courts." The debate lasted during the whole of the afternoon and evening sessions, and it was not until just before the House adjourned at 10 o'clock that the second reading was passed. The Attorney-General delivered a long and wordy speech in explanation of his bill. Alluding to the agitation for law reform, he said many suggestions had been made that were altogether impracticable, but others were good, and where possible they had been embodied in the bill. In addition to these a number of enactments had been introduced which would prove useful and valuable. The agitation had been directed chiefly towards lessening the number of appeals, and then making appeals somewhat less expensive by abolishing or limiting all appeals to the Court of Appeal. He contended that at least one appeal was most desirable. The Court of Appeal was a satisfactory court, and a court in which great confidence was placed. Therefore, they proposed to retain that court. There was considerable misapprehension among the public as to the number of appeals. Only a very small fraction of the whole number of cases were ever appealed, and to the large majority the law as it existed was no burden.

Mr. Whitney had very little fault to find with the steps which the Attorney-General proposed to take towards giving that relief which the people of the province had been asking for, but he was sorry that he had not gone further. He agreed that there should be only one Court of Appeal, but he feared that, owing to the many exceptions, the bill would not achieve such a desired end. He favored the abolition of the High Court and the establishment of the Supreme Court of Ontario, of one final, broad Court of Appeal for the province, beyond which no litigant would have the right to go. He was glad to receive the bill; it was a good one so far as it went, and he accepted it on the principle that half a loaf was better than no bread.

Mr. Garrow deprecated the haste with which many judges dealt with cases, owing, he believed, to the fact that there was the opportunity to appeal. He advocated the lessening of the opportunities to appeal and the giving to judges more time in which to consider their judgment.

Mr. Howland argued that the bill did not go far enough, and he suggested that it be left over for 12 months.

Col. Matheson expressed the opinion that cheap law meant continual litigation among people who would otherwise settle their disputes in a friendly manner. At any rate he thought we should be given a rest in this matter and the question of law reform be allowed to lie over for a while.

Hon. Mr. Gibson introduced a bill to amend the Industrial School Act. The bill authorizes corporations to guarantee debentures issued for Industrial school purposes. It provides that any debenture debt incurred by an Industrial school board, acting under powers derived from the Public school board, shall be a liability of the supporters of Public schools, and in the same manner when the Separate school board authorizes the expenditure its supporters shall be liable. The school boards may pay a per capita allowance instead of supplying teachers to the Industrial boards.

The Attorney-General brought in a bill to correct a clerical error in the schedule of the act respecting mortgages and real estate.

Mr. Hardy's bill for the payment of jurors on Sundays was passed by the committee of the whole house. Amendments were added providing for the payment of mileage to a juror in the event of a county council passing a bylaw authorizing it, in going to and returning from his place of residence where an adjournment over Sunday takes place, and making it a contempt of court, severely punishable, for any person interested in a civil suit in any court or his solicitor to directly or indirectly speak to a juror upon the jury panel or "to treat any such juror to drink, cigars or other refreshment."

Mr. Gibson's bill for the further protection of children was also passed in committee of the whole. An amendment was made rendering any attempt to induce children to leave Government institutions punishable by a fine of $20 and costs. Another amendment was added preventing parents or guardians from obtaining the custody of or interfering with children placed in homes under the provisions of the Act.

Mr. Hardy's bill respecting the election laws was next considered in committee and duly reported, as also was Mr. Dryden's bill relating to the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. Fallis' bill to enable the corporation of Port Hope to issue debentures for high school purposes was read a third time.

Hon. Mr. Dryden's bill for the prevention of fraud in the sales of fruit passed the second reading. Several members spoke against the bill, contending that it dealt unjustly with the shippers and fruit farmers in favor of the dealer. They suggested that it would be better to confiscate bad fruit.

Mr. Awrey said the reputation of our fruit was being damaged every year by bad fruit being packed in the centre of baskets and barrels, and he contended that the bill was a right and proper one, and one in the interest of the fruit farmers.

The Minister of Agriculture was yesterday interviewed by President Derbyshire of the Ontario Creamery Association, and John H. Croil, who requested that the Provincial Government further assist the export of fresh creamery butter, by paying a bonus on all butter shipped. By this means they urged that the cold storage facilities provided by the Dominion Government would be kept constantly filled. They told the Minister that the recent measures taken up by the Dominion Government had had a most beneficial effect; but Mr. Dryden expressed his opposition to the granting of a bonus on principle, and urged that it was the business of the Ottawa Government to provide any export facilities.

Hon. Mr. Gibson has given notice of these two bills: To amend the Bills of Sale and Chattel Mortgage Act, 1894; and a bill respecting aid to charitable institutions.

The Attorney-General will introduce a bill to consolidate the Judicature Act and the acts amending the same.

The Patrons have not yet done with the medical fraternity. Yesterday Mr. Haycock gave notice of another bill to amend the Medical Act. The measure provides that the fees paid by the students to the Medical Council for examination shall be reduced from $100 to $50—$10 for matriculation examinations, $15 for intermediate and $25 for finals.

A WORD IN SEASON.

We have no desire to find fault, beyond what is necessary, with the police in regard to the manner in which they discharge their duties; for it is but fair to say that the force, under the direction of Chief Newton, have not been less efficient than were a larger number of men under his predecessor, who was considered a first-class official. Moreover, Chief Newton discharges the duties of Health Inspector—which no previous Chief ever did—at a considerable annual saving to the ratepayers. As, however, Mr. J. W. Johnson forcibly points out in a communication, which appears in another column, there has been a laxity, doubtless arising from good-nature, in regard to the enforcement of certain by-laws which he mentions. To these we add the prohibition of fast driving over the bridges, to which we have repeatedly called attention, but without any effect. Now that the necessity for action in these matters has been shown, the police will probably leave no further cause for complaint with regard to them.

JAPAN AFTER THE WAR.

Captain Mahan, of the United States cruiser Chicago, a contemporary informs us, returned from a cruise of nearly two years in foreign waters, was asked by an interviewer his opinion of various phases of the war in the east—the rumored fear of Japan as a naval power; the probable dispatch of their Mediterranean fleets to the Pacific by England and Russia; the extension of its trade by Japan in consequence of its increased naval power, etc. Captain Mahan is a student as well as practical seaman, an author as well as competent commander, and a gentleman of fair mind and candid utterance. His answers to the questions put to him will help the public to take with a proper application of salt to the statements of consequences of Japan's victories.

Captain Mahan goes at once to the root of Japan's naval victories. They teach us nothing respecting the powers of modern war ships, for the reason that "the men behind the guns" were unequal. China's war ships were too inefficiently manned to offer resistance worth considering. But Japan has not become a naval power by the capture of China's cruisers. The latter are damaged, and will require much time for repairs. Supposing them all in order, neither England nor Russia need add a ship to its navy, nor hardly strengthen the fleets each has in the Pacific to sweep Japan from the sea.

Talk of European apprehension of Japan's competition in commercial channels, is indulged without taking thought of what is meant by trade, and what is necessary. "What," asks Captain Mahan, "can Japan supply in competition, say, with England? Outside of her natural resources, and such manufactures as depend on her natural resources, what can she supply to the other countries of the east which now trade with western Europe? A power which seeks to extend its trade by the aid of its navy must have goods to trade."

England has goods, and sends them to every market. Japan offers no rivalry in that line. The only jealousies probable of entrance in the settlement of the war are of a territorial nature.

THE CONSERVATIVE PARTY ALL RIGHT.

The Toronto World, which is one of the most outspoken of the Conservative newspapers in the Dominion, has the following spirited remarks upon the political situation, which the Grit organs have been attempting to magnify into a Cabinet crisis: The Conservative party has gone through many trials since the general election in 1891. Sir John A. Macdonald conducted that election when he was in poor health, and under the strain of it he practically broke up his constitution, the result being that he died some five months thereafter. It was confidently predicted that by his death the Conservative party had reached its end as a party militant and as a party regnant, and that the Opposition would, as a natural consequence, come into power for many a day. But the Conservative party pulled itself together, selected a new leader in Mr. Abbott, increased its strength and representation in the House and marched along the road whereon it had been travelling. Then came the retirement of Mr. Abbott and the selection of Sir John Thompson. But still other trials were in store, and with the dramatic death of Sir John Thompson there came again what appeared to be a crisis in the fortunes of the party. Sir Mackenzie Bowell, however, came to the front and for the fourth time in no less than four years was the party marching forward under a new chief.

CAMPBELL'S QUININE WINE

CURES: Dyspepsia, low spirits, loss of appetite, painful digestion, malaria, and gives tone and vigour to the whole system.

Be sure you get CAMPBELL'S.

Now, by reason of a miserable question, the outcome of the school legislation of the Province of Manitoba, and which has only importance to the whole Dominion for the simple reason that it involves the interminable race and creed issues which seem to beset Canada, the Conservative party as a party is in the midst of another trying situation. Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper, the new Minister of Justice, has seen fit to resign the portfolio held by him for the reason given that he thinks the Government ought to go to the country rather than hold a session after passing the Remedial Order in connection with the aforesaid miserable Manitoba school question. If this is Sir Charles Tupper's decision, he is free to go and to act as to him seems best; but we trust that his sober second thought will convince him that he ought to consider the interests of the party, the many trials it has passed through and the need it has to-day for all its members standing to-gether.

It is not this miserable school question that is of paramount importance to Canadians; that is, as we have said, a very secondary affair. The real and living issue in Canada to-day is what it has been for some years back—its fiscal policy—and the part that fiscal policy plays in building up the country as a nation, in vindicating Canada's right to control the northern half of this continent, and in maintaining that general line of policy which has made the Conservative party the truly national party in this country, and by reason of its opposition to which has made the Liberal party cut a very sorry figure in the history of Canada. The Conservative party has stood the loss of Sir John Macdonald, it has stood the loss of Sir John Abbott, it has stood the loss of Sir John Thompson, and it is bigger and stronger than any single man or dozen of men who are in it to-day, and will, we trust, for many a day be in the same position. Mr. D'Alton McCarthy got it into his head that the party could not do without him, or that if he left it and directed his batteries against it that it would come to grief. So far he has not realized his expectations.

The only thing for the Conservative party to do is to close up its ranks, stand by the National Policy and continue the progressive policy which it received from its first and greatest Chieftain, Sir John A. Macdonald.

But it will not ask anyone to keep step that wishes to fall out of the march.

THE NATURAL SOAP MINES.

How a Scientist Accounts for Their Presence.

The natural soap mines at Owen's Lake, California, are accounted for by a scientist who advances this theory: The water of the lake contains, he says, a strong solution of both borax and soda. In the water a curious specimen of grub breed by millions. These grubs go through their various transformations, and finally emerge as short-winged, heavy-bodied flies, very fat and oily. They live but a few days, dying and falling into the lake in such numbers as to be frequently washed ashore in layers more than a foot thick. The oily substance of the dead flies blends with the alkali of the borax and soda, and the result is a layer of pure soap, corresponding in thickness to the drift strata of the dead flies, a foot deep of the flies making a layer of soap nearly an inch thick. These strata, repeated year after year, have formed the celebrated "Soap Banks of Owen's Lake," where for a number of years past a large body of men have been regularly at work.

BRITISH CLAIMS IN AFRICA.

Reported French Expedition to the Nile Valley.

London, March 29.—In the House of Commons yesterday Sir John Long asked the Government if they had received the reports of the veterinary inspectors who examined the cases of alleged pleuro-pneumonia in Canadian cattle which were landed in Belgium.

Mr. Gardner, President of the Board of Agriculture, said the reports of the inspectors had not yet been received, but the Government had received the report of the Dominion Minister of Agriculture on the health of the cattle in Canada, and would consider whether they would publish it together with the other reports.

Sir E. Ashmead-Bartlett, Conservative for Sheffield, opened an interesting debate on Great Britain's relations to France in Africa. He moved a reduction of the Foreign Office estimates for the purpose. He first directed the attention of the House to the encroachments which the Government permitted France to make upon Siam. In Africa, France was still more active than in Asia, he said. She had sent out an expedition which was menacing the Upper Nile, and was seizing African territories, recognized as being within the British sphere of influence.

Sir Edward Grey, Parliamentary Secretary of the Foreign Office, said Great Britain stood in such a position of trust in Egypt as to make the British and Egyptian spheres of influence cover the whole Nile waterway. The House ought to be careful about giving credence to the rumor that a French expedition had been sent to the Nile country to occupy the valley of the river. The Foreign Office had no reason to suppose that any French expedition either had been instructed to enter the Nile valley or had the intention to do so. He could not believe it possible in the face of the fact that the British Government's views were fully known to France. The advance of a French expedition under secret orders from the west side of Africa into territory subject to British claims, whose rightfulness had been so long known, would be not only an inconsistent and unexpected act but also an unfriendly one, and would be regarded as such by the Government. Without doubt African affairs for the last two years have caused considerable anxiety as to what might happen in the future. During these years no provocation had been given France from the British side. England had striven to the utmost to reconcile the occasional conflict of interests. The Government would continue to pursue this line of policy, omitting nothing calculated to maintain good relations with France and at the same time to uphold the undoubted claims of Great Britain. To that end, of course, the co-operation of the French Government and French public opinion was necessary, but this co-operation ought to be easily obtained. He relied upon the sense of justice characterizing the French Government and people to help to reconcile the conflicting interests of the powers in parts of the world which were but little known.

Joseph Chamberlain, the Liberal-Unionist leader, spoke of Sir Edward's statements as the clearest and most satisfactory declaration yet heard on the subject from a responsible representative of the Government. He now saw, he said, that unless a clear understanding with France as to African affairs could be reached the most serious consequences might easily ensue. The statement ought to leave Great Britain's claims on Egypt beyond all misunderstanding. The whole Nile Valley from the lakes to the sea was within either the Egyptian or British spheres of influence, and that the claim on Great Britain's part had been within the knowledge of France for five years. He assumed that the claim had never been disputed by France. He must remind the House, however, that as recently as the beginning of this month the statement was made unchecked in the French Chamber and in the presence of the Minister of Foreign Affairs, that France's object was always to make England feel that her presence in Egypt was harmful, and that France could come up with her elsewhere than in the Mediterranean. If the French Government did not accept such statements it ought to repudiate them. France ought to be questioned regarding her expedition to the Nile valley.

Henry Labouchere, the Radical leader, pronounced Sir Edward Grey's speech a menace to France. ("Oh, oh.") He quite understood those cries of "Oh, oh." They came from the Tory members, who were delighted to find a Liberal Minister acting upon their principles. This speech was a menace on the lines of the familiar warning, "Hands off." Certain members seem to imagine the Nile to be as much British property as the Thames. He, for one, could not feel surprised that in view of such statements France was not friendly.

Sir Edward Grey denied that his statement had implied in any way a menace to France. The question of a general settlement of their respective interests in Africa was under discussion between the two countries. The British claims had been stated clearly.

Sir E. Ashmead-Bartlett said that in view of the satisfactory reply made by the Government, he withdrew his motion.

The Young Women Would Not Comply.

One of the most prominent New York merchants became convinced recently that the young women in one of the departments of his establishment were injuring themselves by their constant wearing of tightly laced corsets, and issued a notification that in future no corsets should be worn during working hours. Instantly there was indignation and the thirty-five young women appointed a committee of three to wait upon their employer for a redress of grievances. The employer received the committee very affably and assured the young women that his order had been issued in their interest. He pointed out that their wearing of corsets did not improve their appearance in the eyes of any one but themselves, as they worked in a basement, where no visitors were admitted. He further read them a little lecture on the evil of wearing corsets, and, being by nature a well disposed soul, he gave a dinner to all the young women in that department one evening, at which he had present a well-known physician, who told how injurious a thing a corset is. The girls ate the dinner and listened respectfully, but the next day the committee called again upon that employer and assured him that they must ask to be allowed to wear corsets.

"But you will admit," said the merchant, "that the wearing of the corsets at your work is injurious to you?"

The committee admitted the fact, but declared that the experiment of going without them had made them all look horrid in their own eyes.

So that employer yielded the point as gracefully as he could. He is a man whose name is as prominent as that of any retail merchant in New York.—Boston Home Journal.

What He Had Done.

The woman emancipationist had tackled the serene old bachelor and was reading the riot act to him in a half-dozen different places at once. He squirmed occasionally, but he retained his serenity.

"Have you ever done anything for the emancipation of woman, I'd like to know?" she said, coming down the home stretch.

"Indeed, I have, madam," he smiled. "I have remained a bachelor."

The Effects of Kindness.

"Does your husband smoke very much?"

"No, indeed! I find the best way to manage him is to let him have his own way."

"You didn't encourage him to smoke?"

"Certainly. I bought him a box of cigars myself, and told him to go right ahead. He smoked once after that and then gave up the habit."—Washington Star.

UNANIMOUS AT LAST.

His Teeth Were Small, Chin Coarse, but They Agreed He Was Lovely.

A number of young women were discussing, in front of the seaside hotel, one of the gentlemen guests of the same.

"His manners are perfect," ventured one.

"He's rather too independent, I think," came a dissenting opinion; "but he has fascinating eyes."

"They would be much more so if they were brown instead of blue," asserted another; "but his figure is splendid."

"Don't you think he is a shade too stumpy?" asked another critic. "I don't like stumpy men; I do think, though, that his teeth are very fine."

"Almost too small for a man's teeth," opposed a girl with a big mouth; "but he has a nose that a Greek god might envy."

"Greek enough," remarked another, "but it lacks character. He would have a stronger face if his nose were more Roman. His hair is his most attractive feature, I think, and he can let it wave about his white forehead beautifully."

"Huh," sniffed another objector, "and he's so conceited about it. I do like his forehead, though."

"Altogether too low," objected an intellectual spinster. "Don't you think he has a fine chin?"

"On the contrary it's coarse's," antagonized a sweet-voiced maiden, "and that kind of a chin means tyranny, if the man has a wife who is at all yielding. His hands have always pleased me by their shapeliness."

"Too much like a woman's," objected a masculine-looking maid. "I think——"

"What I like about him most," interrupted a stately beauty, "is his million of money."

"Isn't it perfectly lovely?" assented every girl in the group with enthusiastic unanimity.—San Francisco Times.

Jefferson's Bad Memory.

It is related of Joe Jefferson that he was one day introduced to Gen. Grant, an event that naturally impressed him strongly. Later in the day he got into an elevator of the hotel at which they were both stopping. A short, heavy-set man also got in, lifted his hat to Jefferson, and made some remark.

"I beg your pardon. Your face is familiar to me, but I cannot recall the name," said the actor.

"Grant," said the stranger mildly.

"I got off at the next floor, for fear I should ask him if he had ever been in the war," Jefferson said in relating this story.

Worse than that, he once forgot his own name. He had gone into a post-office at some small resort where he was unknown and asked the clerk if there was any mail for him.

"What's the name?" asked the clerk.

"Name? O, yes, certainly. Why, let's see! I play Rip Van Winkle, you know."

"Jefferson!" said the astonished and delighted clerk.

"Yes, Jefferson, thanks," he answered, politely, as he received his mail and bowed himself out.—Chicago Tribune.

A Narrow Escape.

The reverend doctor is "a little round, fat, oily man of God." but he is blessed with a brain and a laugh far greater than most men, and he never hesitates to tell a joke, even though it be "one on him." The last time he met the Saunterer he had been having trouble with the steam boiler of his house, and had sent for a plumber to locate the difficulty.

"The plumber came," said the doctor, "and proved to be a burly Irishman, twinkling all over from the sole of his feet to the top of his carrot pate. I sent him downstairs, and in my study, just over the boiler, by the way, awaited the result of his investigations. In about ten minutes he reappeared, looking somewhat disturbed.

"Is this the place where ye sits and wroites?" said he.

"It is," said I.

"Then," said he, "ye may thank God ye wasn't blown to hell."

"And," concluded the doctor, "I told him I agreed with him in more ways than one."—Boston Budget.

Kind Gentleman—That boy just hit you, did he?

Small Boy—Yes, he did.

Kind Gentleman—Well, now, why don't you heap coals of fire on his head, like a good boy?

Small Boy—Do good boys do that?

Kind Gentleman—Yes, indeed, all good boys.

Small Boy—Well, I guess I must be dead wicked then, 'cause I don't want to burn the chump to death, I just want to punch his head.

A Small Youth's Retort.

The pompous schoolmaster sometimes finds himself in a position which is not entirely to his taste. A great English wit, Mark Lemon, once wrote a book, in which he told of a chubby-faced little urchin who passed his conceited instructor upon the street without bowing. The schoolmaster stopped and frowned.

"What has become of your manners, sir?" he roared. "It seems to me that you are better fed than taught."

"Yes, sir," replied the little boy. "That's because you teaches me, but I feed's myself, sir."—Harper's Young People.

During the past week the committee appointed to look for grounds have been busy and have several sites on which to report this evening. The cricket field was visited yesterday afternoon and Mr. Carre, C. E., will submit an estimate this evening of what it will cost to build a track, grand stand, etc. Another location that is looked upon with much favor is on Commercial st., at what is known as the Devil's Elbow, where a third of a mile track could be laid with very small expense. There are one or two locations near Bleecker St. church which would make good grounds if they can be secured. The committee would like to have the assurance of the Street Railway Company that they will run their line to one of these proposed sites. Let there be a large turnout this evening and thus give the Association a sure footing.

Obituary.

Mr. Theodore L. Spafford, whose illness from pneumonia was noted in Tuesday's Intelligencer, died yesterday shortly before noon. Deceased, who had attained the great age of 85 years, was born in Montpelier, Vermont, and had been a resident of Belleville for upwards of twenty years. He was much respected and leaves a numerous family amongst whom are Mrs. Dyer, wife of the Principal of Albert College, and Mr. Theodore Spafford, of the Walker Foundry Company. Mr. Spafford was a member of the Tabernacle and a Reformer in politics.

Matrimonial.

On Wednesday night, at the residence of Mr. John Huffman, Water street, Napanee, his daughter Alma was united in wedlock to Mr. Wm. Reynolds, of Deseronto. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. D. O. Crossley in the presence of a few intimate friends of both the contracting parties. Mr. George Vanalstine acted as best man, while the bride was supported by her sister Edith. Mr. Perry Huffman, of this city, attended the marriage of his sister.

Walter Frost's Funeral.

The funeral of the late Walter Frost yesterday afternoon was numerously attended. The services were conducted by Rev. E. N. Baker. The bearers were: Messrs. Harry Walters, James Reeves, Harry Thompson, Mason J. Clarke, Stanley Lewis and John Pringle, all members of Mr. F. E. O'Flynn's class of young men in Bridge st. Sunday School. A number of floral tributes were placed upon the coffin, amongst others a beautiful anchor from his Sunday School class.

Beginning Operations.

Mr. Henry Pringle, who will build three artistic frame houses on the corner of Bridge and George sts. this spring, has begun operations. He is filling in the cellar of the old Corby homestead with the debris from St. Andrew's church, preparatory to removing the old house. We understand that he has already sold two of the houses that he will build, and the other he will occupy himself.

Gus Hill's Novelties.

A fair sized house greeted Gus Hill's Novelty Company at the opera house last evening. There are some amusing features in the show. Gus Hill is a wonderful club swinger, Hacker and Lester are very clever acrobats and Appel, the wire walker, is the best ever seen here. They have some clever song and dance teams also.

Police Court.

John Cummings, drunk, was discharged.

The two boys, George Mair and Fred Brown, who ran down Mr. J. W. Johnson on Tuesday with their wheels, were this morning fined $5 each and costs for riding on the sidewalk. The police will prosecute any and every wheelman caught on the sidewalk hereafter.

The Bath and Toilet.

The white Castile soap cannot be surpassed for the bath or toilet. It is made with pure vegetable oil—not grease—and is healing and refreshing to the skin. The finest quality may be obtained of L. W. Yeomans & Co. at 20c. per pound.

MUSICAL SERVICES.

At Bridge Street Methodist Church—Last Evening.

A very large number attended the service on Thursday evening. A more delightful musicale has not been presented in the city for a long time. Belleville has been awakening from her lethargic sleep, and is putting on the mantle of energetic, active youth. Activity and stirring life are in the air, new hotel, electric cars, new wing to the hospital, college, new industries, new buildings. The blood no longer stagnates with the advent of spring, but is filled with delightful dreams of the great future in store for us. And now our musical world is booming, stars are filling our hitherto quiet and sunless sky. Young artists are coming to the front. Not very long ago Bridge Street choir was a bye-word, and a reproach, where harmony should have been evoked, was discord, now how great the change. Under the leadership of the talented artist Prof. Dingle the choir is well balanced, the chorus something grand, half a dozen sopranos, and contraltos capable of taking leading solos in oratorios can be selected from it at any time. Instead of discord, most delightful harmony. If the choir is studious and cares to profit by the advice and leadership of Mr. Dingle, I venture to prophecy that not a choir in the great metropolitan city of Toronto will surpass it.

The wild rhapsody of Wagner, "Prelude to Lohengrin," and Gounod's stirring "Marche Cortege" were performed by Prof. Dingle in his best manner. Then followed Rossini's sweet music from his "Stabat Mater." The duet by Mrs. Grant and Miss Garratt was rendered as only these ladies could give it. Is that not praise enough? Everything that could be said with reference to the singing of Mrs. Grant has been so repeatedly said, that to say more would be simply to paint the lily and gild refined gold. Miss Garratt won additional and deserved honors last evening. "Pro Peccatis" was given by Belleville's favorite, Mr. Eaton, admirably. The "Inflammatus" by Mrs. Grant and the choir, gave the artist and the choir an opportunity of presenting the gem of the evening. Mendelssohn's "Spring Song" and Batiste's Offertoire in D. were faultlessly performed by the professor. There is a profound charm in Mendelssohn's "Songs without words;" they are like the warbling of birds.

Miss Phillips most acceptably took the solo in Gounod's Sanctus. Miss Phillips is rapidly gaining ground in popular favor. The beautiful quartette "I'm a Pilgrim," was for the first time sung to a Belleville audience by Misses Price, Garratt, Stafford and Brown. The singing was simply exquisite, Miss Price's charming voice coming in for the leading praise.

The old time favorite, which never grows old; just as sweet and grand, as when first composed "The overture to William Tell," was played by Professor Dingle. I have heard Fred Archer and other world renowned artistes play "Tell," but no performance gave me more pleasure than that of last evening.

Handel's "Hallelujah" brought the evening to a close—the audience standing during its rendition.

Why cannot we have these recitals frequently? We do not require new pieces always, the old favorites will score every time. Let us have plenty of beautiful music which will elevate the people, inspire the grandest and purest thoughts and make us better men and women.

Picton Forms a Boat Club—Ailsa not a Failure—Fantasy to Try for the Trotting Crown—International Canoeing, etc., etc.

YACHTING.

The New York World's account of the regatta off Nice casts a different light on the performance of Ailsa and Britannia and shows that the former is by no means so bad a heavy weather boat as the report which we published yesterday would make it appear. The World's report says: "At the second mark, on the first round, Ailsa was over five minutes ahead, but a fluke of wind helped Britannia considerably and she was only three minutes astern of Ailsa at the end of the first round. The result of the match demonstrated that Ailsa was tender while beating off shore in the second round, and that she is overloaded with sail, but it hardly indicates that she is not an able boat in a breeze. The wind rose so suddenly at the beginning of the second round that both yachts had to take in topsails hurriedly. Ailsa subsequently had two breakdowns, and as a matter of fact, could not be sailed with such a press of canvas, having to go about, as it was too risky to gybe her."

MISCELLANEOUS.

Picton has formed a boating club, which has elected the following officers: W. J. Wallace, Commodore; G. C. Wilmot, Vice-Commodore; J. H. Porte, Captain; F. J. Beringer, Secretary-Treasurer; E. C. Smith, John McLean, M. Tierney, P. C. Macnee, Don. Conger, committee. The club colors will be blue and white.

Latest advices from California state that the great trotting mare Hulda, 2.08½, by Guy Wilkes, is again in training and may yet be seen in a race.

C. J. Hamlin, who recently returned from California, was interviewed by a representative of the Buffalo Courier. He said he would not be surprised if Fantasy dethroned Alix this year. "In fact," he said, "I may as well tell you—I fully expect that she will lower Alix's record of 2:03¾ before the present season is over, and there are many well informed horsemen who believe as I do. I am fully convinced she is the greatest five-year-old mare in harness to-day."

Died in Montreal.

Word was received in the city this morning that W. J. Canniff, son of Mr. Daniel Canniff of this city, had died in Montreal this morning. He was taken ill some days ago with pneumonia, and last evening he was reported much better. He was born at Canifton, and lived for many years in this city, where he conducted a corset factory. He removed to Montreal about eight years ago and went into the livery business. He was also engaged in the horse buying business. He married some years ago a Miss Mallory, of this city, who survives him. He leaves no children. Deceased was a genial man and well liked by all with whom he came in contact. The remains will be brought to this city to-morrow.

Bicycles on the Sidewalks and Fast Horses on the Streets.

To the Editor of the Intelligencer.

Sir,—It is the generally expressed opinion, and I agree with it, that the accident of which I was the victim yesterday, was rendered possible by the culpable neglect of the police to perform a plain duty. I have no intention to seek punishment for the boys who were the direct cause of my injury (the effects of which I shall feel for some time). Indeed, I have requested the Magistrate not to punish them. They were riding their bicycles on the sidewalk, as they saw their elders doing day and night without hindrance. I feel justly indignant at the Chief of Police. A man in that position should, without waiting for an accident, perceive the danger to life and limb involved in the practice of riding bicycles on the sidewalk, and put a stop to it promptly and effectually, even if there were no by-law. It is for protection to person and property that we maintain a police force, and that involves both foresight and courage in the performance of duty.

While dealing with this subject let me also call attention to the plain neglect of duty in permitting certain streets of the city to be used for racing horses. The street from the upper bridge to the Canifton road has been for years a race course, and last fall one of the streets leading from Bridge Street to Dundas Street was in possession of drivers of fast horses.

Private citizens do not like to interfere with and complain of such matters. It is the business of the police to attend to them. I think I express the universal opinion when I say that the Chief will be expected in the future to prevent bicycle riding on the sidewalk and horse racing on the streets.

Yours faithfully,
J. W. Johnson.

THE RUSH OF AN AVALANCHE.

Perils of Travel in the Snow Mountains of British Columbia.

(From the Victoria Colonist.)

Imagine if you can the very roughest bit of nature you have ever seen, or take a newspaper, crumble it into a ball, and placing it on a table suppose all its raised parts to be peaks, and the hollows ravines; picture the sharp edges as ridges more or less timbered, the hollow bare, smooth, or steep as the roof of the steepest house you know of, and you have an idea of the mountains and gorges of the Slocan.

Let us suppose we are standing near the summit of one of these ridges on a bright, sunny day in January. It has been snowing continually for days, and the "beautiful" lies in plentiful profusion everywhere, six to eight feet deep in the timbered ridges, and any depth you like in the ravines; the sun gets warmer; up above you, near the crest of the mountain, little bits of crystals detach themselves and go rolling down the slope; a tiny crack forms at your feet and widens across the gulch; in an instant the whole snowy mass is in motion, and with a hissing, rustling sound and an upheaval along its edges, goes hurling down the gorge. Faster and faster it glides; the air is filled with snowy spume; where you stood was a rivulet; a thousand feet below it is a mad torrent; the noise increases as it gains momentum.

Rocks are torn loose, broken to atoms or ground to powder, trees uprooted and broken to pieces, logs smashed to splinters. At half a mile on its path it presents a crest of twenty to thirty feet in height and moves faster than an express train; woe betide any living thing in its way now. Nothing made by man can stand before it; the wind of its creation is a hurricane; a cloud of snow and dust follows in its wake; in a seething torrent it pours over rock and precipice, and moving resistlessly on, leaves in its track broken and crushed fragments of rock and trees, and the smooth and polished grasses in the gorge. The thunder dies; is gone; and the avalanche is passed. Down at the foot of the slope; a mile away, mountains of snow tossed up in hopeless chaos, a wild tangle of rocks, earth, trees and logs remain to mark the slide, and often, alas! too often, the bodies of brave men caught in its rush, lie buried in its icy embrace.

All around you can hear, day and night, the distant, muffled roar of passing avalanches. They come and go at all times and at all hours; each year a new one is created, for the older ones are well known. They have claimed their blood tribute; each has its record of brave men done to death. These avalanches are everywhere; there is not a waggon road or a mountain trail that does not cross the path of several. On the Kaslo-Slocan road to New Denver there are five or six; on the winter road to Sandon and Cody Creek, four; all trails to the mines cross and recross these moving destroyers. Yet all the season of greatest danger there is more traffic on these roads and trails than on many highways in civilization. Marvellous escapes are an everyday matter. No one hesitates or delays on account of the peril to be incurred. Often, very often, the snowslide passes a few feet from the ore-laden pack team, but not always with warning. In an instant men and animals are overwhelmed and tossed like straws in a boil of seething snow; it is merciful that death is instantaneous.

The force of the wind created by one of these larger slides is well nigh incredible; in the valley of the Illecillewaet, on the Canadian Pacific, tree tops are cut off by the wind on the opposite side of the ravine through which the avalanche descends. The snow is pressed into the hardness of ice, and literally tears or grinds everything to powder in its path. The many deplorable fatalities that have lately occurred in the Slocan are partly due to the destruction of the timber on the wooden slopes by the fearful fires of last summer; the trees holding up the snow and preventing sliding. We read of many brave and heroic acts; but surely the patient courage that daily takes even chances with death on the slopes and in the mountains of the Slocan deserves more than a passing tribute.

THE ELECT LADY.

Or the Life and Times of Selina, Countess of Huntingdon.

The Rev. J. Simpson Trotter lectured on the above subject last night in the Reformed Episcopal church to an appreciative audience. For over an hour the lecturer sustained the attention of his hearers by graphic descriptions of the religious condition of England during the last century, and of the great, grand and successful evangelistic work accomplished by this distinguished lady. He said she was born after the flesh on August 24th, 1707, and she was born after the spirit when 23 years of age, and henceforth devoted her special gifts, social position, and large means to the service of Christ. She had her college, home and foreign missions, and ministers, which she sustained from her own resources. She died June 17th, 1791, in the 84th year of her age, after spending over $500,000 in the cause of God.

The lecture was in connection with the efficient Ladies' Aid Society of the church. The Rev. J. L. George, M. A., presided, and, as is his wont, said some kind words.

Like Lightning.

The rapid action of the "great pain cure," Polson's Nerviline, in relieving the most intense pain, is a matter of wonder to all who have used it. There is nothing surprising in its results, for it is made of the strongest, purest and most efficient remedies known in medicine. Nerviline cures toothache instantly; cramps in five minutes; neuralgia after two applications; rheumatism is at once relieved by its use; and the same may be said of all kinds of pain. Sample bottles costing only 10 cents, at any drug store. The large bottles only 25 cents. Polson's Nerviline sold by druggists and country dealers.

The Tyendinaga Arson Case.

Elizabeth Green, of Tyendinaga, was brought before Judge Lazier again this morning upon remand from Tuesday last. The evidence was taken and the Judge reserved judgment till Tuesday next.

Scrofula in the Neck—Bunches All Gone Now.

Sangerville, Maine.

"C. I. Hood & Co., Lowell, Mass.:

"Gentlemen:—I feel that I cannot say enough in favor of Hood's Sarsaparilla. For five years I have been troubled with scrofula in my neck and throat. Several kinds of medicines which I tried did not do me any good, and when I commenced to take Hood's Sarsaparilla there were large bunches on my neck so sore that I could

COUNTERFEITERS AT WORK.

Health and Life Endangered by Unscrupulous Dealers who Persuade Unsuspecting People to take Imitations—Some Pointers Worth Remembering.

No medicine that is not of more than ordinary merit suffers from imitations or substitutes. The fact that an imitation is offered is one of the strongest proofs of the excellent qualities of the genuine article. The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co. is constantly trying to impress upon the public the fact that Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are only sold in securely sealed boxes, the wrapper around which is printed in red ink and bears the registered trade mark "Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People." Notwithstanding this constant warning there are unscrupulous dealers here and there who defraud the public by selling an imitation pill (also colored pink) either by the dozen, hundred or by the ounce, alleging that they are "just as good," or "just the same" as the genuine Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. This is a falsehood and the unscrupulous dealer who offers the imitation knows it, but is more concerned for the extra profit he makes on the imitation than for the health of his unfortunate victim.

Will the public, in their own interest, bear in mind the following facts: Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are never sold by the dozen, hundred, or ounce. If any dealer offers you a pill in this form (no matter whether colored pink or not) he is trying to cheat you and should be avoided.

The formula of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills is a secret, and is known only to the company. Therefore if some dealer tells you a substitute is "just the same" or "just as good" he is simply trying to deceive you, because there is a larger profit for him in selling the imitation.

When you ask for Dr. Williams' Pink Pills see that the trade mark is on the wrapper of every package, and do not be persuaded to take anything else, no matter how plausible a story the dealer may tell. Imitations in medicine are always cheap, always worthless, and often dangerous, and people who have a care for their health, will always refuse them.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills cure when other medicines fail. That's why they are imitated, and that is why you should insist on getting the genuine. Used as a spring medicine, Dr. Williams' Pink Pills surpass all other medicines. If feeling "out of sorts," give them a trial.

THE I. O. O. F.

The Order had a Progressive and Satisfactory Year in 1894.

The annual report of the Grand Secretary, Independent Order of Oddfellows, for the year ending Dec. 31, 1894, is most satisfactory, showing that the order, notwithstanding the prevailing depression in commercial business, is still enjoying increasing prosperity. The net increase in the membership for the year was 1,104, within a trifle of the best since 1879, and twelve subordinate lodges have been instituted, with every prospect of several further additions in the near future, the total membership in good standing, being 21,662. During the year 3,000 brothers, 156 widows, and 27 children had received sick benefits and relief, amounting to $79,555.14. The total amount paid for current expenses was $75,845.55, making total disbursements $155,400.99, the average cost per member for all purposes being $7.17. The total average receipts per member was $9.34—making total receipts $202,515.47. The funds of the society are as follows: General benefit fund, $764,064.45; widows and orphans' fund, $79,036, and contingent fund $17,866.55; total, $860,967. The Rebekah branch also continues to prosper, having gained 736 members during the year, with increase of assets of $743.57.

JUBILEE AT BLEECKER ST. CHURCH.

Rev. A. Campbell, the Pastor and Debt Raiser, Gratefully Remembered.

The Rev. A. Campbell, who has labored so energetically in Bleecker st. Methodist church during the past three years, for its spiritual and financial welfare, is to be congratulated on his success, and his jubilee meeting last evening, when a sumptuous tea was given to celebrate the occasion of the church being free from debt, having paid a mortgage and interest of over $1,000, was a most enjoyable occasion. This, although small compared with many of his successes in other places, proves his superior ability as a financier. His membership, Sunday school and other church organizations also prove that the more important interests of the church have not been made to take second place, and as a slight expression of his popularity he was presented with a magnificent chair. The congregation are grateful to all who have so liberally helped them to dispose of this debt and also to Rev. Messrs. McCamus, Gardner, Faull and Woodcock, Messrs. W. McKeown, Wm. Johnson and E. D. O'Flynn for their addresses, and Miss Susie O'Flynn, Prof. Cafield and daughter, who so willingly and acceptably assisted in the musical part of the programme.

In the Sea Islands.

Life in the fair Sea Islands,
Oh, but it once was gay!
Soft lay the sea about them,
And laughed like a child at play.

Soft hung the sky above them,
And we could not tell for true
Whether above or below us
Were the deeper, sweeter blue.

Hoary and gray were the live-oaks,
And jewel-bright were the flowers,
And long and sweet the days went by,
With song to mark the hours.

For the children sang at their playing,
And the elders sang in the field;
And seldom a trouble came that way
But might with a song be healed.

Down on the fair Sea Islands
Came driving the winter storm;
White and gray was his mantle,
And wild was his shrouded form.

Up sprang the sea to meet him,
Down crashed the sky in wrath:
Terror and desolation
Followed his onward path.

Up sprang the sea in madness,
And flung itself far ashore,
And over the fair Sea Islands
It swept with a mighty roar.

Then rose the crying of children,
The groans of stricken men;
And women clasped their babies,
And fled for their lives amain.

But where, when the skies are falling,
When the waters are heaping high,
When cabin and hut are crashing,
Where shall the people fly?

John Reynolds's wife, in her doorway,
Counted her children all,
From Mary, the eldest daughter,
To the baby, sweet and small.

And one she bound to her shoulder,
And one she held to her breast,
But—"God ob mercy," she faltered,
"How kin I sabe de rest?

"Take little Jake in you' arms, Mary,
An' hol' him tight an' close!
An' Benny can keep to his feet, maybe;
But who's gwine to take my Rose?

"Four-year-old, little Rosy,
An' neber a chile more dear;
Come, honey, close to you' mammy,
An' cuddle beside me here!

"Four-year-old, little Rosy,
An' here is de babies three,
Dat Mammy an' Mary mus' carry,
Wid neber a hand lef' free.

"What, Benny? Why, chile, you' crazy!
You're lame as it is, an' weak;
De Lord knows best if you hab a chance
You' own little life to seek.

"You' wantin' to carry Rosy?
My lamb, she's heaby as you!
We mus' pray to de Lord and leabe her;
De ain't nothin' else to do."

But Benny raised his patient head;
"Mammy, I's small, dat's true;
But Jesus Christ is a tall man,
An' maybe he'll help us through.'

Down came the flood upon them;
The mother was swept apart,
With a baby bound to her shoulder,
With a baby clasped to her heart.

And now she drifted, drifted,
And now she touched and clung,
But still in the battling darkness
She kept her mother's tongue;

And hushed the babe at her bosom,
And hushed the babe at her back,
And called to the daughter Mary,
Through the torrent's rush and wrack.

Down on the fair Sea Islands
Broke with a dreary light;
And never a southern sun looked down
And saw such a woful sight.

Ruin, and death, and ruin;
Sorrow and bitter pain;
And many asleep in the tangle
Who never would wake again.

Oh! the laughing lips laid silent!
Oh! the dark eyes dim and veiled!
Oh! the cries to God for pity,
Since earthly pity has failed!

John Reynolds' wife, in the desert
Where lately a garden smiled,
Sat brooding like a nestling bird
Over each rescued child.

And smoothed the curls of this one,
And rocked it on her arm,
And bade the other bless the Lord,
Who kept it safe from harm.

Cheerfully she and Mary
Spoke now and again to each other,
But nought they said of the baby Rose,
And nought of the little brother.

Yet ever their eyes went seeking
Through the ruin waste and wide;
And they did not look at each other,
But turned their heads aside.

What is it, there in the willows,
What stirs, and moves, and wakes?
What sound is this, 'mid the hush of death,
Like an angel's voice that breaks?

What sight is this, that the woman falls
To her knees in the wet and slime;
That the maiden weeps, who has shed no tear
In all the fearful time?

Oh! the little, weary figure,
Tattered and bruised and torn,
With the heavy child on his shoulder,
And his face all gray and worn!

But oh! the joy in his sweet dark eyes
As when the heavens rejoice;
And oh! the sound of a seraph's song
In his trembling voice that cries:

"I's got her! I's got her, Mammy!
I's brought her safe to you.
I tol' you Christ was a tall man,
An' he done brought us through!"

Take in Your Goods.

Front st. merchants generally observe the by-law forbidding them from putting goods on the sidewalk, but a few of them are too anxious to push their goods upon the public. Our walks are none too wide and they should be left unobstructed. Then, it gives the streets an unsightly appearance to see piles of all kinds of goods stacked upon the pavement. We hope this reminder will be sufficient for those who desire to see Front street look neat at all times. Of course, there is always the exception of new goods, which must necessarily be piled outside for a time, where the merchant has not room for large cases, etc.

Dangers of Delay.

If we were allowed to look into the future and see the fatal consequences that follow a neglected cold, how differently would our course be; could we realize our danger, how speedily we would seek a cure; but with many it is only when the monster disease has fastened its fangs upon our lungs that we awaken to our folly. What follows a neglected cold? It is not diseases of the throat and lungs, bronchitis, asthma, consumption, and many other diseases of like nature. Is it worse than madness to neglect a cold, and it is folly not to have some good remedy available for its frequent complaint. One of the most efficacious medicines for all diseases of the throat and lungs, is Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup. This medicine is composed of several medicinal herbs, which exert a most wonderful influence in curing consumption and other diseases of the lungs and chest. It promotes a free and easy expectoration, soothes irritation and drives the disease from the system.

COMFORT PEASE
AND HER GOLD RING.
By MARY E. WILKINS.

CHAPTER II.

Matilda put her arm around Comfort, who was fairly crying. "Come," said she, "don't you mind anything about 'em, Comfort. Let's go in the schoolhouse I've got a splendid Baldwin apple in my dinner-pail and I'll give you half of it. They're mad 'cause they haven't got any gold ring." "I have got a gold ring," sobbed Comfort: "Honest and true, Black and blue, Lay me down and cut me in two." That was the awful truth-testing formula of the village children.

"Course you have," asid Matilda, with indignant backward glances at the others. "Let's go and get that Baldwin apple."

Comfort went with Matilda, but it took more than a Baldwin apple to solace her, and her first day at school was a most unhappy one. It was very probable that the other scholars, and especially the older ones who had many important matters of their own in mind, thought little more about her gold ring, after school had begun, but Comfort could not understand that. She had a feeling that the minds of the whole school were fixed upon her and she was standing upon a sort of spiritual platform of shame, which was much worse than the schoolroom floor. If she saw one girl whisper to another she directly thought it was about her. If a girl looked at her her color rose and her heart began to beat loud, for she thought she was saying to herself: "Likely story."

Comfort was thankful when it was time to go home, and she trudged off alone down the snowy road. None of the others lived her way. She left them all at the turn of the road, just below the schoolhouse.

"Good-night, Comfort," Matilda Stebbins sang out loyally, but the big girl with red cheeks followed her with, "Wear that gold ring to school to-morrow and let us see it." Then everybody giggled, and poor Comfort fled out of sight. It seemed to her that she must wear that ring to school the next day. She made up her mind that she would ask her mother, but when she got home she found that her Grandmother Atkins had come, and also her Uncle Ebenezer and Aunt Susan. They had driven over from Barre, where they lived, and her grandmother was going to stay and make a little visit, but her uncle and aunt were going home soon, and her mother was hurrying to make some hot biscuits for supper.

"PLEASE LET ME, MOTHER."

So when Comfort came in, she was stopped short at the sight of the company, and had to kiss them all and answer their questions with shy politeness. Comfort was very fond of her grandmother, but this time she did not feel quite so delighted to see her as usual. As soon as she had got a chance she slipped into the pantry after her mother. "Mother," she whispered, pulling her apron softly, "can I wear my gold ring to school to-morrow?"

"No, you can't. How many times have I got to tell you?" said her mother, mixing the biscuit-dough energetically.

"Please let me, mother.. They didn't believe I've got one!"

"Let them believe it or not, just as they have a mind to," said her mother.

"They think I'm telling stories."

"What have you been telling about your ring in school for, when you ought to have been studying? Now, Comfort, I can't have you standing there teasing me any longer.. I've got to get these biscuits into the oven, they must have supper before they go home.. You go right out and set the table. Get the clean tablecloth out of the drawer, and you may put on the best knives and forks. Not another word. You can't wear that gold ring until your hand grows to it."

Comfort went out and set the table, but she looked so dejected that the company all noticed it. She could not eat any of the hot biscuits when they sat down to supper, and she did not eat much of the company cake. "You don't feel sick, do you child?" asked her grandmother, anxiously.

"No, ma'am," replied Comfort, and she swallowed a big lump in her throat.

"She ain't sick," said her mother, severly. "She's fretting because she can't wear her gold ring to school."

"Oh, Comfort, you must wait till your hand grows to it," said her aunt Susan.

"Yes, of course she must," said her Uncle Ebenezer.

"Eat your supper and your hand will grow to it before long," said her father, who, left to himself, would have let Comfort wear the ring.

"It wouldn't do for you to wear that ring an' lose it. It's real gold," said her grandmother. "Have another piece of the sweetcake."

But Comfort wanted no more sweetcake. She put both her hands to her face and wept, and her mother sent her promptly out of the room and to bed. Comfort lay there and sobbed and heard her Uncle Ebenezer's covered wagon roll out of the yard, and sobbed again. Then she fell asleep and did not know it when her mother and grandmother came in, and looked at her, and kissed her.

"I'm sorry she feels so bad" said Comfort's mother, "but I can't let her wear that ring."

"No, you can't," said her grandmother, and they went out shading the candle.

Comfort said no more about the ring the next morning. She did not eat much breakfast, and crept off miserably to school at a quarter past eight, and she had another unhappy day. Nobody had forgotten about the gold ring. She was teased about it at every opportunity. "Why didn't you wear that handsome gold ring?" asked the big girl with red cheeks, until poor Comfort got nearly distracted.

It seemed to her that the time to go home would never come, and as if she could never endure to go to school again. That night she begged her mother to let her stay at home the next day. "No," said her mother. "You've begun to go to school, and you're going to school unless you're sick. Now, this evening you had better sit down and write a letter to your Aunt Comfort. It's a long time since you wrote to her."

SHE LIFTED HER BRASS CATCH CAUTIOUSLY.

So Comfort sat down and wrote laboriously a letter to her aunt Comfort, and thanked her anew, as she always did, for her gold ring and the gold dollar: "I wish to express my thanks again for the beautiful and valuable gifts, which you presented me for my name" wrote Comfort in the little stilted style of the day.

After the letter was written it was eight o'clock and Comfort's mother said she had better go to bed.

"You look tired out," said she, "I guess you'll have to go to bed early if you're going to school."

"Can't I stay at home to-morrow, mother," pleaded Comfort, with sudden hope.

"No," said her mother. "You've got to go if you're able."

"Mother, can't I wear it just once?"

"Don't you bring that ring up again," said her mother. "Take your candle and go right upstairs."

Comfort gave a pitiful little sob. "Now don't you go to crying over it," ordered her mother, and Comfort tried to choke back another sob as she went out of the room.

Comfort's father looked up from "The Old Farmer's Almanac." He was going to Bolton the next day with a load of wood, and wanted to see what the weather was to be, and so was consulting the almanac.. "What was it Comfort wanted?" he inquired.

"She wanted to wear that gold ring her Aunt Comfort gave her to school," replied Mrs. Pease. "And I've told her over and over again I shouldn't let her do it."

"It's a mile too big for her, and she'd be sure to lose it off," said Grandmother Atkins, "and it would be a pity to have anything happen to it, when it's real gold, too."

"She couldn't wind a rag round her finger, under it, could she?" asked Comfort's father, hesitatingly.

"Wear a rag round her finger under it," repeated Mrs. Pease. "I rather guess she can wait till her finger grows to it. You'd let that child do anything."

Mr. Pease did not say anything more, but studied the "Old Farmer's Almanac" again, and found out that it was likely to be fair weather for the season.

It was past midnight, and the hearth fire was raked down, and Comfort's father and mother were all in bed and asleep, when a little figure in a white nightgown, holding a lighted candle, padding softly on little cold bare feet, came down the stairs. Comfort paused in the entry and listened. She could hear the clock tick and her father snore. The best parlor door was on the right. She lifted the brass latch cautiously, and pushed the door open Then she stole into the best parlor. The close icy air smote her like a breath from the north pole. There was no fire in the best parlor except on Thanksgiving day, and perhaps twice besides, when there was company to tea, from fall to spring. The cold therein semed condensed and concentrated, the haircloth sofa and chairs and the mahogany table seemed to give out cold as stoves did heat.

There were two coffin plates and funeral wreaths, which had belonged to uncles of Comfort who had died before she was born, in frames on the wall, and these always scared Comfort.

She kept her eyes away from them as she went swiftly in her little bare feet, which had no feeling in them as they pressed the icy floor, whereon set the rosewood workbox.

Comfort set her candle on the table, and turned the key of the box with her stiff fingers. Then she raised the lid noiselessly and there lay the ring in little square compartment of the tray—next to it in the corner lay the gold dollar.

Comfort took the ring out, shut the box lid down, turned the key and fled. She thought some one called her name as she went upstairs, and she stopped and listened, but all she heard was the clock ticking, and her father snoring, and her heart beating. Then she kept on to her own chamber, and put out her candle and crept into her feather bed, under the patchwork quilts. There she lay all night, wide-awake, with the gold ring clasped tightly in her little cold fist.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

The Judge and the Cyclist.

The other day a jocular cyclist, well known in the Copenhagen sporting world, had to answer a summons for riding on the foot path leading to Lyngby Church. The judge thundered out the words, "You have been cycling on the Lyngby Church foot path?"

The cyclist nodded assent.

"You will have to pay a fine of four kroner."

The accused took four coins out of his pocket and laid them on the bar. "But tell me, Your Worship, have Prince Waldemar and Princess Marie permission to cycle on the path in question?"

The judge rubbed his nose.

"Um! No, certainly not. Is this your first offence?"

"Yes, Your Worship, and my last," answered the culprit.

"Well, then, I will let you off with a caution this time."

Our cyclist gathered up his money, made his bow, and walked off. But when he got to the door, the judge called out to him:

"Halloa, you there, did you actually see Prince Waldemar and Princess Marie riding on that path?"

"I? No, Your Worship!" replied the cyclist, with a twinkle in his eye, and was gone.—Handelstidningen.

The Queen's Secretary.

Sir Fleetwood Isham Edwards is the only member of the higher entourage of the Queen who is a bourgeois pure and simple. As a rule, her Majesty's confidential advisers are of aristocratic or distinguished military connections. Sir Fleetwood was the son of a stockbroker, who lived and died and was buried at Harrow, where some five-and-thirty years ago he had three sons in the school belonging to the then somewhat slighted body of Home-Boarders. He entered under Dr. Vaughan, and left under Dr. Vaughan in 1858, and obtained a commission in the Engineers in 1863. It was at the Berlin Congress—he was attached to the special embassy—that he gained the favor of that best of judges of men, the Earl of Beaconsfield. Through him he was brought to the Queen's notice, and in the year of the Congress, 1878, he became assistant private secretary and keeper of the privy purse. Since then he has gone on from honor to honor. The pink of perfection, always well dressed and well-demeanored, he has about him something of the martinet, which seems almost inseparable from the successful sapper, and is not unwelcome to the highest quarters of the realm. He has a brother, also a soldier-secretary, Colonel C. C. Edwards, private secretary to Earl Fitzwilliam.

Misapprehension.

"But," insisted the pilgrim, "I am a poor man. I was informed that you rob only the rich."

"Oh, I know," he suddenly exclaimed, "how that impression got abroad. I used to be a florist."

After which he went through the wayfarer, assuring him the while that his mistake was quite natural and he didn't mind it a bit.

A Dinner Pill.—Many persons suffer excruciating agony after partaking of a hearty dinner. The food partaken of is like a ball of lead upon the stomach, and instead of being a healthy nutriment it becomes a poison to the system. They are just the medicine to take if troubled with Indigestion or Dyspepsia.

WILL FRANCE FIGHT?

England Determined To Stop Her Aggression.

PATIENCE NO LONGER A VIRTUE.

The Effect of Sir Edward Grey's Declaration in the Commons—Opinions of British and French Papers—A Sensation in Egypt.

New York, March 29.—The Evening World prints the following from London:

The Ministerial statement in the House of Commons last night that the British Government regards the despatch of a French expedition to the Niger as an unfriendly act created a profound sensation.

Especial significance attaches to the words of Sir Edward Grey, the Parliamentary Secretary of the Foreign Office, as he read them from a manuscript in the handwriting of the Earl of Kimberley, the Secretary of State for the Foreign Department.

Lord Kimberley had submitted them to a suddenly-summoned Cabinet meeting, held early in the evening, in Sir William Harcourt's room at the House.

Mr. Labouchere correctly interpreted the prevailing feeling of the members in describing the Ministerial statement as a menace to France, a quasi declaration of war. It is felt that such a tone would not be adopted by the Government unless milder representations to the French Foreign Office had failed of the desired effect.

The World correspondent spoke to members of all parties in the lobby after Sir Edward Grey's speech, and found it to be practically the consensus of opinion that, though this difficulty will probably be adjusted, it must bring much nearer the conflict with France, which the most acute observers of foreign affairs now feel to be inevitable.

It was suggested by some that Lord Rosebery relies on the influence of Russia being cast against France should she adopt an aggressive line, but others believe that the effect of the new balance of power in Europe would be that Russia and Germany would stand by while Great Britain and France fought an exhausting war.

London, March 29.—Commenting on the present aspect of the Anglo-French situation, The Globe says: "England can safely call upon the world to judge whether she should face France's deliberate provocations in Africa or whether it would become the dignity of a great nation to turn the other cheek to the smiter any longer."

The Pall Mall Gazette says: "France is warned since last evening that she has not a shred of pretence that she does not know that her advance into the Nile Valley would be regarded by England as an act of open and avowed hostility."

The Star says: "We deeply mistrust the statement of Sir Edward Grey in the House of Commons last evening, which was a latent menace to France; first, because it is the fruit of a new spirit which has unhappily crept in the Liberal foreign policy; and, second, because we are aghast at the magnitude of the claims to which we are thereby committed."

France Will Not Recognize Britain's Claims

Paris, March 29.—The Debats, in commenting on Sir Edward Grey's statement before the House of Commons last evening, says: These recriminations are unfounded. We do not admit that France's silence to England's claims to the Upper Nile region means consent. France was no party to England's treaty with Germany and Italy, in which these claims were submitted. We must object to Sir Edward Grey's confounding British and Egyptian rights. The Khedive, in the eyes of France, is the sole and legitimate chief under the Sultan's sovereignty. We do not know that we have an expedition on its way to the Upper Nile region, but we do know that France, under all circumstances, will recognize the Porte's and Egypt's rights to the Upper Nile and nobody else's.

The Paris says: England is observing with a jaundiced eye France's action in Madagascar, and is seeking to raise obstacles to French policy in other parts.

The Patrie says: Sir Edward Grey's statement is calculated to strain the relations of France and England. We perceive in it German's influence. As soon as Germany raises her voice England begins to bray.

Will Question the French Government.

London, March 30.—The Daily News correspondent in Paris says: M. Lamarzelle has given notice of a question to M. Hanotaux, Minister of Foregn Affairs in the Senate, as to Sir Edward Grey's statement. M. Hanotaux conferred with Premier Ribot and agreed to reply on April 3. The official world does not see any quarrelsome intention in Sir Edward Grey's declaration, but the latter has fallen with startling effect upon those wanting to climb into great financial and political situations through Africa.

The Daily News learns from its Cairo correspondent: Sir Edward Grey's statement has caused a profound sensation here. It is the absorbing topic. The Anglophobe section is especially struck by the clear, firm attitude of the Government. The declaration cannot fail to have a good effect here.

The News is informed that a Cabinet meeting will be held to-morrow to consider foreign affairs.

MANITOBA LEGISLATURE RISES.

The Opinion Unanimous That Hasty Action Is Inadvisable

Winnipeg, Man., March 29.—This afternoon the Manitoba Legislature adjourned for six weeks, after Governor Schultz had assented to various bills passed during the session. When the House rose Premier Greenway was presented with a full length oil painting of himself by members of the Legislature.

There was little or no discussion when the Premier moved the adjournment of the Legislature. In a brief speech he pointed out the necessity and advisability of delaying action and he was followed by the leader of the Opposition, who concurred that the school question was too important to be decided hastily.

It is reported that the leading Conservatives here have received assurances from Ottawa that W. B. Scarth of Winnipeg will yet be appointed Governor of Manitoba.

THE ONTARIO HOUSE.

Proposed Inspection of Building Societies.

PUBLIC VERSUS SEPARATE SCHOOLS

Marter's Bill For Appointment of An Arbitrator in Municipal Disputes and the Bill For Equalized Assessments Read a Second Time.

Toronto, March 30.—By great persistence Mr. McKay of Oxford yesterday got his bill for the appointment of a Provincial Inspector of building societies through the second reading, in face of the opposition of three Cabinet Ministers and a number of the members. In addition he persuaded the House to appoint a select committee to consider the bill. In moving the second reading, Mr. McKay explained that, while he believed the existing societies were doing business on a sound basis, the very success with which they were attended would tend to make others venture into the business without any great knowledge of the work, and for this reason he claimed it was desirable in the interests of the public that a Government inspector should be appointed.

Mr. Stratton objected to the bill, arguing that if an exhaustive inspection of all building societies were intended, a whole army of officials would be required. The powers which were desired to be conferred on the inspector were extraordinary; no business manager would allow any one man to examine his books and say whether the concern was solvent or not. Taking the bill clause by clause he argued that there was not one but that was open to serious objection. It provides that where the inspector found a society to be insolvent he should have full power to take over and carry on the business until such time as he could call a meeting of the shareholders. What would that mean? There would be such a run on the funds very few societies could withstand, and yet the inspector might be mistaken in his conclusion as to insolvency. He was in favor of Government inspection to a certain extent, but it was a most serious question, and he suggested that the Attorney-General should enquire into the whole subject, and, if possible, bring in a bill which would attain the desired end.

Mr. Howland also opposed the bill.

Sir Oliver Mowat said the subject was a most important one, and he had no doubt many societies would welcome the appointment of an inspector, but there were provisions in the bill that were objectionable, and he hoped that, having called the attention of the House to the matter, Mr. McKay would withdraw his measure. Before such a law was enacted, he urged that it was necessary the societies should have an opportunity of expressing their views.

Mr. McKay, however, pressed his bill, claiming that the building societies would have ample opportunity of stating their case before the select committee, which, he proposed, should be appointed to consider the bill.

Hon. Mr. Hardy said there was not sufficient information in their possession at the present time to pass such a bill. He suggested that the House should allow the bill to be read a second time on the understanding that it went no further.

Mr. McKay said it was not his intention that the bill should be passed this session. It was his idea that if it were sent to, say the Legal Committee, the information which Mr. Hardy said they had not could be obtained.

The bill was read a second time and a select committee was appointed to consider it. The Provincial Secretary then spoke for the first time. His speech was short and emphatic: "I have no idea such a bill should become law, I do not think there has been any demand for it; and I do not think there is any good reason for a reference of the bill to a committee."

Two bills were read a third time, namely: Respecting an agreement between the city of Stratford and the Grand Trunk Railway Co. of Canada, Mr Biggar; to authorize the corporation of the city of Brantford to sell a portion of Mount Hope Cemetery, Mr. Hardy.

Mr. Marter's bill for the appointment of a provincial arbitrator for municipal disputes; Mr. Crawford's for the inspection of boilers; and Mr. Ryerson's, providing for the equalization of assessment, were read a second time. Mr. Crawford's bill was referred to a special committee.

These bills also passed the second reading: Respecting certain county drainage works, Mr. Whitney; to amend the Tile, Stone and Timber Drainage Act, Mr. Ferguson; to amend the Municipal Act, Mr. German; to amend the Assessment Act, Mr. Biggar; to amend the Assessment Act, Mr. Chapple; to amend the act respecting the establishment of Houses of Refuge, Mr. Cleland.

The Toronto city bill was also read a second time on the motion of Mr. Howland.

A number of private bills were passed through the second reading.

Mr Cleland introduced a bill for the relief of cheese and butter manufacturers' associations, enabling them to borrow money on real and personal property.

Asked by Mr St. John whether it was the intention of the Government to take any steps towards ascertaining the quantity, quality, acreage or value of the timber assets of the province, the Commissioner of Crown Lands replied that the Government were constantly taking some steps in that direction. It was not, however, he added, the intention of the Government at present to appoint a commission for that purpose.

In the Private Bills Committee yesterday morning there was a fight over the division of certain school taxes in the town of Cornwall between public and separate schools. These taxes are collectable on two cotton mills and another manufacturing establishment. According to the statute law of the province these would, in the ordinary course, be divided in proportion to the stock held in these industries by Protestants and Catholics. Some time since, however, in accordance with an arrangement said to have been arrived at by the parties interested, the Town Council passed a by-law dividing the school taxes on the mills between the two systems on the basis of 70 per cent. to the public, and 30 to the separate schools, which is about the proportion in which the total assessment of the town stands between the two parties. The Town Council and the Separate School Board applied to the Private Bills Committee to ratify this compromise in the form of a special act prepared for the purpose.

Both sides were well represented and the contest was keen. Chairman Gibson, after hearing the arguments, said even if an agreement was proved he doubted if the committee would be at liberty to grant the legislation asked for. If they did they would be making different school laws for every municipality in the province, something contrary to public policy.

On a division of 8 to 27 the committee decided to throw out the bill.

The 27th annual report upon the Common Jails, Prisons and Reformatories, which was distributed yesterday, shows that in 1894 there was an increase of 831 committals as compared with the year 1893. Of this increase a little over half arises from committals for petty larceny 286, trespass 136 and burglary 38. The number of males committed during the year was 8063, being an increase of 883 over 1893; while the females committed show a decrease of 52. The committals of boys and girls under 16 years of age show a decrease as to the former of 110, and as to the latter an increase of 3, when compared with 1893. Committals for drunkenness show a decrease of 378, as compared with last year. A comparison of the statistics for 1894 with those of the past 20 years shows a favorable condition in the present management of the jails throughout the province. The average cost per prisoner was a little less than 14 cents per day. The cost of rations, clothing and fuel for the 9450 prisoners last year was $450,115, and for salaries to jail officials $79,790.

The crime of murder has not increased within the province; it has remained about the same since 1877. There were 32 murders in 1894, while in 1877 there were 39, and in 1893 there were 34. It is a remarkable fact that the crime of rape nearly doubled last year. Attempts at suicide more than doubled; arson increased 40 per cent.; bigamy nearly 50 per cent., while perjury increased over 200 per cent.

Mr. Conmee has given notice of this resolution: "That in the opinion of this House the mineral resources of the province warrant an active policy for the advancement of our mining and metallurgical industries, and it would be of advantage to the province should the Government adopt such measures as may insure to all classes of our people, desirous of obtaining the same, a scientific and practical course in mining, engineering and metallurgy, in a Provincial School of Mines, fully equipped to impart such courses, and take such further steps as may be necessary to insure the more rapid development of mining and the establishment of metallurgical works for the treatment of the more important economic minerals of the province."

AN ARMISTICE IN THE EAST.

War Temporarily, and Probably Finally, Ceases.

Washington, March 30.—The following telegram was received to-day by the Japanese officials:

"On the opening of the negotiations the Chinese Plenipotentiary proposed an armistice, which the Japanese Government were willing to accept on certain conditions. While this negotiation was going on the untoward event happened on the person of the Chinese Plenipotentiary. His Majesty th cEmperor, having in view this unhappy occurrence, commanded the Japanese Plenipotentiaries to consent to a temporary armistice without conditions. This was communicated to the Chinese Plenipotentiary."

Minister Kurino says that the effect of the Emperor's order will be the immediate cessation of aggressive hostilities, and that the Japanese armies will make no further advance as long as the armistice lasts. Some fighting may occur if provoked by the Chinese, but the second step towards peace has been practically taken, the arrival of Li Hung Chang and the satisfactory character of his plenipotentiary credentials having been the first.

The Minister is of the opinion the action of the Emperor was influenced by the confidence His Majesty reposed in the successful conclusion of the peace negotiations through the ultimate acceptance by Li Hung Chang of the terms stipulated by Japan.

It was immediately after the close of the second session of the peace plenipotentiaries, said the Minister, that Li Hung Chang was prostrated by a fanatic, and up to that time nothing had been considered of China's request for an armistice, pending the consideration of the terms of peace. The proposition had been met by the presentation of certain conditions from the Japanese plenipotentiaries. The discussion of the terms of final peace had not been entered upon. The Emperor's command of temporary armistice is also a refutation of the idea that Japan is disposed to humiliate China or merely to acquire territory. Japan has gained the end of demonstrating Japanese importance in Eastern affairs.

A CRANK, BUT LIVED TO 140.

An Eccentric St. Louis Doctor Nearly a Century and a Half Old Dies Suddenly.

St. Louis, March 29.—Dr. W. Hotchkiss, alleged to have reached the age of 140 years, died suddenly yesterady at his home, No. 2004 Washington-avenue, of heart disease.

The deceased came to St. Louis 40 years ago and always been known as the "Color doctor." Dr. A. J. Buck says that his Masonic record has been traced back 100 years, showing conclusively that he was at least 121 years old. A letter received from his old home in Dinwiddie County, Va., over a year ago says he was born there in 1755, and lived there for a number of years, finally drifting west.

Dr. Hotchkiss possessed many striking peculiarities, among them being a natural aversion to water. He is said by those nearest to him to have not taken a bath for over 25 years.

He believed diseases were caused by the plus or minus rays of light, which the system absorbed in different quantities. In order to carry out this scheme he adorned himself with vari-colored strips of ribbon to keep himself in sympathy with his patients, each of whom he presetned with a strip of cloth of some particular color to wear while undergoing "treatment." He claimed to have discovered the elixir vitae.

At regular intervals he stood over a smoking brasier and allowed the smoke to envelope his body and saturate his scanty clothing.

TO OFFSET THE BUTTER BONUS

Motion in the Commons to Tax Canadian Butter—Legislative Assemblies in the Three Kingdoms Approved

London, March 30.—In the House of Comons yesterday Mr. J. K. Wingfield Digby, Conservative M.P. for North Dorset, said that, in view of the position of unequal competitor which the importation of bounty-assisted butter would place the British farmer, he desired to ask the President of the Board of Agriculture whether he would try to induce the Chancellor of the Exchequer to impose an import duty equivalent to the amount of the bounty.

The Rt. Hon. Herbert Gardner replied that he could not undertake to propose to the Chancellor to embark upon a policy which might mean retaliatory tariffs.

The House passed by a vote of 128 to 102 this evening J. H. Dalziel's resolution affirming that it was desirable to establish local legislative assemblies for England, Scotland, Ireland and Wales.

SIR TUPPER WILL STAY.

An Amicable Settlement of the Difficulty Reached.

TRADE WITH THE COLONIES.

The Ottawa Macdonald Statue to Be Unveiled May 24—A Number of Appointments Gazetted—General News From the Capital.

Ottawa, March 29.—"All's well that ends well." As foreshadowed last evening Sir Charles H. Tupper has decided to retain his portfolio as Minister of Justice. Great satisfaction is expressed in political circles at the announcement. The reasons whic have led the Minister of Justice to reconsider his wish to retire are not officially announced, but it is currently reported that a satisfactory understanding has been reached so that to-day he was at work in his department, although he did not attend the meeting of the Cabinet this afternoon.

The Journal says the conditions on which Sir Charles has reconsidered his determination to retire are "that no Government measure will be introduced this session regarding the Manitoba schools, that the matter will be left an open question, and that only the estimates will be submitted to Parliament, so that the session may be as short as possible, thus giving an opportunity of an early appeal to the country after prorogation."

There is much that is improbable in the foregoing statement. First of all the Opposition will have much to say with regard to the length of the session and secondly, it is not likely that the Government will intimate thus early when an appeal to the country will take place.

The question of extension of trade with sister colonies is now receiving the attention of the Government. Satisfaction is expressed here that obstacles to preferential trade with Australia are now removed by the measure which has just passed the Imperial Parliament. It is felt, however, in view of the fact that Sir John Thompson paved the way with Sir Cecil Rhodes for a treaty with Cape Colony, that it would be better to endeavor to reach a definite conclusion with that colony first, more especially as Australasian colonies are now talking of confederation.

The announcement that Hon. J. C. Patterson disapproved of the purchase of any more Martini-Metford rifles has created a great sensation in local military circles, although it cannot be said to be altogether unexpected. Right along the Ottawa riflemen have been averse to the purchase of a weapon which it was proved consisted either of old Martini barrels, plugged and re-bored, or else solid new barrels, Martini pattern, rifled to Metford calibre, and, therefore, very heavy. The opinin prevails here that the Government should adopt the new magazine rifle—the Lee-Metford.

Phil Hebert, the successful sculptor for the monument to Sir John Macdonald, which is to be erected on Parliament Hill this year, was in the city to-day and had an interview with the Minister of Public Works. He states that finishing touches are just being given in Paris to the casting of the bronze figure of the late Premier. The pedestal, which is to be of gray granite, is about ready in Montreal. Mr. Hebert thinks that the statue will be ready for unveiling on May 24. He looked over the suggested sites for the monument and favors a location on Broad-walk, leading from Wellington-street to the tower of the Parliament building. His proposal is that the walk should be broadened where the statue is to be erected, and that the monument to Cartier, which now stands at the western end of the Parliament building, should be removed and placed opposite to that of his great co-worker for Canadian Confederation.

The deputation from Rat Portage which has been in town for the last two days saw Mr. Costigan again to-day and secured his consent to the opening of the lakes adjacent to the Canadian Pacific Railway between Port Arthur and Rat Portage, for limited commercial fishing. These lakes are to be named, after which an order-in-council will be passed specifying which may be fished and the number of licenses that will be allowed. The deputation represented that if the number of licenses were restricted there is no danger of the lakes being depleted.

The Department of Railways and Canals has issued orders to start building the trestle work for the new coal wharf at Halifax, and also for the wooden crib-work for the wharf. Plans are now being prepared in the department for new coal sheds and other buildings.

The Canada Gazette on Saturday will contain the following announcements:

Joseph Octave Arsenault, merchant, of Abrams village, Prince Edward Island, has been called to the Senate.

Hon. Arthur Rupert Dickey of Ottawa, a member of the Queen's Privy Council for Canada, to be Minister of Militia and Defence for the Dominion, vice Hon. J. C. Patterson, resigned.

Hon. Walter Humphries Montague of Dunnville, a member of the Queen's Privy Council, to be Secretary of State of Canada, vice Mr. Dickey.

Hon. Theodore Davie, Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of British Columbia, to be a local judge in Admiralty of the Exchequer Court in and for British Columbia.

Walter Francis O'Hara of Chatham, having passed the necessary examination and complied with other requirements of law, has been granted a commission as Dominion land surveyor.

Following were the proceedings in the Supreme Court to-day: In Toronto Street Railway Company v. City of Toronto. Argument was concluded, judgment being reserved.

Toronto Street Railway Co. v Gosnell was argued. Action in this case was to recover damages for injury caused by a trolley car running into respondent's team, and the only defence argued on the appeal was that the respondent before starting to cross the track whereby the injury occurred did not look to see if a car was coming, and so contributed by his own negligence to the injury. Judgment reserved. Osler, Q.C., and Laidlaw, Q.C., for appellants.

Northwest Transportation Co. v Mackenzie is now being argued, being an action for loss of wheat delivered to the appellant company for carriage by being mixed, as alleged, with inferior wheat. The company claims that the mixing was not done by them, but by other carriers. Osler, Q.C., and Lister, Q.C., for appellant. Laidlaw, Q.C., and Kappelle, for respondent. The next case on the list is Toronto Street Railway Co. v the Queen.

Mr. Hugh Ryan, contractor for Sault Ste Marie Canal, is in the city to settle up accounts with the Government. As the work was awarded at so much per yard the total cost of the canal will take some time to figure out, but Mr. Ryan says the work will be well within the Government's second estimate, that is, the estimate after the plans were changed.

London, March 29.—The bill to create a municipal bureau of fire insurance now before the Ontario Legislature, has been much criticised here, and the Birmingham and Midland Counties Master Printers' Association has decided to urge the Toronto proposal upon the town councils in the Midlands.

DIFFERENT KINDS OF OATHS.

How the Ancient Phoenicians and Romans Made Their Vows.

The ancient Phoenicians in taking a legal oath, held a lamb in one hand and a stone in the other, to imitate their wishes that God might strike them dead, as they were ready to do the lamb, if they swore not according to truth. The old Romans, upon a like occasion, took a pattern and cast it from them saying to themselves that God might cast them away if there was any falsity in what they swore. In taking or administering an oath, the Jews slew a calf and cut it asunder, and the person that was to swear walked through the dissected portions to convince the spectators that he wished God, in like manner, might cut him asunder, in case he falsified his oath. The Scottish Highlanders used to think slightingly of the Lowland form of oath. At the Carlisle assizes a Highland drover, who had meditated the ruin of another, prosecuted him for horse stealing, and swore positively to the fact. This being done, the supposed criminal desired that his prosecutor might be sworn in the Highland manner, and the oath being tendered him accordingly, he refused to take it, saying: "There is a hantle of difference betwixt blawing on a book and damning ane's ain soul."

The righteous proverb about sauce for the gander has lately received a new illustration in a case reported by The Chicago Tribune.

"George," said Mrs. Wilson to her husband, "you are becoming a confirmed smoker."

"But, my dear," answered Mr. Wilson, whose home is in the suburbs while his business is in town, "I have to ride in the smoking car so much that I am compelled to light a cigar in self-defence."

That very evening Mr. Wilson, after frowning and hitching about, said to his wife:

"Excuse me, Amanda, but you smell frightfully of raw onions."

"But, my dear," answered Mrs. Wilson, "Bridget eats raw onions, and I have to eat one now and then in self-defence."

Small Islands.

The island on which Eddystone Lighthouse stands is the smallest inhabited one in the world. At low water it is 30 feet in diameter; at high water the light house, the diameter of which at the base is 28¾ feet, completely covers it. It is inhabited by three persons, and lies nine miles off the Cornish coast, and fourteen miles southwest of Plymouth breakwater. Flatholme, an island in the British Channel, is only a mile and a half in circumference, but, consisting mostly of rich pasture land, supports a farm house besides the light house, which has a revolving light 165 feet above the level of the sea.

BELLEVILLE, SATURDAY, MAR. 30.

TAXES AS THEY ARE IN ENGLAND.

Mr. Nicholas Flood Davin, speaking before the Young Men's Conservative Club at Winnipeg lately, gave some facts about taxation in England, which he had culled from the Reform Almanac for 1895, and from which he found that local taxation threatens to equal the Imperial imposts. Millions sterling go for poor rates, yet they have free trade, which is Mr. Laurier's panacea, until in another portion of his speech he goes in for a revenue tariff, or as the programme of the convention of 1893 demanded—and which he quotes in his speech at Montreal—he goes in for reciprocity. The ruined farmer and the ruined mechanic can hug the joy of free trade in England, said Mr. Davin, and look forward with cheerful enthusiasm to the workhouse. In fifty years, up to 1868, local taxation rose from £8,000,000 sterling ($40,000,000) to $80,000,000, and of the increase of $40,000,000 the poor rates have to be credited with $10,000,000—but you have the panacea of free trade, which is a great consolation—and the ratio of increase since 1868 has been still greater. Do you want to pay for stamps on cheques, agreements, notes? In 1894 the land tax amounted to $5,172,000, and as all our farmers are freeholders, they would have the privilege. House duty amounted to $6,125,000, which you would all have to pay. You would enjoy this. Property and income tax goes near to $100,000,000; stamps, $64,300,000, exclusive of free and patent stamps, which amount to $4,354,215. To be more particular, customs amounting to $150,000,000, all on things consumed by the poor—beer, chicory, cocoa, coffee, currants, figs, plums, raisins, spirits, tea. Tea alone paid $17,500,000. Then the excise—$50,000,000 in beer; $81,500,000 in spirits; and on railways, which, of course, falls on the traveller, $840,000; stamps—death duties of various kinds, $50,000,000; deeds and other instruments, $10,200,000; receipts, drafts and other penny stamps, $5,850,000; At every turn of his life the Englishman pays taxes; $250 on becoming a barrister, $400 to be articled to an attorney; land tax on land and tenements, $5,100,000; inhabited house duty. $7,200,000; total land tax and house duty, $12,300,000; income tax, $79,300,000. For every male servant, $3.75, and 8 cts. a pound on tea. Gentlemen, you pay your money and take your choice. Take the population of the United Kingdom and the population of Canada, and do a sum in proportion. Give Mr. Foster these sources of revenue, and he can give you free trade, and let in wheat, cattle, pork, horses, etc. all free, while you pay to sell them in the United States.

A WANT SUPPLIED.

The Ontario is, in prize ring parlance, a "glutton for punishment." Not content with being virtually knocked out in his wild contention that the Grit party are not advocating free trade, by our producing columns from the speeches of Mr. Laurier and Sir Richard Cartwright, that they had been advocating "Free Trade as it is in England," and even from its own columns and also those of the Globe and the Montreal Witness, it comes to the scratch again in its issue of Thursday and cries out "for more." Its defence, however, is very feeble. Here is the best that it can do:

> Supposing for the sake of argument that the Ontario along with some of our Tory friends became quasi converts to the theory of "annexation" what has that to do with the position of the Liberal party on the Trade Question? For all that the INTELL has said, yet, our former assertion holds good that it cannot quote a single sentence from the speeches of any Liberal leader to prove that the fiscal policy advocated by the Liberal party is Free Trade as they have it in England or anywhere else.
>
> Mr. Laurier has said that the fiscal policy of the Liberal party when they came into power at the next election would be such that the financial interests of the country would not be thrown into confusion. Freedom of raw material and a revenue tariff on the manufactured article will afford manufacturers all the protection compatible with the agricultural and labor interests of this country.

Now that our contemporary has asked for more, it shall have more—sufficient to satisfy its most gluttonous propensities.

Mr. Laurier, as all must have observed who have followed his political meanderings, suits his utterances so far as he can to the section or particular locality in which he may happen to be. In the great manufacturing centres he has spoken guardedly of a gradual strangling of the policy under which our manufactures have been built up; but in Winnipeg, where he believed free trade was in favor, he said in his speech last autumn:

> "We shall give you free trade, and, although it will be a hard fight, we shall not give in one inch, or retrace one step, until we have reached the goal, and that goal is the same policy of free trade as exists in England to-day."

Is the Ontario satisfied, or does it need more evidence that "Free Trade as it is in England" is being advocated by a Liberal leader, and by the organs of the party, as the policy of that party?

If not, we will just mention, in order to show that leading journalistic exponents of the Liberal policy are urging the adoption of Free Trade, that the St. Thomas Journal has hoisted at the head of its editorial columns the motto for the campaign, "Free Trade on British Lines," and that the Hamilton Times is reproving its party confreres for infirmity of purpose in calling a halt in the declaration that a Free Trade tariff will be enacted as soon as possible, should the Grits attain to power.

In face of this positive evidence, no further denial by the Ontario that Free Trade 's the policy of the Liberal can be regarded otherwise than as a stubborn refusal to acknowledge the truth.

The Great French Comedian.

These are the features of the Prince of French Comedians, whose "Tartuffe," which he may be said to have made his own, convulses every audience which has the delight of seeing the master portray the arch hypocrite. Respecting "Vin Mariani," he says: "Strange to say that 'Vin Mariani,' so exquisite a wine, should also be a remedy, and a delicious one at that, so pleasant to the taste and so beneficial to the entire system." And Coquelin merely states a truth which is attested by the most famous men and women of the age, by the foremost medical men, and the managers of all the great hospitals. "Vin Mariani" is indeed beneficial to the system. The weakest can digest it; the most debilitated are benefited by it; the most hopeless are revivified by it; and as has been often said regarding it, "It gives new life and hope." "Vin Mariani" is the great tonic-stimulant of the age, used by the great brain-workers of the world, who find that, exhausted by overwork, it refreshes, strengthens, and builds up the whole system. An album of portraits of many celebrities who have spoken highly of "Vin Mariani" will be sent to those who send their address to Lawrence A. Wilson & Co., Montreal, the Canadian Agents.

WINES FOR EVERYBODY.

France produced three hundred million gallons more wine last year than it could consume or export. The Bordeaux Claret Company of 30 Hospital Street, Montreal, have purchased some of this good nourishing wine from the growers, and are now offering it at $5.00 and $4.00 per case of 12 large bottles, or $1.00 extra per 24 pint bottles. Courage.

Because I hold it sinful to despond,
And will not let the bitterness of life
Blind me with burning tears, but look beyond
Its tumults and its strife;

Because I lift my head above the mist,
Where the sun shines and broad the breezes blow,
By every ray and raindrop kissed
That God's love doth bestow;

Think you I find no bitterness at all?
No burden to be borne like Christian's pack?
Think you there are no ready tears to fall
Because I keep them back?

Why should I hug life's ills with cold reserve,
To curse myself and all who love me? Nay!
A thousand times more good than I deserve
God gives me every day.

And in each one of these rebellious tears,
Kept bravely back He makes a rainbow shine;
Grateful I take His slightest gift; no tears
Nor any doubts are mine.

Dark skies must clear, and, when clouds are past,
One golden day redeems a weary year;
Patient I listen, sure that sweet at last
Will sound His voice of cheer.

PRETTY EASTER GIFTS

DAINTY LITTLE THINGS APPROPRIATE TO THE OCCASION.

How to Transform Eggshells Into Ornaments—Vases and Bonbonnieres Made in Charming Designs—Caricatures That Will be Amusing to Young and Old.

Easter has become almost equally with Christmas in many families a day of gladness and gift-giving, while the custom should never be allowed to become a cause of expense ill to be borne, it is quite possible for everybody, high and low, to bring a little extra good feeling into the household by simple remembrances all around.

It is true that many a mother has nothing better to hand than a few eggs, but some of the most popular Easter gifts for children have been made from eggshells; likewise some of the daintiest for a fastidious friend; and a few hours have been enough time to make dozens of little offerings.

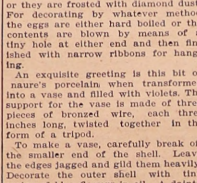

Fig 1

Countless are the conceits and none are elaborate. In the simpler forms the eggs are swiftly colored in rainbow hues with aniline dyes, thne daintily etched with a sharp-pointed knife; or they are coated with metallic paints; or they are frosted with diamond dust. For decorating by whatever method the eggs are either hard boiled or the contents are blown by means of a tiny hole at either end and then finished with narrow ribbons for hanging.

An exquisite greeting is this bit of naure's porcelain when transformed into a vase and filled with violets. The support for the vase is made of three pieces of bronzed wire, each three inches long, twisted together in the form of a tripod.

To make a vase, carefully break off the smaller end of the shell. Leave the edges jagged and gild them heavily. Decorate the outer shell with tiny sprigs of blue flowers in oil. A dainty bit of white and blue china is the result.

By tinting the shell a delicate yellow, gilding the jagged edges of the opening and then adding light designs in red and gold lines, the vase is suggestive of Royal Worcester.

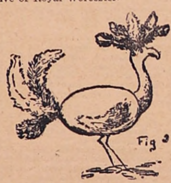

Fig 2

A great variety of vases can be made. They should in every case be filled with dainty spring flowers.

Prior to the application of paints to the shell, it must be well washed, thoroughly dried, and rubbed with benzine. After this treatment there is no more difficulty in painting on eggshells than on paper.

THE BONBONNIERES.

Egg bonbonnieres, filled with choice confections, are welcome gifts to anyone, but they are specially suitable as presents to little friends.

Boil large eggs very hard. With a sharp knife cut off one end and scoop out the contents. Glue the shell to a ball-like support molded of putty. A strip of cardboard glued to either side of the shell serves as a handle. Decoate in china effect, or simply gild, ball and all.

NESTS OF EGGS.

Prettily decorated eggs, nestling in the fragrant depths of flowers, or in a nest of fresh grass, breathe of glad springtime.

A quaint wooden shoe, gilded and supplied with white satin ribbons for carrying, may be filled with smilax, posies and eggs.

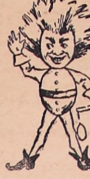

Fig 3

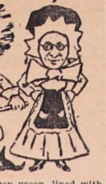

An artistic fancy is a straw basket twined and lined with smilax and filled with none but frosted eggs. The effect of glistening white from the soft, refreshing green is charming. To the handle is tied a white satin ribbon on which is printed in gold an Easter greeting.

THE COMICAL EGGS.

But it is the egg caricatures that delight and amaze the little ones. The egg is blown and the shell cleaned and rubbed with benzine.

Fig. 1 shows the general style and features of two extremes—a sage and a dunce. Success depends upon the markings in sepia, which are few but striking. The eyes are either blue or brown. The lips and ears are red. The hair and beard are of fine cotton, glued in position. A cord tied to a splint, slipped through the hole through which the egg was blown, suspends these curious heads.

A nameless bird is seen in Fig. 2. The eggshell body is tinted brown. The neck and head are of pasteboard, glued to the body, and likewise tinted. Bright beads are glued on to serve as eyes. The feet are of bent wire. The claws must be of sufficient length to insure a firm support. A wonderful comb, tail and wings are of gorgeous feathers glued in place. The feathers are brightened with touches of gold and silver paint. The bird always proves a great success.

Fig. 3 shows a mischievous Dame Grundy. The head is an eggshell properly marked. The body is an English walnut, on which the head is made to rest by means of sealing wax or drippings from a wax candle. The arms and skirt are of stiff paper. The little gossiping dame is gowned and capped in tissue paper. She may be made to stand by spreading the stiff underskirt, or she may be suspended by a string running from the body through the head.

A right jolly little fellow can be modeled from Fig. 4. His body and head are eggshells. These are joined by slipping the splint with a string into the body shell and extending the cord up through the head. Features are painted in grotesque expression. The hair is of cotton, arms and limbs of pasteboard. The whole is painted a brilliant red, with trimmings in gold.

Pen-wipers for older children are made by decorating ordinary eggshells like heads. Effective models are those of a sweet-faced nun, a pretty student, with characteristic "mortar-board" hat, or a dear, smiling baby in lace-frilled cap. The shell head is securely glued to a support of several layers of chamois or flannel.

Poverty in Paris.

Nor is it less true that in smiling, gaudy Paris the distress, though not so visible as it sometimes is in London, is more widespread, more severe, and more cruel. The number of persons who, having known better days seek refuge in murder and suicide, is far greater in Paris than it is with us. In England there is always more or less the restraining power of religious influence. But with the prevailing doctrines of ni Dieu ni maitre, the only alternative left seems to be blank despair, or joining in the war against society. The poor relief in France is administered by the State, and is conducted in a manner very satisfactory to the army of functionaries who live upon the funds which should be appropriated to the relief of the destitute. The English poor law system is not perfect, but the worst excesses of Bumbledom fall very far short of the maladministration of the pachas set up here to administer State relief to the poor. There were last autumn twelve cases of appalling suicides. One was especially sad—the father out of employ; a mother and six young children; the father out from morning till night, eager to find a job, returns home one night, finds the door locked; it is broken open, a pan of charcoal is burnt out and the mother and five children are lying stone dead on the floor. Of course this case led to some sort of inquiry, and it was ascertained that the Assistance Publique was very discriminating in its administration of relief. It reserves its favors for those paper families who decline to have their children baptized. The Assistance Publique has an endowment of £1,600,000 sterling a year.

Under these circumstances it is not to be wondered at that Anarchist and Socialist doctrines should spread. Recent documents show that the army and the staff of the railways is honeycombed with Anarchism. When the next outbreak occurs, what will happen? The Government of the day seem neither to know nor care. "Apres nous le deluge" is its motto. But there are others who have much to lose, and they view the present with dissatisfaction and the future with dismay. One of the leading men in France told the present writer but a few days since, "How is it people in England do not realize our condition? We are on the eve of a terrible Socialistic outbreak, and we do not know that the troops and railway servants will not join the insurgents." This anticipation is, perhaps, premature, but a fresh Convulsion de Paris may be nearer at hand than it was in December, 1847, or in June, 1870.—Paris Correspondence London Standard.

A Nickel Standard.

Five cents was the value which a Texas farmer once placed upon a minister's prayer. The story is told in The Epworth Era of Rev. H. S. Thrall, one of the pioneers of Methodism in Texas.

In company with a number of itinerants, who were on their way to conference, Doctor Thrall stopped to spend the night with an old farmer. It was the custom then to settle the bill at night, so that they might rise about 3 o'clock in the morning and ride a good way before breakfast and lie by in the heat of the day.

Doctor Thrall, acting as spokesman of the party, said to the old farmer after supper: "We are a company of Methodist preachers going to conference. If you will get the family together we will have prayers with you."

After prayers, one by one settled his bill. Doctor Thrall's turn came and he asked for his bill. The old farmer replied:

"Well, pa'son, I charged the rest 25 cents, but bein' as you prayed for us so good, I won't charge you but 20 cents." The brethern had the laugh on Doctor Thrall.

An Easter Penitent.

Your blushes, how they come and go
With ardor spent—
Your neighbor's bonnet has no bow,
And you're content.

Within your cushioned pew you kneel
And whisper soft
Your prayers, while furtive glances steal
To organ loft.

Your mind no sermonizings lend
To sermons told;
You're glad the season's at an end—
For Lent is cold.

Great self-denial and its dregs,
No more you dread;
Your mind is fixed to-day on eggs
And hats instead.

EVOLVING THE NEW WOMAN.

Lady Henry Somerset Believes in the Bicycle as a Regenerator of the Sex.

Lady Henry Somerset, the English apostle of the new woman, sailed for England a week ago with Miss Frances Willard.

She chatted with a World reporter a few minutes before sailing on what she had intended to accomplish and what she had accomplished during her American trip, and this is what she said:

"My purpose in coming to America was chiefly a personal one. I wished to see my son, who has been in America studying, and is now starting on a South American journey. He is to be absent from me for a long time, and I naturally wished to come to America to bid him good-bye. That purpose accomplished, I am now going home to my work in England.

"I did not come here to reform America, and I am not leaving American shores with a sense of disappointment that it is not reformed. I have spoken for the better life and the new woman in America, and I have told of the new woman in England and what she has been doing to help bring about social and political reforms. Since I have been here I have worked, lecturing almost constantly, filling every minute of my time. I was most happy to be able to attend the Woman's Council in Washington and I take home with me much that is inspiring and full of encouragement.

"One of the most encouraging signs to me, in the progress of American woman, is the increasing interest in physical culture. The bicycle is one of the greatest factors in this regeneration. The bicycle is building up a new race of women to be the mothers of a higher type of manhood and womanhood in the future. The benefits of this growing interest in physical culture are incalculable, and the bicycle I consider one of the reformers of the age.

"For myself, I have never ridden a wheel, and never expect to ride one, but it is not because I lack the courage of my convictions. I cannot speak to often nor too strongly for the cause of the bicycle girl, and the athletic girl in general, who is doing so much along all lines of physical culture, both in England and America to make the new woman in the best sense a success."

Then Lady Henry Somerset was claimed by a group of bewitching, pretty-as-picture, up-to-date American illustrations of her theories, who said breathless good-byes at the last moment and rushed ashore to flutter white handkerchiefs from the wharf until the steamer was a mere speck on the horizon.—New York World.

DIED FROM TIGHT LACING.

The latest victim of tight lacing, says The London Daily News, is the unfortunate actress who died in the midst of the performance at the Elephant and Castle Theatre on boxing night. She seems to have been gripped as in a vise by the stays of her stage costume, and this, aggravating a natural weakness of the heart, brought on her death. She had just finished a song and danced off to the wings when she collapsed, with all the signs of fatal illness. Her husband, who was in the house, was called to her side, and her agonized cry to him to unlace her dress seems to have been the last that left her lips. She was dead in her dressing-room before the doctor came. The circumstances were such as to constitute every possible aggravation of her danger. Her lacing had paralyzed every vital function at a moment when it needed most freedom and play. A dance in loose costume would have been trying enough, amid all the excitement of a first night. An added dance, and both in a garment that fitted like the torture-boots of the middle ages, proved too much for the patience of outraged nature.

FEMININE PECULIARITIES.

A fashionable dress designer in the West End of London is computed to make, on an average, between $25,000 and $30,000 a year.

Collarettes and movable berthas of the same variety of materials are in all shapes and sizes and as plenty and pretty as fancy can picture.

The infatigable Mrs. Oliphant has written another novel, which is announced for publication this spring. She calls it "Two Strangers."

The chief exponents of music in Japan are women. Most men would consider that they were making themselves ridiculous by playing and singing in society.

"The Story of Bessie Costrell" is the title of Mrs. Humphrey Ward's new novel. It is a tale of English village life. Serial publication will precede its appearance in book form.

No season at Bermuda is complete without the engagement of some British officer stationed there to an American girl, even though the engagement does not always result in a wedding.

Mrs. Eliza Lord, a member of the Brooklyn Tabernacle, who died in June last, left all her property to Mrs. Talmage, in return for her kindness shown during her last illness. The will shows the estate to be worth about $13,000.

Two Good Irish Stories.

A Protestant magistrate once had a little waif of an Irish boy brought before him for some trifling misdemeanor. Wishing to ascertain how much the child comprehended of his duty to God and his neighbor, he asked him if he could say his prayers. The boy promptly repeated the Lord's Prayer, and further volunteered that he could say the "Hail Mary." The magistrate testily replied that he did not want to hear that, but requested him to repeat the Creed. The child, much frightened, began to do so, but when he came to the clause, "Born of the Virgin Mary," he stopped short, and anxiously said, "Please, yer Worship, she's turned up again, and what am I to do?"

A tourist was being driven over a part of the country in Ireland where his infernal majesty appeared to have given his name to all the objects of interest in the locality, for there was the Devil's Bridge, the Devil's Cauldron, the Devil's Glen, etc. Said the traveller: "The devil seems to be the greatest landowner in these parts!" "Ah! sure, your Honor," replied the jarvey, "that is so; but he lives in England. I think he's what they call an absentee landlord in Ireland."—London Gentlewoman.

Ought to Work It Oftener.

"Jimmie Smith is awfully deceitful."

"In what way?"

"Well, sometimes he washes his face twice a week."

"What has that to do with it?"

"Well, the teacher thinks he's sick and lets him go home."

Awkward for the Ladies.

At the Wigan pantomime the other night two ladies who lived at a distance, having to catch an early train, were obliged to leave the theatre before the performance was finished.

Selecting, as they thought, a quiet interlude, they were passing out of the stalls when an actor suddenly appeared on the stage and repeating a part of his role, exclaimed:

"There they go. The only two women I ever loved. One I couldn't have and the other I can't get!"

The amusement of the audience and the astonishment of the young ladies can be imagined.

MUCH LIKE A MIRACLE.

A STATEMENT FROM A WELL-KNOWN BERLIN MERCHANT.

How his Daughter Was Restored From the Terrors of St. Vitus' Dance—Her Case one of the Worst Ever Known—Has Fully Recovered Her Health.

From the Berlin News

The readers of the News have been made familiar with the virtue of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People through the articles appearing from time to time in these columns, and while the druggists say that many in this vicinity have received undoubted benefit from their timely use, it is only recently that we have heard of a cure in Berlin of such importance as to take rank among the most remarkable yet published. There is hardly a man or woman in the town of Berlin, or the county of Waterloo, who does not know Mr. Martin Simpson, issuer of marriage licenses and general merchant, King street. Anything said by Mr. Simpson will be implicitly relied upon. A day or two ago we had a talk with him in reference to his fourteen year old daughter Helen, who had for two years been a great sufferer from St. Vitus dance. He tells us that it was the worst case he ever saw. She did not sleep for whole nights and was an intense sufferer. She was totally helpless and could neither eat nor drink unless administered to her by her parents. The best medical attendance was had, but all to no avail. She kept getting worse and worse, and finally, when in the paroxysms, commenced to froth at the mouth, and her parents believed she was going out of her mind. Though unable to walk for about eight months she would in her spells have fits, making her jump high above her couch. While in this condition, the worst case ever seen in this place, Mr. Simpson, as a last resort, purchased some Pink Pills and gave them to his suffering and afflicted daughter. He assures us that in thirty hours she found some relief. In a week the "dance" was entirely stopped and she was able to sleep, and was rapidly regaining her former strength. Some months after the use of the Pink Hills was discontinued she again had touches of disease, but a few doses of the pills stopped it, and for the last eight months has been entirely free from the terrible malady from which no one who knew the circumstances, expected she would recover, are warm in their praise of the wonderful remedy which worked such great results. These facts are known to all who are acquainted with the family and further comments are wholly unnecessary.

When such strong tributes as these can be had to the wonderful merits of Pink Pills, it is little wonder that they are the favorite remedy with all classes. They are an unfailing specific for locomotor ataxia, partial paralysis, St. Vitus' dance, sciatica, neuralgia, rheumatism, nervous headache, the after effects of la grippe, palpitation of the heart, nervous prostration, all diseases depending upon vitiated humors in the blood, such as scrofula, chronic erysipelas, etc. They are also a specific for troubles peculiar to females, suppression, irregularities, and all forms of weakness. In men they effect a radical cure in all cases arising from mental worry, overwork, or excesses of any nature.

These Pills are manufactured by the Dr. William' Medicine Company, of Brockville, Ont., and Schenectady, N. Y., and sold in boxes (never in loose form by the dozen or hundred, and the public are cautioned against numerous imitations in this shape), at 50c. a box, or six boxes for $2.50, and may be had of all druggists, or direct by mail from Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., at either address.

Manitoba's Alternative.

Winnipeg Norwester, March 25.

Primarily the right to legislate with respect to legislation is vested in the Local Legislature exclusively. The right of the Federal Legislature arises only after an appeal to the Governor-in-Council has been made and a remedial order has been rejected or disregarded. Necessarily in such a case the Dominion remedial legislation will be in the direction of a restoration of the Provincial act under which the Roman Catholic minority enjoyed the rights of which they were deprived by subsequent provincial legislation. It is altogether unlikely that an Act would be originated in the Dominion Parliament—the restoration of the "status quo ante" being all that is provided for in the right to appeal.

It is, however, equally apparent that the Provincial Legislature could solve the whole difficulty without re-enacting all the provisions of the old law; and this is what the judgment of the judicial committee of the Privy Council suggests. It is believed that an Act could be framed which would be acceptable to Roman Catholics and Protestants alike, containing such provisions as would ensure to the Roman Catholic taxpayer an equivalent for his taxes, and to all state-aided schools, the inspection and supervision necessary in order to ensure proper results from the expenditure. The teacher could be subjected to examination and certification, and the condition for secular education in all public schools assimilated. There has been no desire, so far as we are advised, on the part of the Roman Catholic minority, to evade any stipulation which would tend to the efficiency of their schools, nor has there been any disposition to evade the payment of a school tax, where the disposition of that tax has been for the benefit of their denominational schools. No fault has been found, within our knowledge, by Roman Catholics during the whole discussion as to their right to Separate Schools, of the axiom that "if Separate Schools are to be aided by the State, the State should have the same security for a sound secular system in them as in other State-aided schools.

Such being the case, it is at present open to the Provincial Legislature to settle the whole question without further disturbance. It can be done in such a way as to satisfy the reasonable demands of the minority while maintaining intact the general principles of the School Act of 1890.

The issue before us is a serious one, the possible end of which may be disastrous, should the Local House not see its duty in the premises. They can, if they choose, so frame an act that it will not interfere with the present act in its general application, while redressing the grievances complained of by the Roman Catholic minority. By so doing, it will remove the question from the Federal arena, and preserve for the Province the exclusive right to deal with its educational interests. * * * After the questions of law have been decided in the courts, and the highest court in the realm has indicated, not only that a grievance exists, but the remedy that must be applied, it is idle to claim that the Dominion Government has, for political reasons, determined to invade the constitutional rights of the Province. The reverse is actually the case.

Sure Cure for Asthma.

Science Triumphant at Last.

Miller's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil is the outcome of the latest scientific researches. There was always a prejudice against taking Cod Liver Oil on account of its disagreeable to the palate, and that is one reason why it has become so popular with the medical fraternity, the hospitals of the country and the households wherever consumption or lung troubles prevail. Miller's Emulsion is the great nerve strengthener and blood maker, and cures Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis, Scrofula and all Lung affections. In Big Bottles, 50c. and $1, at all Drug Stores.

DARK BLUES WIN AGAIN.

OXFORD ONCE MORE BEATS CAMBRIDGE ON THE THAMES

A Good Race Part of the Way—Ailsa Beats the Britannia in Heavy Weather—Notes of Track and Stable—Gleanings in Other Lines of Sport.

OXFORD WINS AGAIN.

LONDON, March 30.—The annual boat race between Cambridge and Oxford University eights was rowed to day, Oxford winning. As the pistol was fired by Mr. Willan, both crews got well away. Opposite the boat-house, Oxford had a lead and got the bow of their boat in front of the Cambridge boat. For the first minute Oxford rowed 28 strokes and Cambridge 36. Oxford drew rapidly ahead and soon led by a length. Cambridge spurted, but could not gain against Oxford's long, sweeping stroke. At Thorneycroft's the rough water bothered both crews and Cambridge had a shade the best of it, Oxford being hardly a length ahead. From this point Cambridge fell behind and at Barnes' bridge Oxford was three lengths ahead. From there to the Ship, Oxford practically maintained the lead and won by about three lengths.

Richard Croker and Michael F. Dwyer have sailed for England, where they go to try their luck on the British race tracks. Mr. Dwyer yesterday seemed none too sanguine as to the possible success of his venture. "I expect to have an enjoyable time," he said, "especially as everything will be practically new to Mr. Croker and me. I really don't know what the horses are doing, but from all the reports I have received I should say that they are doing very well, and are just as forward as any of their English rivals."

The Grand National steeplechase, run at Liverpool yesterday, was for 2500 sovereigns inclusive of a trophy valued at 100 sovereigns; second horse to receive 300 sovereigns and the third horse to receive 200 sovereigns from the stakes; a handicap for four year olds and upwards; Grand National course, about four miles and 856 yards. Mr. John Widger's aged chestnut gelding, Wild Man from Borneo, was first; Mr. F. B. Atkinson's Cathal, six years old, a bay gelding, was second, and Major A. Crawley's Van Der Berg, aged, a bay gelding, was third. Nineteen horses ran.

YACHTING.

At Nice yesterday the Ailsa and Britannia started in a race over a thirty mile course for prizes given by James Gordon Bennet, a cup valued at £500 and a purse of 500 sovereigns. The course was a triangular one. They got a flying start, the Britannia crossing the line at 11.00.15; the Ailsa at 11.03.45. The Britannia carried her canvas better than the Ailsa did, and increased her lead, but before the round was finished the Ailsa passed the Britannia and at the completion of the first round the Ailsa was leading by thirty-three seconds. At the end of the second round the Ailsa had increased her lead to two minutes and seventeen seconds. The Ailsa eventually won the race by two minutes.

MODERN OFFICE.

Such Will be the New Quarters of the Bank of Commerce.

An evidence of the city's life and progress is its modern banking institutions. A few months since the Dominion Bank removed from its old quarters on the corner of Front and Campbell sts., to its present palatial offices on the corner of Front and Bridge sts., and the Bank of Commerce, not to be outdone, leased the Dominion's old quarters from Col. Lazier, the proprietor of the Metropolitan block, in which they are situated, and workmen were at once set to work to change the building into a modern form.

Mr. Joshua Lang and his staff of masons modeled the old bank to its present handsome proportions. The main entrance was moved from the south-west corner to the north-west corner. The old full length windows on the south side were replaced with the more modern high sill window and a great deal more necessary work was done to strengthen and beautify the building.

Mr. Frank Dolan and his staff of plasterers came next and they made a great change in the appearance of the interior walls and the ceiling. The ceiling will be left a pure white, but the walls will be delicately tinted.

The woodwork has been neatly done by Mr. Lewis Grills. The main entrance is beautiful, the doors and frames being of highly polished quartered oak, as are also the swing doors which open off the vestibule from the main office. The whole interior is wainscoted in ash and quartered oak finished in oil and beautifully polished. The counters and desks will face north and will be of the finest workmanship, also in oak. The Manager's office is on the Front st. side and has an entrance from in front and behind the counters. The steel vault has not been moved, but has been overhauled.

Mr. John Cornelius has done the painting and furnishing in his usual stylish manner. He will also do the tinting of the walls.

The heating is done by hot water supplied by a Daisy hot water boiler and Safford radiators. The plumbing has all been done by C. F. Smith & Co., who have, as usual, done a most complete job. A neat little bath room has been fitted up in the basement and supplied with a handsome steel clad bath tub.

When finished the Bank of Commerce will have offices second to none in Central Ontario and of which they may justly feel proud. The Bank will move into its new quarters about April 15th.

Whatever will give us light and wholesome food at a fair outlay tends to make life not only bearable, but pleasurable. Dr. Price's Baking Powder will do it.

THE ATHLETIC ASSOCIATION.

Another Good Meeting Last Evening—Steps Taken to Secure Grounds.

The second meeting for the formation of an Athletic Association was held last evening in the Institute Hall, and if possible was more enthusiastic then that of a week previous. The report of the committee appointed at last meeting to look for a suitable ground was received. The location that met with the most favor with the meeting is the plot of ground bounded on the north and south by Queen and Bridge streets and on the east and west by McDonald st, and Bleecker avenue. The plot is a beautiful piece of ground and large enough for a third of a mile track. The cricket grounds of last year form a part of the block and will be used, if the site is secured, for the grand stand and a tennis court.

After some discussion as to other locations a committee was appointed to find out what rental would be asked for the grounds and also to get specifications and estimates for a grand stand, fencing and other equipments. The following gentlemen compose the committee: C. Bogart, Chairman; T. W. R. McRae, Secretary; J. D. Clarke, Dr. McColl, A. A. Roberts, F. B. Smith, I. O. Frost, Wm. Robertson, F. J. Lewis and W. E. Thomas. The committee will meet at Bell & Biggar's office on Monday evening.

The scheme is now assured, and it is likely that at the next meeting a joint stock company will be formed. It has been proposed to put the shares at $5 each and thus enable every young man to take at least one share.

Orange Blossoms.

A very pleasing event took place at the residence of Mr. John Bush, of the 4th con. of Sidney. on Wednesday evening, March 27th, it being the marriage of their daughter Sarah to Mr. Oliver W. Huff, of Frankford. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. S. Depew in the presence of about eighty guests. The bride was attended by her cousin Miss Annie Thrasher, of Thurlow, while the groom was assisted by Mr. Wm. Doyle, of Frankford. The bride was attired in a handsome gown of cream serge trimmed with lace and satin ribbon and the bridesmaid in a very pretty swiss muslin with moire silk sash. The bride wore a bouquet of white roses on the left shoulder and the bridesmaid a bouquet of carnations on the left shoulder. After the congratulations were received by Mr. and Mr. Huff all partook of a nicely prepared tea.

Spraying Fruit Trees.

The Department of Agriculture of Ontario propose giving practical illustrations of spraying fruit trees in all the fruit growing sections of the province during the coming season. Their plan will be to select an orchard near the principal town or city of the section and send practical men to spray it during the summer, thus demonstrating the benefits to be obtained thereby. Mr. B. Mallory, of Sidney, has received a circular from Mr. A. H. Pettit, Secretary of the Central Farmers' Institute, informing him that he will be in Belleville on April 10th to select an orchard and to give general instructions as to spraying.

A DISCOVERY IN GAS LIGHTING

THE CONSUMERS' GAS COMPANY ARE INVESTIGATING IT.

New Light on the Production of Gas That May Revolutionize the Distribution of Light—The Lucky Find of a Former Hamiltonian — Manager Pearson's Views on the Matter.

(Toronto World.)

The Consumers' Gas Company have under consideration a new discovery in the materials from which gas is manufactured which is likely to revolutionize the light-producing industry, as well as other manufactures. The discoverer is a Canadian, Thomas L. Willson, a grandson of Senator Willson, and a former resident of Hamilton, Ont.

The real triumphs of chemistry have been in the field of synthesis or the building up of compounds. The great desire of chemists, although they hardly dared to hope for it, was the synthesis of carbon-hydrogen. This synthesis leads to results now undreamt of. The luminosity of the gas produced from our gas works is due to the presence therein of hydrocarbons. Nothing among the late achievements in the field of chemistry has excited more popular attention than the production of coal tar colors, but at the basis of all these come the inevitable hydrocarbons.

At last it seems that the great synthesis has been accomplished. While Mr. Willson's discovery has been known for some time past to his immediate friends and the capitalists interested with him, it is only lately that it was announced in scientific circles.

In the theatre of the Society of Arts, London, Eng., on Jan. 16, Prof. Lewes, one of the highest authorities on illuminants, read a paper entitled The Commercial Synthesis of Illuminating Hydrocarbons, in which he described Mr. Willson's process and illustrated in an interesting way its scientific and commercial possibilities. And a very startling exhibition it was, as fresh and convincing as good matter in the hands of a master in the art of science exposition could make it.

Carbide of calcium was a chemical curiosity until Mr. Willson found out a way of preparing it in bulk in the course of his experiments upon the manufacture of calcium alloys by the agency of his electric furnace. When an article that has only existed in grains comes to be turned out by the ton, it is to all intents and purposes a new article, and its industrial possibilities are never still, inasmuch as only the most direct and obvious of these developments have as yet been ever hinted at. Produced in large quantities, it is impossible to surmise what chemical industry will be able in the fulness of time to make of it.

The product of fusing together in an electrical furnace such common materials as lime and carbon was exhibited by Prof. Lewes as a greenish-grey, stone-like substance resembling the commonest description of serpentine rock. Upon handling it a faint, unpleasant odor resembling garlic manifests itself. Upon a piece of this material Prof. Lewes sprinkled a few drops of water, and put a lighted taper to it. The nascent gas, acetylene, immediately ignited, and continued to burn over the wetted surface until all the water was gone. Then came the display of the same gas evolved in a jar, which contained pieces of the carbide in water, and stored in glass holders. It was indeed a flame to wonder at. There is something startling in the suggestion that gas of 240 candle power, calculated upon the basis of a consumption of five cubic feet per hour, can be burnt by an open flat flume burner. It is difficult to convey in words the impression of steadfastness, whiteness, and, so to speak, solidity, which the flames made on the observers. No smoke nor smell escaped from the flames, which, though exhibiting in their color the evidence of intensely active combustion, were found to be much cooler than oil gas flames of the same size. This is the most striking feature of free burning acetylene. The incandescent electric lamps by which the theatre was lit were made to look as dull as "red-hot hair-pins" by the aggressive acetylene, which, by the irradiation of its dazzling white flames, formed balls of almost blinding light.

In a paper recently read before a scientific society in New York, Mr. Willson stated that acetylene gas could be produced at a cost of 5 cents per 1000 feet. When this is considered, along with the fact that it can be readily made and used in private residences, or compressed into a fluid form, and used in portable lamps, it is not speeking too strongly to state that the discovery will revolutionize the lighting and heating processes of the world.

Mr. M. M. Thompson, manager of the local works, was in Toronto and saw the new gas tested on Thursday. He says the light it produces is almost equal to sunlight. The new process is a little too expensive just yet to be adopted, but it is thought the expense of manufacturing can be greatly cheapened. It will be introduced here for all purposes as soon as it can be made at a fair profit.

The acme of perfection in cookery is embodied in Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder. No other works so quick, or gives such dainty food.

Officers Installed.

The following officers of Loyal Moira Lodge No. 116, C.O.O.F., were installed at their regular meeting on Thursday night: N.G., J. H. Anderson; V.G., G. Cronk; Secretary, J. A. Falls; Treasurer, T. Fizzled Out.

The Kingston News of yesterday says: "The civic investigation made its final fizzle on Thursday, when it was shown before Judge Price that the responsibility for the whole affair was caused by the misconception of ex-Ald. T. L. Snook's remarks by two reporters of a newspaper. The good name of the City Council has been sustained, and not a witness presented himself to make charges of any kind."

Albert College News.

There was not room for the numbers who gathered last evening to hear the "Mock Trial." Although the trial lasted over two hours, and many had to stand throughout it all, the order was remarkably good. We are pleased to know that the closing meeting of the society for this college year was so eminently successful.

Next Friday evening Prof. Shephard will give his closing entertainment. If you want to get standing room in the chapel that evening you had better be there early.

To-morrow afternoon at 4 o'clock a missionary meeting of special interest will be held in the College Chapel. Mr. J. M. Walters will speak on "Medical Missions" and Mr. R. H. Gordon on "Why should I be a Foreign Missionary?" We hope a goodly number will be present from the city. We will be pleased to see the chapel filled.

SIR PATRICK GRANT.

A Sketch of a Brave Soldier and Capable Officer.

Sir Patrick Crant, whose death was reported lately, was born in 1804 and had been in the service of the British army about seventy-five years. He entered the army as an ensign the very year that the Duke of Cambridge, its present commander-in-chief, was born—1820. He had been in the service twelve years when Lord Roberts, the most famous, perhaps, of England's soldiers, was born, and thirteen years before the birth of Sir Garnet Wolseley. He was decorated and redecorated. He had been thanked for his services by his sovereign more times than he can remember. He was a Knight of the Garter; his name is on the roll of the highest order to which an English military man may belong, for he was a Knight Commander of the Order of the Bath; in short he won every honor to which an English soldier may aspire.

When young Patrick Grant, through his Scotch father, got an appointment in 1820 as ensign in the military service of the East India Company, which then practically ruled India, there was constant warfare being waged with the natives. Young Grant was right in the midst of it from the first. Yet promotion was slow, so slow indeed that Grant was in the Indian service twenty-four years before he became a major by brevet. By good service he was made a lieutenant in 1823, and a captain in 1832 after twelve years hard service in the Indian jungles.

In 1843 there was a real outbreak of some importance, and in this Gwahur campaign, as it is called, Captain Grant's bravery and ability was shown in a marked way, for he won his majority, and at the same time the Bronze Slav for Maharajapur. Again in 1845 there was another rebellion, and Major Grant served as Adjutant General under Sir Hugh Gough. He was repeatedly mentioned in the despatches of his superiors for his bravery and dash, and at the end of this campaign he was made a Colonel by brevet, and a C. B. He was also awarded a medal with three clasps for bravery. Then followed an outbreak of the warlike tribes in the Punjaub. Colonel Grant, as ever, was in the front of the fighting, and so well did he acquit himself that he was awarded a medal with two clasps, and was made an aide-de-camp to the Queen, with the full title of Colonel. In 1849 and in '50 Sir Charles Napier waged his famous war with the Hill tribes of India, and Colonel Grant fought side by side with the famous General. So well did he perform, that, upon Sir Charles' recommendation, he was given another medal, this time with one clasp. In 1856, for his distinguished services, Colonel Grant was made a Major-General, and an even greater honor was conferred on him. He was made a Knight Commander of the Bath. At about this time he was also appointed Commander in Chief of Madras, and at last was beginning to reap the rewards of his faithful services, Then, when General Anson died in 1857, just as the Indian Mutiny was breaking out, General Grant went over to Calcutta and acted as commander of Bengal, pending the arrival of Lord Colin Campbell. At the conclusion of the mutiny General Grant, whose name had again and again been reported in the despatches to the English Government for his ability and bravery, was awarded the Grand Cross of the Bath.

In 1867 his services were again awarded in a practical way. The honorable and coveted position of Military Governor of the Island of Malta was given him. General Grant remained at Malta until 1874, when Rev. Sidney Cotton, Governor of the Military Hospital at Chelsea, died. General Grant accepted the post. Since he has been at Chelsea new honors have been conferred upon him. In 1885 he was appointed Colonel of the Royal Horse Guards, the famous "Blues," as they are generally known. Later Queen Victoria appointed him a "Gold Stick in Waiting." He had, in 1883, received a yet higher title, that of Field Marshal in the British Army.

Work is easier, care is lighter, the table better, the household more healthful and contented whenever Dr. Price's Baking Powder is used.

THRIFTY MOTHERS CAN DRESS THEIR LITTLE ONES HANDSOMELY AND CHEAPLY.

Thrifty and economical mothers rarely buy new clothing for their children, yet the little ones are always well and handsomely dressed for school and church. This is the result of using Diamond Dyes, which make all the fashionable colors with but little work.

Suits for boys and little dresses and jackets for the girls that have faded and become discolored, are quickly transformed into new garments by the magical working of Diamond Dyes.

These wonderful package dyes cost but 10 cents per package; they are simple to use—indeed any child can use them and get a grand color. The colors produced by Diamond Dyes are fast and strong, and in many respects far superior to the colors used in large dyeing factories.

When buying dyes for home use see that your dealer gives you "Diamond Dyes"; imitation and worthless dyes will ruin your materials and garments.

To-day's Market.

With neither wheeling nor sleighing to-day's market was not as large as it should have been, yet the supply was equal to the demand. Eggs sold at 12c and 14c; butter, 17c to 20c; potatoes, 50c; apples, 50c to 55c; lard, 9c to 10c; lamb, 5c and 6c; dressed beef, 3½c to 5c; fowls scarce and dear. Some new maple syrup was offered at 25c per quart, but it did not last long.

So it is with the visits of Dr. Dorenwend to Belleville. On his last visit he was so busy that many ladies and gentlemen were unable to be attended to. He is therefore returning to give all who desire it, another opportunity of procuring his art goods for the head. Prof. Dorenwend is undoubtedly one of the leaders of his profession on this continent—his skill in arranging the coverings for the head of either lady or gentleman is well-known. His goods are acknowledged to be perfect, and in every way true to nature. They are the best protection to the head, besides giving a refined and youthful expression to the face. Call and examine these marvels of his art, and have them fitted in order to judge of the effect. Consult him about your hair. He will (free of charge), give you advice as to the preservation of it. UNHAPPILY MARRIED.

REV. DR. TALMAGE PREACHES UPON AN IMPORTANT SUBJECT.

Sturdy Blows in Behalf of the Home and Against the Dissoluteness of Modern Society—Wholesale Divorce Condemned—The Blessed Marriage State.

Rev. Dr. Talmage chose as the subject of his afternoon sermon in the Academy of Music a topic of national interest, viz.: "Wholesale Divorce." The great audience repeatedly showed its appreciation of the sentiments expressed by the reverend speaker, and his sturdy blows in behalf of the protection of the household and against the dissoluteness of modern society were received with marked appreciation. The text selected was Matt. 19, 6, "What therefore God hath joined together let not man put asunder."

That there are hundreds and thousands of infelicitous homes in America no one will doubt. If there were only one skeleton in the closet, that might be locked up and abandoned; but in many a home there is a skeleton in the hallway and a skeleton in all the apartments.

"Unhappily married," are two words descriptive of many a homestead. It needs no orthodox minister to prove to a badly-mated pair that there is a hell; they are there now. Sometimes a grand and gracious woman will be thus incarcerated and her life will be a crucifixion, as was the case with Mrs. Sigourney, the great poetess and the great soul. Sometimes a consecrated man will be united to a fury, as was John Wesley, or united to a vixen, as was John Milton. Sometimes, and generally, both parties are to blame, and Thomas Carlyle was an intolerable scold, and his wife smoked and swore, and Froude, the historian, pulled aside the curtain from the lifelong squabble at Craigenputtock and Five, Cheyne Row.

Some say that for the alleviation of all these domestic disorders of which we hear, easy divorce is a good prescription. God sometimes authorizes divorce as certainly as He authorizes marriage. I have just as much regard for one lawfully divorced as I have for one lawfully married. But you know and I know that wholesale divorce is one of our national scourges. I am not surprised at this when I think of the influences which have been abroad militating against the marriage relation.

For many years the platforms of the country rang with talk about a free-love millennium. There were meetings of this kind held in the Cooper Institute, New York; Tremont Temple, Boston, and all over the land. Some of the women who were most prominent in that movement have since been distinguished for great promiscuosity of affection. Popular themes for such occasions were the tyranny of man, the oppression of the marriage relation, women's rights, and the affinities. Prominent speakers were women with short curls and short dress and very long tongue, everlastingly at war with God beause they were created women; while on the platform sat meek men with soft accent and cowed demeanor, apologetic for masculinity, and holding the parasols while termagant orators went on preaching the doctrine of free love.

The campaign of about twenty years set more devils into the marriage relation than will be exorcised in the next fifty. Men and women went home from such meetings so permanently confused as to who were their wives and husbands that they never got out of their perplexity, and the criminal and the civil courts tried to disentangle the Iliad of woes, and this one got alimony, and that one got a limited divorce, and this mother kept the children on condition that the father could sometimes come and look at them, and these went into poorhouses, and those went into an insane asylum, and those went into dissolute public life, and all went to destruction. The mightiest war ever made against the marriage institution was that free-love campaign, sometimes under one name and sometimes under another.

Another influence that has warred upon the marriage relation has been the polygamy in Utah. That was a stereotyped caricature of the marriage relation, and has poisoned the whole land. You might as well think that you can have an arm in a state of mortification, and yet the whole body not be sickened, as to have those territories polygamized, and yet the body of the nation not feel the putrefaction. Hear it, good men and women of America, that so long ago as 1862 a law was passed by Congress forbidding polygamy in the Territories, and in all places where they had jurisdiction. Twenty-four years passed along and five administrations before the first brick was knocked from that fortress of libertinism.

Every new President in his inaugural tickled that monster with the straw of condemnation, and every Congress stultified itself in proposing some plan that would not work. Polygamy stood more entrenched, and more brazen, and more pulssant, and more braggart, and more infernal. James Buchanan, a much abused man of his day, did more for the extirpation of this villainy than most of the subsequent administrations. Mr. Buchanan sent out an army, and although it was halted in its work, still he accomplished more than some of the administrations which did nothing but talk, talk, talk! At last, but not until it had poisoned generations, polygamy has received its death-blow.

Polygamy in Utah warred against the marriage relation throughout the land. It was impossible to have such an awful sewer of iniquity sending up its miasmi, which was wafted by the winds, north, south, east and west, without the whole land being affected by it.

Another influence that has warred against the marriage relation in this country has been a pustulous literature, with its millions of sheets every week choked with stories of domestic wrongs, and infidelities, and massacres, and outrages, until it is a wonder to me that there are any decencies, or any common sense left on the subject of marriage. One-half of the news-stands of all our cities reeking with filth.

"Now," say some, "we admit all these evils, and the only way to clear them out or correct them is by easy divorce." Well, before we yield to that cry, let us find out how easy it is now.

I have looked over the laws of all the States, and I find that while in some States it is easier than in others, in every State it is easy. The State of Illinois, through its Legislature, recites a long list of proper causes for divorce, and then closes up by giving to the courts the right to make a decree of divorce in any case where they deem it expedient. After that you are not surprised at the announcement that in one county of the State of Illinois, in one year, there were eight hundred and eighty three divorces. If you want to know how easy it is, you have only to look over the records of the States. In the city of San Francisco three hundred and thirty-three divorces in one year; and in twenty years in New England twenty thousand. Is that not easy enough?

If the same ratio continue—the ratio of multiplied divorce and multiplied causes of divorce—we are not far from the time when our courts will have to set apart whole days for application, and all you will have to prove against a man will be that he left his newspaper in the middle of the floor, and all you will have to prove against a woman is that her husband's overcoat is buttonless. Causes of divorce double in a few years—doubled in France, doubled in England, and doubled in the United States. To show how very easy it is, I have to tell you that in Western Reserve, Ohio, the proportion of divorces to marriages celebrated is one to eleven; in Rhode Island, is one to thirteen; in Vermont, one to fourteen. Is that not easy enough?

I want you to notice that frequency of divorce always goes along with the dissoluteness of society. Rome for five hundred years had not one case of divorce. Those were her days of glory and virtue. Then the reign of vice began, and divorce became epidemic. If you want to know how rapidly the empire went down, ask Gibbon.

What we want in this country and in all lands is that divorce be made more and more difficult. Then people before they enter that relation will be persuaded that there will probably be no escape from it except through the door of the sepulchre. Then they will pause on the verge of that relation until they are fully satisfied that it is best and that it is right and that it is happiest. Then we shall have no more marriage in fun. Then men and women will not enter the relation with the idea it is only a trial trip and if they do not like it they can get out at the first landing. Then this whole question will be taken out of the frivolous into the tremendous and there will be no more joking about the blossoms in a a bride's hair than about the cypress on a coffin.

What we want is that the Congress of the United States changes the national constitution so that a law can be passed which shall be uniform all over the country and what shall be right in one State shall be right in all the States and what is wrong in one State shall be wrong in all the States.

How is it now? If a party in the marriage relation gets dissatisfied, it is only necessary to move to another State to achieve liberation from the domestic tie and divorce is effected so easy that the first one knows of it is by seeing in the newspaper that Rev. Dr. Somebody, on March 17, 1895, introduced in a new marriage relation a member of the household who went off on a pleasure excursion to Newport, or a business trip to Chicago. Married at the bride's house, No cards. There are States of the Union which practically puts a premium upon the disintegration of the marriage relation, while there are other States, like our own New York State, that had for a long time the pre-eminent idiocy of making marriage lawful at twelve and fourteen years of age.

The Congress of the United States needs to move for a change of the national Constitution and then to appoint a committee—not made up of single gentlemen, but of men of families, and their families in Washington—who shall prepare a good, honest, religious, comprehensive, uniform law, that will control everything from Sandy Hook to the Golden Horn. That will put an end to brokerages in marriages. That will send divorce lawyers into a decent business, That will set people agitated for many years on the question of how shall they get away from each other to planning how they can adjust themselves to the moro or less unfavorable circumstances.

More difficult divorce will put an estoppel to a great extent upon marriage as a financial speculation. There are men who go into the relation just as they go into Wall street to purchase shares. The female to be invited into the partnership of wedlock is utterly unattractive, and in disposition a suppressed Vesuvius. Everybody knows it, but this masculine candidate for matrimonial orders, through the commercial agency or through the county records, finds out how much estate is to be inherited, and he calculates it. He thinks out how long it will be before the old man will die, and whether he can stand the refractory temper until he does die, and then he enters the relation; for he says: "If I cannot stand it, then through the divorce law I'll back out." That process is going on all the time, and men enter the relation without any moral principle, without any affection, and it is as much a matter of stock speculation as anything that transpired yesterday in Union Pacific, Illinois Central or Delaware and Lackawanna.

Now, suppose a man understood, as he ought to understand, that if he goes into that relation there is no possibility of his getting out, or no probability, he would be more slow to put his neck in the yoke. He would say to himself, "Rather than a Caribbean whirlwind with a whole fleet of shipping in its arms, give me a zephyr off fields of sunshine and gardens of peace."

Rigorous divorce law will also hinder women from the fatal mistake of marrying men to reform them. If a young man by twenty-five years of age or thirty years of age have the habit of strong drink fixed on him, he is as certainly bound for a drunkard's grave as that a train starting out from Grand Central depot at eight o'clock to-morrow morning is bound for Albany. The train may not reach Albany, for it may be thrown from the track. The young man may not reach a drunkard's grave, for something may throw him off the iron track of evil habit, but the probability is that the train that starts to-morrow morning at eight o'clock for Albany will get there, and the probability is that the young man who has the habit of strong drink fixed on him before twenty-five or thirty years of age will arrive at a drunkard's grave. She knows he drinks, although he tries to hide it by chewing cloves. Everybody knows he drinks. Parents warn, neighbors and friends warn. She will marry him, she will reform him.

If she is unsuccessful in the experiment, why then the divorce law will emancipate her, because habitual drunkenness is a cause for divorce in Indiana, Kentucky, Florida, Connecticut, and nearly all the States. So the poor thing goes to the altar of sacrifice. If you will show me the poverty-struck streets in any city, I will show you the homes of the women who married men to reform them. In one case out of ten thousand it may be a successful experiment. I never saw the successful experiment. But have a rigorous divorce law, and that woman will say: "If I am affianced to that man, it is for life."

A rigorous divorce law will also do much to hinder hasty and inconsiderate marriages. Under the impression that one can be easily released, people enter the relation without inquiry and without reflection. Romance and impulse rule the day. Perhaps the only ground for the marriage compact is that she likes his looks and he admires the graceful way she passes around the ice cream at the picnic! It is all they know about each other. It is all the preparation for life. A woman that could not make a loaf of bread to save her life will swear to cherish and obey. A Christian will marry an atheist and that always makes conjoined wretchedness; for if a man does not believe there is a God, he is neither to be trusted with a dollar nor with your lifelong happiness. Having read much about love in a cottage, people brought up in ease will go and starve in a hovel.

By the wreck of ten thousand homes, by the holocaust of ten thousand sacrificed men and women, by the hearthstone of the family which is the cornerstone of the state and in the name of that God who hath set up the family institution and who hath made the breaking of the martial oath the most appalling of all perjuries, I implore the Congress of the United States to make some righteous, uniform law for all the States and from ocean to ocean, on this subject of marriage and divorce.

Let me say to the hundreds of young people in this house this afternoon, before you give your heart and hand in holy alliance, use all caution; inquire outside as to habits, explore the disposition, scrutinize the taste, question the ancestry, and find out the ambitions. Do not take the heroes and the heroines of cheap novels for a model. Do not put your lifetime happiness in the keeping of a man who has a reputation for being a little loose in morals, or in the keeping of a woman who dresses fast. Remember that while good looks are a kindly gift of God, wrinkles or accident may despoil them. Remember that Byron was no more celebrated for his beauty than for his depravity. Remember that Absalom's hair was not more splendid than his habits were despicable. Hear it, hear it! The only foundation for happy marriage that has ever been or ever will be is good character.

Ask God whom you shall marry, if you marry at all. A union formed in prayer will be a happy union, though sickness pale the cheek, and poverty empty the bread-tray, and death open the small graves, and all the path of life be strewn with thorns, from the marriage altar with its wedding march and orange blossoms clear on down to the last farewell at that gate where Isaac and Rebecca, Abraham and Sarah, Adam and Eve, parted.

And let me say to you who are in this relation, if you make one man or woman happy you have not lived in vain. Christ says that what He is to the Church you ought to be to each other; and if sometimes through difference of opinion or difference of disposition, you make up your mind that your marriage was a mistake, patiently bear and forbear, remembering that life at the longest is short, and that for those who have been badly mated in this world, death will give quick and immediate bill of divorcement written in letters of green grass on quiet graves. And perhaps, my brother, my sister—perhaps you may appreciate each other better in heaven than you have appreciated each other on earth.

In the "Farm Ballads," our American poet puts into the lips of a repentant husband, after a life of married perturbation, these suggestive words:

> And when she dies I wish that she would be laid by me,
> And, lying together in silence, perhaps we will agree.
> And if ever we meet in Heaven, I would not think it queer
> If we love each other better because we quarreled here.

And let me say to those of you who are in happy married union, avoid first quarrels; have no unpleasant correspondence with former admirers; cultivate no suspicions; in a moment of bad temper do not rush out and tell the neighbors; do not let any of those gadabouts of society unload in your house their baggage of gab and tittle-tattle; do not stand on your rights; learn how to apologize; do not be so proud, or so stubborn, or so devilish that you will not make up. Remember that the worst domestic misfortunes and most scandalous divorce cases started from little infelicities. The whole piled-up train of ten rail cars telescoped and smashed at the foot of an embankment came to that catastrophe, by getting two or three inches off of the track. Some of the greatest domestic misfortunes and the wide-resounding divorce cases have started from little misunderstandings that were allowed to go on and go on until home and respectability and religion and immortal soul went down in the crash, crash!

And, fellow-citizens as well as fellow-Christians, let us have a Divine rage against anything that wars on the marriage state. Blessed institution! Instead of two arms to fight the battle of life, four. Instead of two eyes to scrutinize the path of life, four. Instead of two shoulders to lift the burden of life, four. Twice the energy, twice the courage, twice the holy ambition, twice the probability of the worldly success, twice the prospects of heaven. Into the matrimonial bower God fetches two souls. Outside that bower room for all contentions, and all bickerings, and all controversies, but inside the bower there is room for only one guest—the angel of love. Let that angel stand at the floral doorway of this Edenic bower with drawn sword, to hew down the worst foe of that bower—easy divorce. And for every Paradise lost may there be a Paradise regained. And after we quit our home here may we have a brighter home in heaven, at the windows of which this moment are familiar faces watching for our arrival, and wondering why so long we tarry.

ONE ON THE REPORTER.

An Excellent Simile That Caused a Smile.

A man in Port Huron, Michigan, was giving a reporter an item of news.

"Yes," he went on, after saying he had something to tell, "we had quite a storm up our way the other day."

"Any rain?" inquired the reporter.

"Some; but it was the hail I wanted to speak about."

"Much hail?"

"I don't know whether you would call it much or not, but there wasn't a hailstone fell that wasn't bigger than an egg."

"Come off!" dissented the reporter, "did many fall?"

"Millions of them."

"You must be the hailstone liar," suggested the reporter.

"No, I'm giving you the straight truth."

The reporter still had his doubts, says The Detroit Free Press.

"What kind of eggs?" he ventured.

"Fish eggs," smiled the Port Huron humorist and the reporter offered to buy the cigars.

Preparing for Argument.

"Hello, Hakenton," said one of the statesmen in the House of Representatives as he picked up from his neighbor's desk four or five dictionaries of invectives and slang. "I see you're studying philology."

"Not exactly," said his neighbor, burying himself still further in a treatise on the history of billingsgate. "I'm merely preparing for my debate on the financial question."

Such Wonderful Credit.

"We frequently see it stated," said Mr. Oddfish, "that such and such men started from extreme poverty, coming into town, in the first place, without a farthing, and rising by their own exertions. When I first came I had to borrow money to get here, and I've been borrowing money ever since. It is a great thing at sixty to have established such a wonderful credit."

Everybody Emancipated.

Wife—I thought you were going to stay at home with the children to-night, while I went to the meeting of the Emancipated Woman's League.

Husband—I did intend to, Lucilla, but at the last moment this afternoon received notice of the preliminary meeting of the Emancipated Man's Association.

Wife—Well, what's to become of the children?

Husband—Oh, I've arranged that. They're going to the regular Thursday night social of the Emancipated Youth's Society.—Judge.

COMFORT PEASE AND HER GOLD RING.

MARY E. WILKINS.

CHAPTER III.

When Comfort came downstairs the next morning there was a bright red spot on each cheek, and she was trembling as if she had a chill.

Her mother noticed it and asked her if she was cold, and Comfort said: "Yes, ma'am."

"Well, draw your stool up close to the fire and get warm," said her mother. "Breakfast is most ready. You can have some of these pancakes to carry to school for your dinner."

Comfort sat soberly in the chimney corner until breakfast was ready, as her mother bade her. She was very silent and did not say anything during breakfast, unless some one asked her a question.

When she started for school, her mother and grandmother, stood in the window and watched her.

It was a very cold morning, and Mrs. Pease had put her green shawl on Comfort over her coat, and the little girl looked very short and stout as she trudged along between the snow ridges which bordered the path, and yet there was a forlorn air about her.

"I don't know as the child was fit to go to school to-day," said Mrs. Pease doubtfully.

"She didn't look very well, and she didn't eat much breakfast, either," said Grandmother Atkins.

"She was always crazy after hot pancakes, too," said her mother.

"Hadn't you better call her back, Em'ly?"

"No, I won't," said Mrs. Pease, turning away from the window. "She's begun to go to school, and I'm not going to take her out unless I'm sure she ain't able to go."

So Comfort Pease went on to school and she had the gold ring in her pocket, which was tied around her waist with a string under her dress skirt, as was the fashion then. Comfort often felt of the pocket to be sure the ring was safe as she went along. It was bitterly cold, the snow creaked under her stout shoes. Besides the green shawl, her red tippet was wound twice around her neck and face, but her blue eyes peering over it were full of tears which the frosty wind forced into them, and her breath came short and quick. When she came in sight of the schoolhouse she could see the straight column of smoke rising out of the chimney, it was so thin in the cold air. There were no scholars out in the yard, only a group coming down the road in the opposite direction. It was too cold to play out of doors before school as usual.

Then she slipped it on over the third and fourth fingers of her left hand, put her mittens on again, and went on.

It was quite still in the schoolhouse, although school had not begun, because Miss Tabitha Hanks had arrived. Her spare form, stiff and wide, and perpendicular as a board, showed above the desk. She wore a purple merino dress buttoned down the front with hard black buttons, and a great breast pin of twisted gold. Her hair was looped down over her ears in two folds like shiny drab satin. It scarcely looked like hair, the surface was so smooth and unbroken, and a great tortoise shell comb topped it like a coronet.

Miss Tabitha's nose was red and rasped with the cold, her thin lips were blue and her bony hands were numb, but she set copies in the writing book with stern patience. Not one to yield to a little fall in temperature was Tabitha Hanks. Moreover she kept a sharp eye on the school, and she saw every scholar who entered, while not seeming to do so.

She saw Comfort Pease when she came shyly in, and at once noticed something peculiar about her. Comfort wore the same red thibet dress and the same gingham apron that she had worn the day before, her brown hair was combed off her high, serious forehead and braided in the same smooth tails, her blue eyes looked abroad in the same sober and timid fashion, and yet there was a change.

Miss Tabitha gave a quick frown and a sharp glance of her grey eyes at her, then she continued setting her copy. "That child is up to something," she thought, while she wrote out in her beautiful shaded hand: "All is not gold that glitters."

Comfort went forward to the stove which was surrounded by a ring of girls and boys. Matilda Stebbins and Rosy were there with the rest. Matilda moved aside at once when she saw Comfort and made room for her near the stove.

"Hullo, Comfort Pease," said she.

"Hullo," returned Comfort.

Comfort held her numb right hand to the stove, but the other she kept clenched in a little blue fist hidden in her dress folds.

"Cold, ain't it?" said Matilda.

"Dreadful," said Comfort, with a shiver.

"Why don't you warm both your hands?" asked Matilda.

"My other hand ain't cold," said Comfort, and she really did not think it was. She was not aware of any sensation in that hand except that of the gold ring binding together the third and fourth fingers.

Pretty soon the big girl with red cheeks came in. Her cheeks were redder than ever, and her black eyes seemed to have caught something of the sparkle of the frost outside. "Hullo," said she, when she caught sight of Comfort. "That you, Comfort Pease?"

"Hullo," Comfort returned faintly. She was dreadfully afraid of this big girl, who was as much as sixteen years old and studied algebra and was also said to have a beau.

"Got that gold ring?" inquired the big girl, with a giggle, as she held out her hands to the stove.

Comfort looked at her as if she were going to cry.

"You're real mean to tease her, so there!" said Matilda Stebbins, bravely, in the face of the big girl, who persisted, nevertheless. "Got that gold ring?" she asked again, with her teasing giggle, which the others echoed.

Comfort slowly raised her left arm. She unfolded her little blue fist, and there on the third and fourth fingers of her hand shone the gold ring.

Then there was such a cry that Miss Tabitha Hanks looked up from her copy, and kept her weary eyes fixed on the group at the stove.

"My sakes alive! Look at Comfort Pease with a gold ring on two fingers!" screamed the big girl, and all the rest joined in.

The other scholars in the room came crowding up to the stove. "Let's see it!" they demanded of Comfort. They teased her to let them take it. "Let me take it for just a minute? I'll give it right back, honest," they begged, but Comfort was firm about that; she would not let that ring go from her own two fingers for one minute.

"Ain't she stingy with her old ring?" said Sarah Allen to Rosy Stebbins. "Maybe it ain't real gold," whispered Rosy, but Comfort heard her. "'Tis, too!" said she, stoutly.

"It's brass, I can tell by the color," teased one of the big boys; "'fore I'd wear a brass ring if I was a girl."

"It ain't brass!" almost sobbed Comfort.

Miss Tabitha Hanks arose slowly, and came over to the stove. She came so silently and secretly that the scholars did not notice it, and they all jumped when she——

"You may all take your seats," said she, "if it is a little before nine. You can study until school begins. I can't have so much noise and confusion."

The scholars filed discontentedly to their seats. "It's all the fault of your old brass ring," whispered the big boy to Comfort with a malicious grin, and she trembled.

"Your mother let you wear it, didn't she," whispered Matilda to Comfort as the two took their seats in the bench. But Comfort did not seem to hear her, and Miss Tabitha looked that way, and Matilda dared not whisper again. Miss Tabitha moreover looked as though she had heard what she said, although that did not seem possible.

However, Miss Tabitha's ears had a reputation among the scholars for almost as fabulous powers as her eyes. Matilda Stebbins was quite sure she heard, and Miss Tabitha's after course confirmed her opinion.

The reading class was out on the floor fixing its toes on the line when Miss Tabitha walked behind it straight to Comfort.

"Comfort Pease," said she, "I don't believe your mother sent you to school wearing a ring after that fashion. You may take it off."

Comfort took it off. The eyes of the whole school watched her; even the reading class looked over its shoulders.

"Now," said Miss Tabitha, "put it in your pocket."

Comfort put the ring in her pocket. Her face was flushing redder and redder, and the tears rolled down her cheeks.

Miss Tabitha drew out a large pin, which was quilted into the bosom of her dress, and proceeded to pin up Comfort's pocket. "There," said she. "Now you leave that ring in there and don't touch it till you go home, then you give it right to your mother. And don't you take that pin out, if you do I shall whip you."

Miss Tabitha turned suddenly on the reading class, and the faces went about with a jerk. "Turn to the fifty-sixth page," she commanded, and the books all rustled open as she went to the front. Matilda gave Comfort a sympathizing poke and Miss Tabitha an indignant scowl under cover of the reading class, but Comfort sat still with the tears dropping down on her spelling book. She had never felt so guilty and so humble in her life. She made up her mind she would tell her mother about it and put the ring back in the box that night and never take it again until her finger grew to it, and if it never did she would try to be resigned.

When it was time for recess, Miss Tabitha sent them all out of doors. "I know it's cold," said she, but a little fresh air won't hurt any of you. You can run around and keep warm."

Poor Comfort dreaded to go out. She knew just how the boys and girls would tease her. But Matilda Stebbins stood by her, and the two hurried out before the others and ran together down the road.

"We've got time to run down to the old Loomis place and back before the bell rings," said Matilda. "If you stay here they will tease you dreadfully to show that ring, and if you do she'll whip you. She always does what she says she will."

The two girls got back to the scholhouse just as the bell rang, and beyond sundry elbow nudges and teasing whispers, as they went in, Comfort had no trouble. She took her seat and meekly opened her geography.

Once in a while she wondered, with a qualm of anxiety, if her ring was safe. She dare not even feel of her pocket under her dress. Whenever she thought of it Miss Tabitha seemed to be looking right at her. Poor Comfort had a feeling that Miss Tabitha could see her very thoughts.

The Stebbins and Sarah Allen usually stayed at noon, but that day they all went home. Sarah Allen had company, and the Stebbinses had a chicken dinner. So Comfort stayed alone. The other scholars lived near enough the schoolhouse to go home every day unless it was very stormy weather.

After everybody was gone, Miss Tabitha and all, the first thing Comfort did was slide her hand down over the bottom of the pocket, and carefully feel of it under her dress skirt.

Her heart gave a great leap and seemed to stand still—she could not feel any ring there.

CHAPTER IV.

Comfort felt again and again, with trembling fingers. She could not believe that the ring was gone, but she certainly could not feel it. She was quite pale and shook as if she had a chill. She was too frightened to cry. Had she lost Aunt Comfort's ring?—the real gold ring she had given her for her name? She looked at the pin which Miss Tabitha had quilted into the top of her pocket, but she dared not take it out. Suppose Miss Tabitha should ask if she had, and she had to tell her and be whipped! That would be almost worse than losing the ring.

Comfort had never been whipped in her life, and her blood ran cold at the thought of it.

She kept feeling wildly of her pocket. There was a little roll of writing paper in it, some leaves of an old account book which her mother had given her to write on. All the hope she had was that the ring had slipped inside that, and that was the reason why she could not feel it. She longed so to take out that pin and make sure, but she had to wait for that until she got home at night.

Comfort began to search all over the schoolroom floor, but all she found were wads of paper and apple cores, slate-pencil stumps, and pins. Then she went out in the yard and looked carefully, then she went down the road to the old Loomis place, where she and Matilda had walked at recess. Miss Tabitha Hanks went home that way, but no sign of the ring could she find. The road was as smooth as a white floor too, for the snow was old, and well trodden.

Comfort Pease went back to the schoolhouse, and opened her dinner-pail. She looked miserably at the pancakes, the bread and butter, and the apple pie and cheese, and tried to eat but she could not. She put the cover on the pail, leaned her head on the desk in front, and sat quite still until the scholars began to return. Then she lifted her head, got out her spelling book and tried to study. Miss Tabitha came back early, so nobody dared tease her, and the cold was so bitter, and the sky so overcast that they were not obliged to go out at recess. Comfort studied and recited, and never a smile came on her pale, sober, little face. Matilda whispered to know if she were sick, but Comfort only shook her head.

Sometimes Comfort saw Miss Tabitha watching her with an odd expresson, and she wondered forlornly what it meant. She did not dream of going to Miss Tabitha with her trouble. She felt quite sure she would get no sympathy in that quarter.

All the solace Comfort had was that one little forlorn hope that the ring might be in that roll of paper, and she should find it when she got home.

A CAT THAT LOVES WATER.

The Remarkable Predilections of a Precocious and Interesting Feline.

Since the days of Baron Munchausen and "Puss in Boots" there has been no more remarkable cat than Tuxie, the property of a New York cotton broker, who makes his home in Harlem. Tuxie is the affectionate diminutive of Tuxedo, and he comes from a large family, his brothers having all, however, met with an early death.

While not a trick cat by any manner of means, Tuxie's performances are very remarkable from a feline point of view. All these performances are distinguished by his ardent love for water with a slight chill on. He approaches his mistress at least once a day with a plaintive and effective me-ow, and as she rises, knowing well what he wants, walks before her to the wash basin. The basin is filled nearly to the brim, and Tuxie then leaps to the marble slab framing it and utters a grateful purr. For ten or fifteen minutes thereafter he amuses himself by dipping in one fore-paw after the other and splashing vigorously. When he has tired himself with this play he gravely pulls the stopper out and jumps to the floor.

Tuxie's chief playground is the kitchen on wash days and when the oil-cloth is being scrubbed. On these latter occasions he sticks close to the housemaid, avoiding the dry floor and standing delightedly on the section where the scrubbing-brush has just been. At least a round dozen of times he has been caught in the high tin pan that is used on cleaning days, sending the water whirling over the surrounding objects and his own fur. Another of his pastimes is to poke his mouth under the faucet of the butler's pantry if by chance there happens to be any dripping there. Rain is hailed with joy by him, and as soon as the flagstones outside get thoroughly wet he will stand and violently mew at the back kitchen door until it is opened for him to go and splash in the puddles.—New York World.

DON'TS FOR WOMEN.

Don't wear a veil with a hole in it. It gives a woman a squalid look of poverty that there is no excuse for. Veils cost little, and at the worst she can go without one.

Don't lift up your skirt high on one side and allow it to trail on the other. Every woman should practice holding up her skirts before a pier glass. They can be so caught together in the back as to lift them effectively and modestly.

Don't wear a hat too young unless you wish to look old. A sailor hat can be confidently recommended as calculated to make any mature woman look like a grandmother.

Don't wear a bang bigger than the moment's fashion justifies if you don't wish to look hopelessly vulgar. It is a general law that you can always do a simpler thing than the fashion with safety, but to be fussier than the fashion is to be lost to good taste and dead in vulgarity and commonness.

Don't wear your clothes tight if you are too fat.

Don't cut yourself in two near the knees with a coat that strikes you about there if you are a short woman. Nothing detracts more from an appearance of height.

Don't forget in arranging your headgear that the effect of the modern variations of the Alsatian bow depends altogether in fine shades in placing it. You can have horns growing horizontally out of your temples and feel fashionable, but you will look crazy and ugly. These bows can be set well back on the head or they can be put forward if they seem to come from near the top of the head, but they must not grow out of the temples.

The Coldest Winter.

The most notable thing about the spell of cold weather through which we have passed is its widespread intensity. All Europe has been in the grasp of the ice king, and his antics are more talked about than those of any other monarch. In far Asia Japanese sailors were frozen to death while training their guns on the Chinese forts and fleet at Wei-Hai-Wei, and even in Northern Africa snow fell for the first time in so long a period that grown men gazed at it with wonder.

What does it all mean? Scientists have been at work for years to figure out a law of climatic and weather changes, and their conclusion is that it takes between thirty and thirty-five years to get from the extreme of heat to the extreme of cold. Just why this is they cannot tell, but their delving into the old records convinces them that there is some natural law at work, and that sooner or later it will be discovered.

Five years ago a Swiss professor, Brueckner by name, published a book called "Climatic Oscillations Since 1700," and strangely enough, his calculations made it appear that that one of the culminating periods of extreme cold would come around about this time—perhaps in this very year—to be followed by gradually increasing warmer weather, which is scheduled to reach its highest point about the end of the first quarter of the next century.

While we think of our present sufferings, we may, therefore, turn for consolation to 1925 or 1930, and revel in the anticipation of the mildest winter that we can secure in this latitude.—New York News.

To the Pole by Balloon.

In the meeting of the Swedish Academy of Sciences at Stockholm on February 13 the aeronaut, Andre, read a paper about his proposition to reach the north pole by aerial navigation. He argued that the conditions for a balloonist are most favorable from every standpoint. The present highly developed technique of aerial navigation would enable a balloon rising at Spitzbergen in the early summer to take advantage of the warm aerial current blowing northward at this season, and to finish the trip across the unexplored arctic regions in about thirty days. He estimates the entire expense of his voyage at about $35,000. His arguments were listened to with considerable interest, and it is likely some action will be taken in the matter.

Luna's Diameter.

Reports from some of the observatories, including those at Washington and New Haven state the observers were much discouraged over the fact that they were unable to measure the diameter of the moon during the eclipse of Sunday night, March 10th. This may surprise some unprofesssional readers, who have been under the impression that the diameter of our luminary is accurately known. It has been ascertained that it does not differ much from 2,163 miles and may be set down as pretty certain that it is not less than 2,160 and not greater than 2,165. The diameter, as measured under ordinary circumstances, is found to be greater than the fact in occulation and eclipses of the sun, a difference which may be explained as partly due to the effect of brightness in augmenting the apparent size of an object and in part to the bending of the rays of light passing from the sun or star through a very spare atmosphere surrounding the moon. The first named condition is not present when the moon is in the earth's shadow during a total eclipse of our satellite, and this fact explains the anxiety of the astronomers to measure it Sunday night in the phase of totality.—Chicago Tribune.

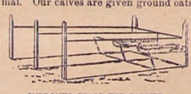
RAISING DAIRY CALVES.

How the Successful Dairy Farmers of Wisconsin Keep Up Their Herds.

Dairy farming in this part of Wisconsin (Jefferson Co.) is practiced to the exclusion of almost all other kinds, a few hogs of course being kept for the purpose of consuming the skimmilk. To be successful the farmers must have good cows, and to have good cows they must begin with good calves.

We select the calves produced by the most profitable cows, taking into consideration not only the quantity of milk, but the quality also as determined by the Babcock test. Our herd, consisting of 46 thoroughbred cows, is headed by a full-blood bull. When a calf is born that we wish to raise, we allow it to run with the mother one day only unless the cow's udder is in bad condition. In that case we believe it is best for the calf to suck. After the first day teach it to drink, giving the milk from the mother. Give about 8 lbs. night and morning for a month. The past season after the first month we began giving 10 lbs. of skimmilk in the morning and about thd same amount of sweet milk at night. At this age also begin to feed a little fine hay.

At about two months of age they are put into winter quarters, where they are fed skimmilk entirely with a good supply of hay and grain. Begin with 8 or 10 lbs. at a feeding and gradually increase the amount until it reaches 15 lbs. Feed regularly and heat the milk to 90° before giving it to them. Always treat them kindly. The exact amount and kind of grain feed will be governed by circumstances largely and by the capacity of the individual animal. Our calves are given ground oats with a sprinkling of old process oilmeal; probably no two receive the same amount. In feeding grain be careful to not overfeed at first. Begin with a light ration and gradually increase it. Some farmers in my vicinity give calves constant access to grain feed after they have become accustomed to it.



IMPROVED STALL FOR CALVES.

We stable our calves in a warm barn, each one having a separate stall, two of which are shown in the accompanying illustration. Each stall is 2½ ft. high, 2 ft. wide and 4 ft. long from manger to drop. In front of the calf is a manger for hay 2 ft. high, 1½ ft. long, and just as wide as the stall. In one corner, a a, is a little box in which to place grain feed. At the back end of each stall partition is a 2x2 in. timber running from the ground to the ceiling, for support. At the front every 4 or 5 ft. is a 2x4 answering the same purpose. A strap on which is placed an iron ring, is fastened around each calf's neck. A rope with a snap at one end is tied to the manger and by it the calf is secured. In spring when the grass is well started the calves are turned out to pasture and not again taken up until they are yearlings.—American Agriculturist.

The Keeping of Lent.

The season which the church has set at the opening up of the year's vernal life is a season in which man is called upon to look upon his own life, and provide, under God, for its correction and renewal. Lent is to be an annual period of fresh effort. The capacities of each individual life are to be surveyed, the claims of God upon each individual soldier of the Cross are to be reconsidered, the solemn truths which cluster around the Christian doctrine of redemption are to be seriously contemplated. Lent is a time for raising up again in the habits of the individual what has run down, or fallen down. It is a time for beginning again, and as this season starts afresh upon a new division of the race, so it should be a time when the race each year is to be begun again with greater keenness and earnestness and continued with greater concentration of will and purpose, and with greater patience. Lent is intended to deepen the spiritual convictions of the Christian world. It is intended to arouse in sinners a sense of the exceeding sinfulness of sin and to teach them that discipline which ever points out the way of escape which God has provided in every temptation. But, apart from subjective lessons of the most crucial importance, Lent brings home to weak and erring man the truth that Christ has suffered and died as the Lamb of God that taketh away the sins of the world. It shows the end of effort and the success of perseverance; it says in the words of the apostle: "Be ye steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as ye know that your labor is not in vain in the Lord."

The Cab of the Future.

A coach builder has brought out the first part of the cab of the future. It recalls a bath chair somewhat, and accommodates two persons, together weighing sixteen stones. The vehicle itself represents 56 stones. Thirteen miles an hour is the average speed. The principle of propulsion is electricity, stored in thirteen accumulators; power is transmitted to the axles, not by a chain movement, but by the Cordan cog-wheel. Unfortunately, the accumulators have to be frequently recharged. That is a matter for the intended company to remedy by having "feeding electricity depots" as close to each other as possible. In the new electric tram line that runs from the Rue St. Lazare to the Bois de Vincennes, a distance of six miles, the accumulators are recharged at a halfway office while the passengers are quitting and entering the 'bus. The coming cab will have its own electric lamps, inside and outside. It will be heated by electricity, and so be superior to the present ambulatory refrigerators. A clock will be permanently fixed in the vehicle, with faces on the exterior and inside; the tariff will be based on a unit charge of five minutes. Cabby will hand a ticket to the fare, pencilling thereon the hour of starting. He will, when the journey is ended, mark on the ticket the cost of the trip. Each ticket will be numbered consecutively, as well as displaying that of the vehicles and the amount to be paid per five, ten, fifteen, etc., minutes, up to twelve fives, or 60, brought out on the margin. The last attempts at electric cars revealed three drawbacks—the clocks somehow went too fast, or the hands declined to move on; one vehicle took fire, and the lady occupant was so barricaded with her small parcels that she was nearly prematurely cremated; another fin de siecle cab exploded and the careful conductor has since been missing.—London News of the World.

Russian Rice Pudding.

Wash a cup of raisins and place in a basin with half a cup of best rice and a pint of milk. Cover the basin and stand it on the stove. Stir the contents occasionally till the milk is absorbed. When this is done, add a little grated lemon peel and place it in a pie dish. Make a custard with three-quarters of a pint of milk and one egg, and when it is cool pour it over the rice and raisins. Bake in a moderate oven for about twenty minutes, and serve with caster sugar and ground cinnamon. The raisins on no account must be stoned or they will "turn" the custard; therefore, for a children's pudding, it is best to substitute sultanas for the raisins.—Housewife.

STUDYING CHIROGRAPHY.

The Beatings of the Pulse Are Now Shown in the Handwriting.

In connection with the trial of Captain Dreyfus, the Paris correspondent of The Daily News writes: "What Dreyfus said about the judgment of the experts on handwriting proves right. Four such experts were summoned. Two of them declared that the document was not written by Dreyfus, one that he could not form any decided opinion, and only the fourth that the document was written by the prisoner. The opinion of Dr. Bertillon, who is known as the inventor of the anthropometrical system, decided the matter. Dr. Bertillon claims to have discovered a new process for identifying handwriting. It is based on the measurement of the beatings of the pulse, which are said to have in everybody a different and thoroughly characteristic effect on the handwriting. The inventor is said to enlarge the specimens by photography, till the letters are a foot high, and then the characteristic marks are seen."

Electricity from Typewriters.

Static electricity and electro-magnetism have been reported recently from a new source—the typewriting machine. In manifolding, where four to eight carbon copies are made, on removing the carbons the frequently stick together and to hands, or if laid against the clothing or on a blotter will cling very closely; but if slowly drawn apart several times the magnetism gradually passes away. Some of the typewritten copies repel each other very strongly, while others stick together. Miss Harriet Russell, of Chicago, who reports this interesting fact, also complains that after a great deal of duplicating the machine becomes so charged as to yield a distinct and very annoying shock each time the gutta percha space bar is struck.—Western Electrician.

Beer Displacing Ale.

Lager beer, made in Germany or Austria, is gradually ousting English ale in foreign markets. Five years ago British brewers exported 599,000 barrels, but since that time an annual decrease has been recorded, and the last figures stood at 414,261 barrels, or about 14,913,396 gallons, being over 6,000,000 gallons less than before. On the other hand, the German and Austrian brewers are gaining in prosperity annually, especially those in Bavaria and Baden, and are increasing their exports every year. The report for last year shows that the Fatherland, after supplying all the bocks consumed in Germany, exported no less a quantity than 66,000,000 gallons of lager beer to other countries.

Magnetic Sand Under Car Wheels.

An experiment has recently been made near Orange, N. J., on the Suburban Traction Company, with magnetic sand from the ore separating works at Ogden. Edison had an idea that the sand would have more effect in preventing slipping of the wheels than the ordinary sand. The experiment was tried during a snowstorm on the Eagle Rock Line, where the grades are excessive and the difficulties of operating in snow are enormous. The experiment proved a complete success, the sand making a perfect electrical connection with the rails and no slip being noted.

CIGARETTES FOR FAIR LIPS.

Some Noted Women Are Noted for Their Devotion to the Mild Vice.

Mrs. Crawford, the noted journalist of Paris, says that the cigarette has not yet found its way with after-dinner coffee into the official drawing-room, but it soon will. At all the homes setting up to style it is served at intimate breakfasts and small and lively dinners. Nobody is shocked when a lady smokes not merely one cigarette, but two or three. A minister of Queen Christina is responsible for the report that that highly respectable and respected lady is an inveterate and a veteran smoker. Most of the Russian grand duchesses are smokers. Mrs. Crawford does not know whether the Queen of Italy smokes, but some of her ladies certainly do. When she was at Spezia she saw them enjoying cigarettes while boating on the lake and in the grounds of the Duchess of Genoa's villa, where the queen was. Modjeska is an inveterate smoker, and is really quite disturbed if the women guests at her table do not smoke with her. "Ah," she once said in the hearing of a New York Sun reporter, "if you would but smoke with me then I would be sure of your loyalty. In Poland one ever says kind things of another when they have smoked together." It is always a cigarette the woman smoker indulges in. Fair Phyllis with a pipe, or even a cigar, would be a monstrosity not to be tolerated. And yet the doctors agree that the cigarette is far more injurious. Few men really enjoy seeing the woman smoke for whom they care most. It is all very well at the gay little dinner after the play or the lively supper in free-and-easy Bohemia. And it does seem cozy and jolly to see some other fellow's wife smoke with her husband, but for the little woman at home, whom his children call mother, even while he rather urges her to have a cigarette for company, in his secret heart he is glad she refuses, and because he knows she will refuse is the reason why he invites her so persistently to share his confidences with my Lady Nicotine.

Telegraphers' Peculiar Penmanship.

"An expert telegrapher can always be told by his writing," said an operator recently. "No matter how indifferent the writing of expert operators may be, there is a similarity that can always be distinguished by a fellow manipulator of the keys. It seems that there are certain muscles of the hand capable of quicker motion than others. A telegrapher who is compelled to take down thirty or fifty words a minute develops these muscles and makes them do most of the work. So the writing of expert operators has a peculiar resemblance which is particularly noticeable to persons who follow the business. A telegrapher is compelled to adopt a different style of writing from that usually in schools. In the case of the telegrapher, he must have speed, and great speed, too, or he will be thrown aside. The other day a fellow operator and myself saw a postal card. I had only glanced at it when I remarked that it was the writing of a man who had once been a telegraph operator. My companion agreed, and further suggested that he had received his education in a railway office, inasmuch as he dated his postal in the right hand corner, as the blanks are made in that form. Yes, and he had been a bookkeeper; for, although the figures in the table given were written hastily, they were on perfect lines, added my friend. This all came from our noticing the class distinction in the writing of a telegrapher. As there was no name signed to the postal, it merely giving a list of shipments, we were anxious to find out whether our judgment was correct. We asked the man who received it who had written it. He gave the name of a now prominent business man who began life as a messenger in a railroad office, then became a telegrapher, next was given a position of trust where bookkeeping was one of the duties, finally launching out for himself in a line entirely foreign to railroading or bookkeeping. The characteristics that had crept into his writing during his early training were still visible. We had guessed the history of the man from his writing."—Pittsburg Dispatch.

ONTARIO'S LEGISLATURE.

An Interesting Diagram Showing the Division of Members by Occupations.

The eighth Legislative Assembly of the Province of Ontario is now in session at Toronto. Sir Oliver Mowat, who has been Premier for the last 20 years and over, has a safe majority in the House of straight Liberal followers. For the first time in the history of the Province, however, there was a farmer's political party in the recent general election campaign and this movement returned 17 independent farmers, or Patrons of Industry as they are called, to the Legislature. At the opening of the session Mr. Marter, the leader of the Conservative opposition, threw out a suggestion to all the agricultural members of the House to combine for their own interests. This has set many of the politicians estimating the actual voting strength of the farmers with a view to possible developments.

The better to elucidate the composition of the whole house the diagram on this page, drawn with proportionate accuracy, shows the various occupations represented in the eighth Legislature in a rather striking manner. Division 1 represents the farmers, who number 42 out of a total list of 91 members, or a fraction over 46 per cent. of the house. The farmers certainly have no reason to complain on the score of representation. Section 2 represents all who may properly be classed as merchants. The term includes store-keepers, millers and lumber merchants. Twenty of this influential and numerous class are in the Legislature or a representation of nearly 22 per cent. The next section, 3, represents the lawyers, who must be numerous in Ontario if their strength in the House is proportionate with their numbers in the population of the Province. They count 16 in all, or over 17½ per cent. of the House. The medical doctors do not take so largely to public life as the members of the legal profession. Their force is only six in the chamber, or a fraction over 6½ per cent. They are represented by section 4. Sections 5 and 6 represent the journalists and contractors, who take equal rank, three from each body. One auctioneer, section 7, completes the circle. On the whole it would perhaps be hard to find all the world over a House better qualified, in view of its composition, to deal intelligently with its business.—Buffalo Express.

The Sound of a Sunbeam.

One of the most wonderful of the many discoveries in science that have been made in the last few years is the fact that a ray of light produces sound. A beam of sunshine is caused to pass through a prism, so as to produce what is called the solar spectrum or rainbow. A disk, having slits cut in it, is revolved swiftly and the colored light of the rainbow is made to break through it. Place the ear to the vessel containing silk, wool or other colored material. As the colored lights of the spectrum fall upon it, sounds will be given by different parts of the spectrum, and there will be silence in other parts. For instance, if the vessels contain red worsted and the green light flashes upon it, loud sounds will be given. Only feeble sounds will be heard if the red and blue parts of the rainbow fall upon the vessel and other colors make no sound at all. Green silk gives sound best in a red light. Every kind of material gives more or less sound in different colors, and utters no sound in others.—Philadelphia Inquirer.

Tobacco Smoke as a Disinfectant.

M. Tassinari, a Parisian scientist, has been experimenting with the smoke of tobacco and finds it to be one of the most perfect germicides and disinfectants ever used. In proving his claims smoke from a cigar was blown across a strip of linen which had been dipped in a fluid containing thousands of virulent microbes. When the cigar was finished the linen was immediately placed in a bowl of beef broth, where common microbes are expected to breed and multiply very rapidly. To the surprise of the doubters it was found that the smoke had had the effect of delaying the growth of the organisms, that the majority of them were dead and that the which managed to live never fully de' oped.

FACTS OF HISTORY.

Experience is the Best of All Teachers.

LET CANADA BE WISE.

And Profit by the Mistakes of Other Nations—What Other Peoples Have Done and What They Have Been Sorry for—Protection and Free Trade Viewed in the Light of Experience.

NO. 2.

After most careful enquiry by commission and otherwise, Germany in 1818 adopted a protective system. Under that protective system her industries were greatly developed and the country became prosperous. Indeed no country in modern times has shown so great an industrial progress as Germany has, since her entrance into the Zollverein, which removed the customs houses from between her several separate states to a common frontier and protected her industries against foreign competition by a high tariff.

In 1864, through following the example of France, Prussia reduced her tariff from a protection to a revenue basis. The foreign competition at once set in and the result is a matter of history, viz., that disaster overcame many great industries which had been developed by the early protective policy of the Zollverein. Very gladly indeed did Prussia return to the protective policy, in 1879, and to-day Germany is thoroughly protectionist and her industries great; her people well employed and no free trade doctrines affect them in any way. Indeed within the past few years they have increased their protective acts. The German people are a careful, sensible, level-headed people.

THE EXPERIENCE OF IRELAND.

Great Industries Under Protection—Thorough Ruin Under Free Trade.

Before the union of Ireland and England the former country had great manufacturing industries. For instance, when the union took place and Ireland's protective policy was destroyed she had hands employed in Dublin, according to statistics, in the manufacture of woollens to the amount of about 5,000 and in the manufacture of carpets nearly 1,000 were employed in Dublin.

The result of the union upon these Irish industries, followed as it was by the great influx of English goods, is told by the history of that time in the following language.

"There are only 682 (instead of 5000) employed in all branches of the woollen industry in Dublin and its vicinity. So far as the carpet industry is concerned, it can hardly be said to exist at all."

Another example of the free admission of English goods upon the industries of Ireland is given in the facts with regard to Cork.

Before the union there were 457 looms there and 2500 people in the City of Cork engaged in manufacturing. Thirty-four years afterwards that 2500 had dwindled to 156 and a very short time after that period the manufacturers were absolutely gone.

Let us quote from the history of the times again.

"The most fatal effects have followed because of the destruction of our tariff, and the premature withdrawal of the protective duties, whereby Ireland's industries have been left open to a fruitless competition against the overwhelming capital and influence of England. Before the withdrawal of protection about 150,000 people were making their living and acquiring a competency out of the manufactures of this country. These now are wholly thrown upon charity; our cotton industry is gone; our woollen industry has disappeared; our looms are silent. No doubt the union will contribute to the greatness of the Empire and possibly to the safety of Ireland but the influx of English and other goods from the continent will for ever prevent Ireland possessing prosperous manufacturing and laboring classes, upon which depends the prosperity of the farming classes."

Canadians, Take Warning!

Canada has been getting her industries established during the past 15 years. These industries have been established by our defensive policy steadying the home market. Let us take down that defensive tariff and we should find the same destruction wrought. The enormous capital invested in the manufactories of England, of Germany, and of the United States, and the great power of those industries is ready to crush Canadian industries just as Ireland's industries were crushed before the greater power of English capital.

France Learns a Lesson.

Under all changes of government France clung to the commercial protective policy of Colbert and Napoleon down to a short time ago. That she advanced most rapidly in the development of every material interest is as clearly proved by the official returns to the Government as well as anything can be. Manufactures increased; labor was well paid; the production of wheat increased; and agriculture was prosperous.

Some idea of her progress may be had from the fact that in one period of twenty years during that time the value of her exports increased 131 per cent., though the population had only increased five per cent.

In 1860, however, France lowered her tariff very greatly against England and the trade between the two countries greatly increased. The result was, however, most unsatisfactory, her industries being most severely injured thereby, and France has returned to a high protective tariff. In support of this tariff the people of France are almost unanimous and no amount of persuasion would succeed in getting them to return to a free trade or revenue tariff basis.

Switzerland Tries a Low Tariff.

The Swiss people may be said to be the most self-governing people perhaps in the world. For a long period the Swiss tried and made a sincere attempt to carry out the doctrine of free trade. For years this effort went on but finally they were forced by consequent industrial depression to return to a protective system, which they did in 1885. A prominent Swiss asked recently as to how long it would be before Switzerland should again try free trade, said:

"Not until we forget that we tried it a long time before."

THE SENTIMENT OF MODERN TIMES.

Is Protection Being Destroyed or Is It Growing Stronger?

There is no need of us multiplying examples such as I have given. The fact is that the world outside of England is protectionist.

Do some of my hearers say, "This is true, but light is shining in in recent years, and the modern view is in favor of protection?"

Well let us see. Austria adopted protection in 1879; Russia increased her tariff in 1877 and in 1881; Germany, as we have shown, put up her walls higher in 1879; France increased her tariff in 1882 for purely protective purposes; Spain did the same in 1877 and 1882; Greece adopted a high protective tariff in 1885, and Switzerland in the same year; Sweden and Norway followed suit in 1887 and 1888; Italy began protection to her agriculture last year; the British Colony of Victoria in Australia had a general election last year and out of 79 members in a contest in which the trade question was the main issue, there were 65 protectionists and 14 free traders elected. Then on the top of all this comes the sweep out of Democratic Tariff Reform Free Traders in the United States only two or three months ago.

If, after these historical facts which I have given, there is any comfort for the men who think that protection is on the wane in the world, they are welcome to that comfort. Is not the fact however just as Lord Salisbury stated?

"That we live in an age of a war of tariffs, that every country has its weapons and we cannot fight unless we have our weapons too."

Liberals say "never mind the experience of ages and every other civilized country with the exception of England, but let us throw away our weapons."

Conservatives say "Our own experience and the experience of other countries teaches us that we should stand by a defensive tariff. Let us hold our own markets until other nations are willing to reciprocate by opening theirs—which think you is best and wisest?

Two Teachers.

Electors, you have two teachers before you. The one teacher is the teacher of history and the experience of all countries in the various ages. That teacher warns you to stand by a defensive policy.

The other teacher is the Liberal party, or rather politicians who want to get into office in that party. These men ask you to follow them in the pursuit of some will-o-the-wisp.

Remember, electors, their policy is a different one each election. Remember that in the last five years they have had as many different policies and each time they have told you that the sure, and safe and only remedy for Canada's ills, was the policy which they were at that time supporting. The policies of a few years ago are all forgotten by them now. They have a new fad now, and as usual they are telling you it is the only thing that could be of use to Canada.

Ask yourselves, please, this question. Why have they changed policy so often? Has their change come from conviction? If so, then their convictions of other days must have been badly founded and adopted after very immature consideration; but the fact is, they have been speaking to you not from conviction, but they have been trying this and that and every other cry for the purpose of getting into power. That is just what they are doing now.

Can you trust a party who will resort to such tactics and who place their desire for office above everything else.

PATRON TREACHERY.

To the Editor of The Mail and Empire,

SIR,—I notice in your paper of a recent date some particulars in connection with the course pursued by the Patrons of Industry Association as to nominating candidates.

Your correspondent "E.O." gives many instances in the lower part of the province of counties where Conservatives are opposed by Patrons, and many more instances where Liberals are not opposed by Patrons. He makes a very strong case for his section of the country, but the same thing seems to rule almost all over Ontario, and should be a warning to Conservative Patrons. As "E. O." writes particulars I send you the instances below given, which it seems to me ought to be a warning.

In Kent Mr. Pardo, Patron M.P.P., appeared at the convention which nominated Mr. A. Campbell, Grit, and made a speech, showing that Grits and Patrons, as he understood them, were one.

In this riding Mr. Schell, the Patron candidate, appeared at the nominating convention of Sir Richard Cartwright, and publicly supported that gentleman. He said Grits and Patrons were one. Just imagine the spectacle of Conservative Patrons following the lead of Sir Richard Cartwright.

In North Norfolk Mr. Vanloon, the Patron candidate, has publicly announced his intention of supporting John Charlton, Grit. And The Norfolk Reformer rejoices that Patrons will help elect John Charlton in North Norfolk and defeat David Tisdale in South Norfolk. Splendid game! Surely Conservatives will hardly be dupes enough to help it played!

Lincoln is a strong Reform riding. It is held by Mr. Gibson, a Grit. The Patrons ran a candidate in the Local; now they say they are not strong enough to run a man in the Dominion. It should be remembered that the Local member for Lincoln was a Conservative, and the Patrons opposed him. The late Patron candidate is an active supporter of Mr. Gibson.

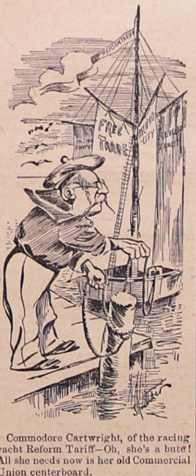
This is a strong Grit riding, and a wholly agricultural riding. There is no Patron candidate here, though if one would run well anywhere it would be here. There is evidently no desire to bother James Somerville, Grit.

In Haldimand the representative i Hon. W. H. Montague, Conservative, and a Patron is being run; while in South Brant, which is represented by Wm. Patterson, M.P., no Patron candidate is being run.

These instances, sir, ought surely to have some meaning in them.

A WELLAND CONSERVATIVE.

A SAIL FOR EVERY BREEZE.



Commodore Cartwright, of the racing yacht Reform Tariff—Oh, she's a bute! All she needs now is her old Commercial Union centerboard.

PATRON INCONSISTENCY.

To the Editor of the Mail and Empire.

SIR.—The numerous facts you have published regarding the suspicious tactics of the Patrons of Industry induce me to ask attention to one or two further points. Mr. John Brown is running as a perfectly independent candidate against Hon. Clarke Wallace, yet I find Mr. Brown sold $3,557 worth of flour to the Ontario Government in 1894. Then take their votes in the Legislature. Their first vote was straight Grit, but the Grand Association has met since. There has been such a kick among the Conservative Patrons that they had to adopt one of the planks of the Conservative platform to square themselves. One of their number, Pardo, went astray on that vote. The next vote was on supplies to public institutions. If there is anything on which they are strong it is the purchase of public supplies by tender, and not by favor. Yet when the vote came they were not there. All the Conservative Patrons voted with the Opposition, plus two Grits. I do not believe we will ever see another division in which the Patrons will be found to be solid, because the Tory Patrons have found that they are being made cats' paws of to save the Mowat Government. They will not vote confidence in the Government if they know it. The Patron movement began in the Grit camp, and will end there. It is seeking to oust the Conservative Government, at Ottawa, while refusing to vote want of confidence in the Mowat Government, even to the point of voting against its own platform.

JOHN MEULLER.

NOW TROUBLES ARE DIVIDED.

Neither Sex Has a Monopoly and They Vary Chiefly in Kind.

Troubles are pretty evenly divided, after all, says the Philadelphia Times. A girl may be so nearly distracted when she feels that the band of her dress skirt has come unfastened, but think of the misery of the man when the buttonhole in the neckband of his shirt rips open and lets his collar and necktie slide up to his ears. A girl has to fold her hands and wait for a man to ask her to go to the theatre with him, but when she does go she has the comfort of making the man spend a lot of money. That consoles her to a certain extent. A girl has to entertain stupid callers whether she wants to or not, because society demands it. A man has to dance with girls who can't even walk gracefully, because if he didn't his hostess would consider him rude. A girl carries her life in her hands when she tries to get within a rod of a bargain counter, but she can walk along the street in peace. Half a dozen bootblacks don't yell, "Shine, sir; shine?" at her. A girl has heaps of trouble with her complexion and her front hair, but she doesn't have to have a razor go travelling over her face every day. A girl is very likely to spend weeks in planning the construction of a new hat, but when she does get it people don't sit on it, as they always do on men's headgear. Perhaps that's because a girl doesn't leave her hat lying around on sofas and chairs.

SERVANTS' CATECHISM.

The Extraordinary Interrogatories Put to a Former Employer.

Perhaps some of my lady readers will sympathize with a complaint I have had as to the number and length of the interrogations occasionally administer by ladies when nquiring as to the character of servants. Here is a sample:

Do you consider her thoroughly respectable, honest, good-natured and obliging?

Is she clean in her work and her person?

Does she dress neatly?

Does she thoroughly understand plain cooking and housework?

Is she of good height, manners and general appearance?

Kindly mention how long she was in your service, when and why she left, what character you had with her, and what wages you paid her?

Do you know what she has been doing since she left your service?

Is she quick, sensible, able to learn and an early riser?

Has she any serious faults, and will you kindly say if you consider her in any way unsuitable for a good situation?

Are you acquainted with her father and mother or any of her family?—London Truth.

THE GARDEN ON THE FARM

ITS PRACTICAL VALUE UNDERESTIMATED BY MANY.

With a Little Forehanded Labor the Farmer May Enjoy Home-Grown Vegetables and Fruits in All Their Freshness.

The garden on the farm is the most important of all, yet there are thousands of farmers who do not have gardens. They deprive themselves of luxuries which they could easily grow, and go to the country stores to purchase fruits and vegetables, that are sent from the cities. The farmer looks upon the garden as costly the work required to produce the fruits and vegetables being more than he is willing to bestow. The strawberries, raspberries, currants, gooseberries, early peas, radishes, kale, asparagus, onions, celery, beets, melons and other garden products, which provide a variety for the table, are no inducement to the farmer, who makes wheat, corn, potatoes and hay his main crops. There are farmers however, who know the value of gardens, but the farmers as a class produce but a limited variety and are satisfied to either buy or limit themselves to the same fare in summer that they subsist upon during the winter, which is not conducive to health or pleasure

IMPROVEMENTS IN GARDENING.

Garden implements, such as the hoe, rake, spade and spading fork, are now being superseded. Seeds can be sown with a small drill, and the weed hoe, and hand cultivator will keep the weeds and grass down. The proper plan for a garden on the farm is to grow everything in long rows, using the horse hoe for cultivation. By this method there is a saving of labor, but more space is required and more manure must be used than when the area is smaller and the hand tools used. Seed sowing and covering, which was formerly a very tedious operation, can be quickly done with a seed drill. It is simply a matter of pushing the drill at a slow walk, and the entire work of planting a large garden than can be done in a day. The main work is in plowing the land and in harrowing the soil fine, so as to form a seed bed fit to receive the finest seeds and properly cover them.

ADVANTAGES OF THE HOME-GROWN ARTICLES.

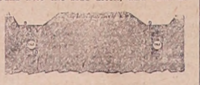
While the farmer may possibly be able to purchase some vegetables as cheap as he can produce them, yet he can never have them as fresh and wholesome as he can grow them. There is a difference in the flavor of fruit picked ripe and carried to the table and that picked partially green and transported a long distance to market. The same may be claimed of vegetables both early and late. When grown on the farm they are never stale, and a selection can be made of the best and choicest. The value of the articles produced in a garden in proportion to cost than the staple crops, and it does not pay the farmer to grow the cheaper articles and purchase the dearest. He should apply his labor where it will give him the greatest return for the outlay, and he cannot do this to better advantage than to cultivate a well-stocked garden.

An Old Landmark

One of the landmarks of St. Louis, the old homestead which was built by Pierre Chouteau 125 years ago, has been taken down by his great-grandson, of the same name, and removed, to be put up and preserved on the bluffs of Carondelet, where the family now resides. Before the work of razing the old building was begun, each timber was marked so that it could be restored to its old place when the house is put together again. The first Pierre Chouteau built it for a country home. Every piece of timber which went into the house was cut on the ground. In it is a great deal of black walnut, which at that time was plentiful, but has since become very valuable. All the planks used were cut out by hand. The walnut had to be sawed, but the other timber was chopped. When originally built, the house was an old-fashioned log cabin, but it was afterwards covered by a framework of weather boards. Additions were also made on both sides. When set up the structure will appear simply as the old log house without framework or additions. Pierre Chouteau acquired the land on which the cabin stood by grant from the Spanish Government about the year 1770. The family sold the land a few years ago to a syndicate, which has divided it into lots, and put it on the market again. The family still has in its possession the original Spanish grant.—New York Post.

Good Roads Where the Land Is Level.

The illustration represents an admirable plan for constructing roads in level regions. "a a" shows the level of the ground before working. "d d" are ditches on either side of the road. "f f" the road bed made of the earth taken from both side ditches. "t t" trench for placing tile which carry off the surplus water. Water from roadbed naturally runs into the side ditch, and then settling down to the tile, is carried off. Very little fall is required for getting rid of large quantities of water. The width of the tile will of course depend upon the amount of water to be disposed of. The tile can usually be made near home. During these hard times when so many men are out of work, it seems to me it would be advisable to utilize cheap labor in the construction of better highways.



Mr. Oscar Wilde.

Opinions concerning Mr. Oscar Wilde are so numerous that it will do no harm to add one more to the number. Mr. Wilde is still spoken of as a thing of beauty and a person of engaging appearance. The writer met him in London last summer, and he had an extended conversation with the ex-aesthete upon a business matter which was subsequently settled to the satisfaction of all parties concerned. Mr. Wilde was at that time addicted to wearing cork-soled boots of a very large and cumbersome make, and he wore flapping trousers that bagged at the knees. His rather shapeless body was encased in a frock coat which might have been made by an obscure tailor in Newark, so awkward and ill-fitting were its outlines, and it would be the widest possible departure from the truth to assert that his general appearance and expression were anything but repellant. The front of his coat was stained with grease. His teeth were discolored, and the fat hung in heavy masses over his jaw bones. Along with his unwieldly bulk and general ungainliness of movement there was a manner of assumed feminity that aroused ridicule if not disgust. Mr. Wilde sat humped up in a chair, with his eyes turned upward, and his voice was pitched like a woman's. He twisted his rings nervously, and occasionally pressed a handkerchief with a narrow lace border to his lips as he talked. There were two prominent Americans present at the interview, and they must read with interest the assertion made in some of the despatches that Mr. Wilde is a man of magnificent physique, with engaging manners, and a generally magnetic presence.—New York Sun.

A Dinner Pill.—Many persons suffer excruciating agony after partaking of a hearty dinner. Dangers of Delay.

If we were allowed to look into the future and see the fatal consequences that follow a neglected cold, how differently would our course be; could we realize our danger, how speedily we would seek a cure; but with many it is only when the monster disease has fastened its fangs upon our lungs that we awaken to our folly. What follows a neglected cold? It is not diseases of the throat and lungs, bronchitis, asthma, consumption, and many other diseases of like nature. Is it worse than madness to neglect a cold, and it is folly not to have some good remedy available for its frequent complaint. One of the most efficacious medicines for all diseases of the throat and lungs, is Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup. This medicine is composed of several medicinal herbs, which exert a most wonderful influence in curing consumption and other diseases of the lungs and chest. It promotes a free and easy expectoration, soothes irritation and drives the disease from the system.

THE BROADWAY CABLE.

ITS WORK AND THE DIFFICULTIES IT HAS TO CONTEND WITH.

Six Cables Always on Hand for the Immense Traffic of the Metropolis—Eight Months of Life—The Operation of Splicing—How "Kinks" Are Made and Located—The Watcher of the Tension Carriages.

If one stands astride the narrow slot which is, as it were, an artery through an artery of our great city, on Broadway, and watches the snaky cable as it glides along, he must pause a moment to consider before he can realize what an enormous amount of power it carries and what experiences it has to go through. Cruelly gripped by the mechanism beneath the cable cars and straining as it passes over curves, it has indeed a hard road to travel. What stories it could tell!

Before we tell the history of the cable, let us see of what it is composed. A strong hempen strand five-eighths of an inch in diameter forms the inner core; around this are wrapped six steel cables, which are in turn composed of seven strands wrapped around with other strands of steel wire, the whole making a total diameter of one and one-half inches.

A steel rod three-eighths of an inch in diameter and one foot in length weighs approximately one pound. The difference in weight between this cable and a steel rod of the same size may be realized when it is known that this cable weighs but three pounds to the running foot. The use of the central hemp rope is for the purpose of giving a certain pliability.

In order that rust and decay should be avoided, the rope is kept smeared with tar and oil. This is what causes the black shiny appearance. As one of the cables which obtains its power from the Broadway cable house is 20,000 feet in length, it is not difficult to determine the entire weight, which in this case would be 60,000 pounds. The market price of cables being about 40 cents per foot, the cost of this would be in the neighborhood of $8,000 for one coil of wire. The Broadway Company maintain six cables, and as the approximate life of a cable in our busy thoroughfare is little more than eight months, it would appear that the expense caused by the renewal of cables is not a small item, In Denver, Col., longer cables than these exist, the one on the main street being 86.900 feet in length, having a diameter of but one inch and a quarter. Owing to the fact that there is less traffic in the latter city, the work required from the cable is not so great. Its life is slightly lengthened, and ten months may be put to its credit.

It is quite interesting to watch the peculiarities of the cable, and when we stop a moment to think how the gripmen, when they reach the termini of a line, have the destruction of $8,000 worth of property in their power, we can see that some means is yet to be devised which will perform automatically the action of throwing off the grip, for unless the grip is loosened as the car approaches the power house, when it reaches the place where the cable descends to the driving wheels something must give way, and while the cable generally has the best of the encounter, very often a couple of strands are ripped, which entails considerable work upon the repairers.

At the Broadway power house Mr. M. Moore is the person who is technically known as the "splicer." He was brought from Denver, where he had been in charge of the cable in that city. He has about eight or ten men under him, who, with dexterity, make necessary repairs.

Cables are in a measure human. They have their diseases and they need their doctors. Mr. Moore is the medical examiner, and from him we received several points concerning the trouble to which the cable is subjected.

In case a cable has become bent in any way, it is difficult, in fact almost impossible, to straighten it absolutely. The bend remains, and if we stoop down to watch its onward approach it looks like a huge sea serpent, wriggling toward you, performing wonderful gyrations as it approaches. Several of these "kinks," as they are termed, have been made in the up-town cable, which travels at the rate of 810 feet per minute. As the rate of the cable is invariable, by simply looking at the clock, the man, whose sole duty it is to watch the cable, can tell at exactly what place the "kink" is situated. As a matter of curiosity we inquired of the watcher at the Fiftieth street power house when the next "kink" would arrive. Looking at his watch and hastily making a mental calculation, he answered, "between 4.11 and 4.12." In fact, the "kink" came in sight immediately as the hands of the watch pointed to eleven minutes after four.

With the Bowling Green cable, however, few "kinks" occur. The line is straighter and does not run under dangerous curves like those at Fourteenth and Twenty-Third streets. It might be well to mention here that, unless the grip is held fast to the cable as the curve is rounded, the enormous friction, resulting from the slipping of the cable through the grip at this point, would be sufficient te "burn" the strands or grind the grip; in either case doing considerable damage.

While it is easy to localize accidents, it is difficult to assign causes. However, recently, for some reason or other, the Bowling Green cable had about 1,000 feet of strands ripped off, and the writhing, curling mass of wire, as it lay upon the floor of the power house, presented a most confused appearance, and one would be led to wonder how puny men could have the power to cope with such an apparently unwieldy mass. With huge shears, however, those pieces of metal are snapped off, and a new cable must be put in place of the damaged portion. The splicing is an interesting operation. Unlike rope, the strands are extremely difficult to manipulate; yet, with skill acquired from the continual work, each strand is woven into place among other strands, heavy pliers and marlinspikes being used to separate the layers. When all is done, about four inches of the ends of each strand are left outside the cable, and by continued wear they finally break off and the splice becomes practically as a virgin cable. Even the trained eye of Mr. Moore is unable to detect the splice after the wires have been thoroughly covered with tar. The joint is as firm and as strong as the original cable.

Delicate hands are out of place in this work, and cable splicers are veritably "horny-handed sons of toil." Their work is mainly in the wee hours of the night, when traffic is at its minimum. Mr. Moore assures me that with his eight or ten helpers he can splice in a thousand feet of cable in one hour and a half.

At the Broadway station, far down underground, in regions damp and dripping with steam and tar, one may see the tension carriages, which play backward and forward on their slimy beds, with the restraining forces of the cable in one direction and the tension weight of 4400 pounds in the other. Everything is oil and tar, but the atmosphere is kept reasonably pure by a huge ventilating fan. Around and around the ponderous wheels revolve; onward glides the snaky cable, and, with eyes ever alert for approaching danger, the tireless watcher sits and waits for kinks or broken strands.—Electrical Review.

Compulsory Affection.

A Grand Trunk commuter got off the train at a small station this side of Portland. Said a passenger in a seat behind: "I've seen that man get off the train a hundred times or more and walk up towards his house—he lives up in that square building. He has three or four children, and in pleasant weather they're always playing in the yard or in the road. But I have never seen those children run to meet their father or take the least notice of him when he has passed them. They are never down at the train to catch his hand. Yet he seems to think a great deal of them and brings them out little knickknacks from the city. Funny children, shouldn't you say so?" "Well, I think I should say so," replied his companion. "If I had children like that I'd lick 'em till they'd display a little affection and come down to meet me sort of merrylike," and he gazed back at the retreating family grays with a fatherliness as winning as the edge of a meat ax.

AMERICAN WHALING FLEET.

Thirteen Steam and 78 Sailing Vessels—San Francisco Gets the Baleen.

If the remarkable success of steam whalers in the past season shall bring about the substitution of steam for sail power in the American whaling fleet, it will mean something momentous for the capital engaged in whaling. Steam whalers have been used on the Pacific coast for a good many years past, as they have been in the European fleets. The great majority of the American whaling fleet, however, is still composed of sailing craft. There has been a decrease in the tonnage of sailing whalers since the census year and a slight increase in the tonnage of steam vessels. The increase, however, has not been sufficient to indicate the speedy substitution of steam for sails in the whaling fleet as a whole. What is practically the latest official shipping list of whalers, shows 91 vessels of all sorts, Of these 13 are steamers, and the remainder sailing craft of various sorts. Of the 78 sailing craft in the list 40 are barks, 28 schooners, 7 brigs, and 3 ships. The steam whalers are usually larger than the sailing vessels. Of the thirteen steam vessels only one is of less than 100 tons burden, while eight are above 300 tons. Of these eight one is of 440 tons and another of 494 tons, while several are of nearly 400.

Of the sailing craft eleven are of less than 100 tons; thirty others are of less than 200; twenty are of more than 300 tons, and none is of 400 tons. The largest sailing craft in the list is the bark Emma F. Herriman, of San Francisco. The next in size is the ship Niger, of New Bedford, 391 tons. The whaling fleet is distributed according to hailing ports, thus: New Benford, forty two; San Francisco, thirty-four; Provincetown, nine; Edgartown, three; Boston, two; New London, one. Only two steamers hail from New Bedford. The total tonnage of the whaling fleet carried on the list is about 20,000, and of this more than 15,000 tons is in sailing craft, the tonnage of twelve steamers footing up 4015 tons, and that of the thirteenth steamer not being given.

Perhaps it is indicative of a certain business-like character in the steam whaling industry that the steamers seldom bear the romantic and sentimental names that the sailing craft usually bear. Some of the steamers are the Balæna and the Beluga, the Navarch, the Karluk, the Orca, the Narwhale, the Grampus, and the Belvedere. Only one bears a woman's name. The sailing craft bear such names as Bertha, Desdemona, Josephine, Kathleen and a dozen other personal names, or such as Morning Star, Greyhound, Petrel, Sunbeam, Bounding Billow, Hunter and Reindeer.

All, or nearly all of the regular sperm whalers are sailing craft. So are all the vessels that go whaling from New England ports to the North Atlantic. The steam whalers have a popular advantage in the Arctic by reason of the superior ease with which they are handled in the ice. They are built with great strength forward, so that they may stand the shock when they strike the ice with any considerable momentum. They are also specially sheathed about the water line, in order that they may not be cut through by drifting ice. The transformation of the whaling fleet into vessels propelled in part by steam will be an expensive business, and it will doubtless hasten the decay of New Bedford as a whaling port. Only fourteen out of New Bedford's forty-two whalers are reported as visiting the North Pacific, which, with the far north-western waters of Behring Sea and the Arctic Ocean, is now the region where the baleen-bearing whale is chiefly persued. Eleven of the thirteen steam whalers now hail from San Francisco and all make that port their headquarters. Nearly the whole of last season's whale catch has come or will come to San Francisco.—New York Sun.

THE CHINESE FUNERAL.

IT IS THE MOST GORGEOUS SIGHT IN ALL ASIA.

A Hugely Splendid Affair—The Most Important Event in a Chinaman's Life is His Funeral—The Man With the Pig Tail Must Have a Beautiful Coffin.

The most important event in a Chinaman's life is his funeral. A Chinese crowd is the culmination of human noise, and the Chinese are never so noisy as at a funeral. They have hearty appetites at all times, but they never eat so much as they do at a funeral feast. When I first lived in China I used to find it almost impossible to distinguish between a funeral procession and a marriage procession. In the center of one the coffined corpse is borne on the shoulders of men. In the center of the other similar men bear upon their shoulders the bride, who is in an enclosed sedan chair, and she is followed by her bridesmaids. But to the casual observer the two ends of the two processions are quite alike in every other respect. Tomtoms, red-clothed coolies carrying roasted pigs and other dainties, smaller coolies carrying cheap paper ornaments of a Mongolian theatrical type—these are the invariable elements of both processions.

The Chinese are to-day the most unique, the most ancient, and the most misunderstood people on earth. I say the most ancient because they are the least changed from what they were long centuries ago. The least changed! They are not changed at all. The China of to-day is the China Marco Polo knew. A few of us have been in China. I am not speaking of the missionaries; I regard them as a people apart. What have we gained in China? A strange experience (to me a pleasant one), a pound of perfumed tea, and a bale of flowered crepe, for both of which we have paid right handsomely. We have been treated in the main politely, but sooner or later most of us are bowed out of China, if not by the emperor, why, then, by the climate.

The Chinese have at least three religions—Confucianism, Buddhism, and Toaism. But the funeral rites of the three sects are identical. There are several reasons for this, The three religions are much alike, and are all largely founded upon Indian Buddhism. Moreover, religion is a very second-class affair in China. The priests of two sects often live together in the chummiest way. Filial devotion is the real religion of China. All China is one huge family, and the emperor is the "Great Father." By the way, Great Father is what the North American Indians call God. And the Chinese consider their emperor a god. There is one more reason why all Chinese funerals are greatly alike. China is a land of ceremonials, and the smallest details of those ceremonials are prescribed by the "Lake," or Book of Rites. To disobey the least rule of this great national manual is a crime, and a severely punished one. In two respects only does one Chinese funeral differ from another. The first is in the amount of money spent, and the second is in the period after death at which burial takes place.

The first ambition of every Chinaman is to have a splendid coffin. A poor Chinaman will half starve himself and his family for years that he may daily hoard a few "cash" toward the sum needed for the purchase of the coveted casket. When the coffin is really bought it is brought home with great ceremony. It is given the place of honor in the house, and is regarded as the most valuable piece of furniture in the establishment. Among the poorer classes it is customary to buy a very thick coffin. No self-respecting Chinese family—and the Chinese are the most self-respecting of all the nations—will bury a parent until they can do it with more or less Mongolian magnificence. Hence, in China, death by no means implies immediate burial. When a Chinaman dies his neighbors come in and help the women of the family to make the shroud. The body is put in its coffin. Then the funeral ceremonies begin, if there is money enough. If there is not, the coffin is put back in its place of honor until the family finances look up.

The day of the death, or the day after, the relatives not living in the house and the friends come to pay the last duties of respect to the deceased. When the visitors arrive they are shown into a room in which are all the women and children of the establishment. These latter set up a dismal howl, in which the visitors join, or to which they listen sympathetically. When the tympanum of even a Chinese ear begins to ache, the guests are ushered into another apartment, where the men of the house give them tea and refreshment. The refreshment varies according to the means of the family. In the house of the rich it is a dinner. After the visitors have drunk and eaten, they are bowed out by one of the kinsmen of the dead.

A well-conducted Chinese funeral is the most gorgeous sight in Asia. It may seem to us a little tinselly, but that is a mere matter of taste. And I, who make bold to like the Chinese cannot claim that they have a superbundance of taste. At the front of the funeral procession walk the noisy musicless musicians. Then come men (they may be friends, they may be coolies) bearing the insignia of the dignity of the dead, if he had any. Next walk more men carrying figures of animals, idols, umbrellas, and blue and white streamers. After them come men carrying pans of perfume. Just before the coffin walk bonzes, Chinese priests. Over the coffin a canopy is usually carried. The casket is borne by about a score of men. Immediately behind the coffin walk the children of the deceased. The eldest son comes first. He is dressed in canvas and leans heavily upon a stout stick. He is supposed to be too exhausted by grief and fasting to walk without the aid of this staff. The other children and relatives follow this chief mourner. They are clothed in white linen garments. White is the mourning color of the Danes, of the Burmese, and of the Chinese. The women are carried in chairs in the Chinese funeral procession. They sob and wail at intervals and in unison.

When the burying place is reached, the bonzes begin chanting a mass for the dead, and the coffin is put into the tomb. When the coffin is laid in its final position, a large oblong white marble table is placed before the tomb. On the middle of it is set a censer and two vases and two candlesticks, all of as exquisite workmanship as possible. Then they have a paper cremation! Paper figures of men, horses, garments, and a score of other things are burned. They are supposed to undergo a material resurrection, and to be useful to the dead in the Chinese heaven. The tomb is sealed up or closed, and an entertainment concludes the ceremony at the grave. The forms of Chinese tombs vary somewhat according to the province in which they are built, and very much according to the means of the relative who undertakes the expense. With the very poor the coffin is placed upon the ground, earth and lime are packed about it, and a rude grave is formed. With the rich a vault is built in the form of a horseshoe. If the dead was of note or position the decorations of the grave and of the coffin are very elaborate. There are a thousand interesting things to be said about Chinese mourning, about the ceremonies commemorative of the dead, and about the funerals of the Chinese royal family. But they cannot be put into a paragraph or into a column.—Pall Mall Gazette.

CUT OFF FROM CIVILIZATION.

A Family Which Only Hears From the World Twice Yearly.

G. B. Greig, from Fanning Island, was in San Francisco recently. This island is one of a little group that lies in midocean about half way between Honolulu and Samoa, being situated between three and four degrees north of the equator. It is the property of the Greigs, who are Americans. Here members of this family lead an ideal life, apart from all others of their kind, save a hundred natives, who do their work. Once only in six months do they hear from the world, and then a little sailing vessel comes laden with books and provisions and even newspapers six months old. It is always summer in Fanning; always warm enough so that one can swing in a hammock all night with no covering save the clear sky.

"It is not generally known," said Mr. Greig to an Examiner reporter, "that Fanning Island is a British possession. It is the property of our family who work it for copra and guano. It is a coral islet, with a fine lagoon, which has been entered by several warships, American, British and also Japanese. The island has a circumference of about thirty miles. It was annexed to Great Britain in 1859 by Admiral Richards. The place would make a first-class naval coaling station. The proposed cable across the Pacific Ocean, from Australasia to British North America, will probably cross Fanning Island. In that event we will feel quite in the world. What is necessary in the interests of Australasia seems to be a cable from Australia via Fiji, or other islands, to Vancouver, and it is certain that it is possible to lay a cable in an almost direct line, touching entirely on British territory. This line would be a great line in the coming commercial connections between Australia and British North America."

An Imported Farm.

"I once saw," said Bertram Reynolds, of Boston, "an imported farm, the soil as well as the products being absolutely foreign in its surroundings. This was in one of the coldest parts of Manitoba, where I was entertained by a family which had retained its love for milder regions and crops. The bill of fare was necessarily meagre, but some of the vegetables were so bright and green that I could not help asking how they were preserved so well. To my surprise I learned that they were cultivated in a garden patch or a miniature farm, the soil of which had been brought from milder regions so as to insure a fertility not found in the region of ice. The vegetables themselves had been grown from imported seed, and owing to the care and protection that they had had they were a perfect luxury. The expense of conveying the soil in barrels such a long distance would prevent any but comparatively wealthy people from trying the experiment, but my friends had made it a hobby. The only other case of earth-importing that I have met with is that done by the Shah of Persia. The traditions of his country prevent his treading on foreign soil, and when he makes a trip in foreign nations his attendants carry a supply of Persian soil, some of which is placed in his shoes, a practice which accounts for the great inconvenience walking always appears to His Majesty when abroad."—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

MOTHERS AND DAUGHTERS.

A novel scheme to provide bread for the poor was recently tried in Michigan. There were 150 competitors among the women of the city to see who could bake the best loaf. Each contestant to make three loaves, the winner to receive a valuable prize and the bread to be given to the poor. The wife of the Mayor was the winner of the prize.

A Pittsburg woman has invented what she calls a "snore diverter." It is composed of a hood and a section of flexible pipe. When her husband's snores grow unbearable, the hood is lowered over his head and the snore is conducted into the cellar. There hasn't been a rat seen in the house since the diverter was used.

How many different ways can you cook and serve potatoes? Did you ever think of it? Well, just count up, and the very doing so will suggest some method you had perhaps forgotten. When you are through would you believe that there are perhaps 100 recipes you have not even thought of?

The word dolly was originally D'Oyley, the surname of one of the followers of William of Normandy. This Sir Robert D'Oyley was granted certain valuable lands by his King on the condition that each year at the feast of St. Michael he should present his King a linen tablecloth worth three shillings. Naturally, as these cloths were used at the royal banquets, the women of the D'Oyley family did all they could to make them worthy of their exalted use by enriching them with beautiful needlework and the D'Oyley linens became famous.

GOLDEN WYANDOTTES.

A Beauty Breed and Possessing Most of the Good Qualities of the General Purpose Fowl.

The accompanying illustration of Golden Wyandottes, the property of C. J. Daniels, Toronto, Ont., is from life. These birds are winners of many first prizes in Canada, and were also second cockerel and first pullet at Cleveland, O., U.S.A., December 1894. "I have been breeding this variety," writes Mr. Daniels, "for five years, and get more in love with them every year; in my judgment they are not only the beauty breed, but also have more of the good qualities that go to make up the general purpose fowl than any other breed. As layers, the Golden Wyandotte excel all other sitting varieties and equal some of the non-sitting, laying most of their eggs in early fall, winter and early spring, when eggs are scarce and high in price, and the single comb varieties are suffering with their poor frosted combs. The pullets will commence to lay at five months old; they lay a medium size egg, brown in color. As mothers, the hens are very quiet and easily managed, they sit well and take care of their chicks, and in most cases start to lay again when chicks are from six to eight weeks old. The Golden Wyandottes are of good size; the standard weights are: Cockerel, 8½ lbs.; hens, 6½ lbs.; but I find they grow much heavier than that; the young cockerel in cut weighs 9½ lbs., and will still grow. The Golden Wyandottes are very tame and easily kept in range; a four-foot fence is all that is needed; but if given full range will pick up most of their living by hunting and scratching for insects, etc. When dressed they show a fine plump body with clean yellow skin, with very few pin-feathers; their flesh is tender and juicy. A well-fed bird of this variety is fit for table any time after eight or ten weeks of age, filling out and dressing a finer and better carcass than their great rivals—the Plymouth Rocks. For the farmer they bring good profits, in furnishing a large supply of eggs, and as market fowls they also yield a good price, weighing very heavy for their size. A Golden Wyandotte will surprise everyone with its weight, and mating early as they do, there is more profit in them as early market chicks. For the fanciers, no variety can furnish a more beautiful plumage, for who can conceive of a more pleasing combination than a pure, clear nut-brown, laced with a greenish-black?"—Farmers' Advocate.

Cream for Churning.

The warmer the cream is up to 70 deg., the more quickly will it churn and the softer will be the butter. The lower the temperature at which butter will come in from 40 to 60 minutes, the firmer will the butter be. The right temperature for churning each churner must find out for himself. From 56 to 60 deg. F. summer will be a fair range for most cream. The temperature of the churn and room has quite a marked influence on the time required to churn. The warmer the room, other things being equal, the more quickly will the cream churn must be at about that temperature of the churn. To churn at 58 deg., the churn must be at about that temperature when the cream is put in. In nearly every case the temperature rises after churning for some time, due to friction. The larger the churn, or the smaller the amount of cream to be churned, the more quickly will the churning be finished. A box or barrel churn without dashers of any kind ought not to be filled much over one-third full. As to the ripeness of the cream, by raising the temperature a few degrees sweet cream may be churned in about the same time as ripe or sour cream. The loss of butter will be considerable, as sweet cream to be effectually churned requires a temperature of from 50 to 55 deg., and one to one and one-half hours to churn. Cream from strippers' milk usually takes a longer time to churn than that from fresh cows. It will pay to take a little more time at the churning and have it completely churned and the butter firm and granular when lifted from the churn. Quick churning and soft butter nearly always go together.

GARDEN SEED SOWER.

A Home-Made Article That can Easily be Made and That Will do Efficient Work

A machine for sowing seed may be made by cutting a wheel from a heavy smooth board and fasten to its center a lid from a 6lb lard pail with holes around the rim. The size and frequency of the holes should be regulated by the size or distance of the seed to be planted. Bore a hole through the lid and wheel for a spindle. Fasten the wooden wheel securely to the spindle, but leave the lid so that it may be removed. Bore holes in the ends of two strips of wood 3 ft long and 2 in wide so that the ends will work around the spindle as with a wheelbarrow. A round stick through the opposite ends will answer as handles. To make the frame-work firm, nail two blocks between the wheel and handle. The wooden wheel should be 2 in larger than the lid and should have a groove 1-8 in deep cut around the side into which the lid should fit. A slot cut in the edge of the wheel extending 2 in under the edge of the lid and neatly fitted with a peg makes a place for refilling the seed. A number of lids may be made with holes, fine or coarse, according to the seed to be planted. The seed should always be covered with a rake. When accurately made, this seeder will do efficient work and save much time and backache at hand drilling or a high price paid for a more pretentious seeder.—Farm and Home.

SAMUEL GOODYEAR.

The Man Who Made the Rubber Business a Vast and Growing Industry.

"Thousands of Cincinnatians who wear rubber overshoes and other things made of rubber know little of the ups and downs of the man who devoted his lifetime, and was ridiculed all the while, to perfecting, or discovering, as it were, the processes by which vulcanized rubber might be produced," said John G. Stetson, a New York rubber dealer, at the Grand yesterday evening. Samuel Goodyear devoted his life to perfecting a process whereby he might manufacture rubber shoes that would stand the heat and cold. He was characterized as a crank—made fun of and ridiculed by the very men who afterwards made a fortune out of his discoveries or inventions. Goodyear, I believe, was a Philadelphian, and his curiosity was aroused by a life-preserver which he bought. That was away back in the thirtie,s and hundreds of thousand of dollars had been sunk by different men in trying to perfect some process by which rubber could be utilized to a commercial advantage.

"I believe that Goodyear's attention was first attracted to the profits of rubber by the success of the India rubber companies. He began a series of experiments, sought capital in Philadelphia, and wound up his first experiment by being imprisoned for debt. He got out, borrowed some money and went ahead, and finally landed in New York, where he pushed along, but the financial crisis of 1837 spoiled his calculations, and after this we find him experimenting at the old abandoned rubber works on Staten Island. Here he was regarded as half-crazy, but did not yield, and sacrificed almost everything in the interest of his work—his family nearly starving, but his success was due to an accident in the darkest days of his life. But success was temporary, and he again had to look for capital. He triumphed, and rubber men all know the honors were thrust on him by some countries after his achievements, which made him one of the famous inventors of his country—for we all know what a factor vulcanized rubber is—how it is utilized in the manufacture of goods of everyday use.

"The rubber goods business of this country is simply enormous, and it is increasing many fold. Goodyear died in the sixties, disappointed and unhonored by his country, leaving his family insolvent, and Congress, after his death, declined to extent a patent for the benefit of his family. He received the ribbon of the Legion of Honor from France and a medal in London, but his own country did not appreciate his services. The rubber business of the United States alone amounts to millions annually."—Cincinnati Commercial-Gazette.

A Weak Bell.

The following anecdote by Dr. Lyman Beecher was told by a former student of Lane seminary, present at the time. Even now he cannot refer to it without laughter.

There had been an unusual number of cases of tardiness in chapel attendance, and the blame was laid upon the chapel bell. Dr. Beecher waxed sarcastic over the frequent recurrence of this excuse, until one morning the students assembled as usual, found the service unaccountably delayed. At last Dr. Beecher, in dressing gown and slippers, with hair like the quills upon the "fretful porcupine," came jerkily down the aisle, mounted the platform and delivered himself of the following explanation:

"Didn't hear the old bell. Makes no more noise than a lamb's tail rung in a fur cap. Let us pray."—Youth's Companion.

A Beneficial Lesson.

The habits of practical economy forced on the people of this country by the hard times will survive when prosperity comes again. Many people have learned to make a dollar go as far as they used to find two able to go, because the dollar was the only one they had, and it had to do. When they are more fortunate, and have two dollars where they now have one, it is not likely that they will continue to live on the one, but a large part of the other will be put by.—Fort Worth (Tex.) Gazette.

EASTERDAY NOVELTIES.

IT IS THE THING TO GIVE PRESENTS AND SOUVENIRS.

Eggs Decorated With Every Possible Device—The Proper Thing for a Lover to Give to His Sweetheart—Pretty Confections.

Eggs! fresh eggs! Easter eggs! all kinds of eggs, from the primitive affair dyed by boiling in a piece of colored calico to the gold egg with a diamond clasp, my lady's bonbonniere.

Eggs are, as usual, the feature of the Easter cards and souvenirs. There are the pretty, dainty ones, with flowers and ribbons; the big decorated ostrich eggs; the queer ones, with great Japanese-looking spiders crawling over them; the amusing ones, with faces grotesque enough to haunt one's dreams, a hideous laughing old woman, a sanctimonious young man, hand-painted and adorned with real hair. Then come two downy ducks laboring under the weight of Easter greetings, painted on a large egg.

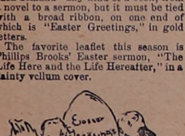
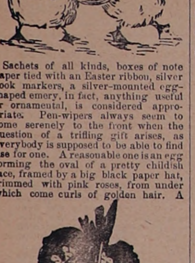
Never has the sale of cards been so large, in spite of the fact that gifts of all kinds are more popular than ever, and suitable books have never been in such demand—any kind of a book, from a novel to a sermon, but it must be tied with a broad ribbon, on one end of which is "Easter Greetings," in gold letters.

The favorite leaflet this season is Phillips Brooks' Easter sermon, "The Life Here and the Life Hereafter," in a dainty vellum cover.



Sachets of all kinds, boxes of note paper tied with an Easter ribbon, silver book markers, a silver-mounted egg-shaped emery, in fact, anything useful or ornamental, is considered appropriate. Pen-wipers always seem to come serenely to the front when the question of a trifling gift arises, as everybody is supposed to be able to find use for one. A reasonable one is an egg forming the oval of a pretty childish face, framed by a big black paper hat, trimmed with pink roses, from under which come curls of golden hair. A deep collar of white lays over a deeper frill of black, edged with pink, beneath which are concealed the chamois leaves for cleaning the pen. Another dainty one is a heart-shaped piece of white kid, tinted violet around the edge, and a bunch of violets fastened to it by a pin of two interlaced silver hearts.



All these, of course, are mere friendly gifts, but now comes the question,

"What shall a lover give to his sweetheart?" Something worthy he wants, something which costs a goodly sum. The really proper thing is a white kid or vellum prayer book with simple gold covers, and her monogram in gold in the center. To this may be added a gold marker consisting of a heart, anchor, and cross enameled in dark blue. Another offering of love is a bonbonniere made of a bloodstone in the form of an egg and overlaid with gold. Through the center is a band of white enamel, on which are the words "Croit d'Amour."

A watch fob with a small white enamel egg covered with forget-me-nots in color is one of the season's novelties. One jeweler put pins, etc., into dainty egg-shaped boxes of white kid lined with white satin.

"What shall a girl give to her fiance?" Alas! there seems to be no answer to that side of the question. So she must draw upon her imagination and produce something new.

Flowers seem to blossom in richer profusion this year than ever before, and blustering old March certainly has done his best this time. The advantage of sending potted plants which give pleasure for an indefinite time is at last fully recognized, and the pink, red, and white sweet-smelling azalia is first favorite. The silversmiths have added the touch of perfection to this offering in the way of silver-plated flower pots to cover up the unsightly redness. They come in various designs, but unfortunately only in small sizes.

The confectioners make as much preparation for the Easter trade as for that of the Christmas holidays, so the children are not forgotten. Candy boxes come in every shape imaginable, from a demure-looking nun filled with chocolates to a plump goose full of gumdrops; from a white cross encircled with violets to a bright red and yellow tulip.

There are eggs of every description, chocolate eggs and sugar eggs, to be eaten; eggs of glass, satin, straw and paper to be filled with sweets Perhaps the most artistic of these little boxes are the china ones with raised figures of cupids in delicate colors.

Fancy baskets are also used in which to store store the bonbons. Most of these are elaborately trimmed with flowers and ribbon. A particularly striking one has a handle made of twisted thorn branches tied with a big bow of violet ribbon. The body of the basket is formed by two pair of doves' wings. Apparently filling the basket are bunches of chrysanthemums, which nearly conceal the silk bag designed to hold the bonbons.

DIPHTHERIA ANTI-TOXINE.

How the New Remedy for This Disease Was Discovered.

A number of series of experimental observations regarding the nature and causation of diphtheria preceded the discovery of the new remedy. These began with the discovery of the diphtheria bacillus by Klebs in 1883. In the folowing year, 1884, the organisms described by Klebs were more carefully studied by Loeffler, were cultivated outside the living body, and diphtheria, or a disease resembling it, was reproduced in animals by inoculating them with the cultures of this germ. Loeffler was unable, however, to reproduce the various forms of paralysis which frequently follow diphtheria, but Roux and Yersin, in Paris, in 1888, succeeded in reproducing artificially, by the inoculation of animals with cultures of the diphtheria bacillus, a perfectly characteristic diphtheretic paralysis, and they were also successful in separating from the cultures of this organism a poison (the diphtheria toxine) with which they also produced paralysis in animals. Then Behring and Kitasato, in Berlin, found that by the inoculation of animals with the poison obtained from cultures of the diphtheria bacillus, they could be gradually rendered extraordinary insusceptible to both the poison and the diphtheria bacilli themselves. They further showed that this insusceptibility or immunity was due to the formation and presence in the blood of some substance which it has not been possible to separate chemically, and which is known as the diphtheria anti-toxine, or, from its wonderful action, the curative serum. Then followed experiments by Behring, Ehrlich and other observers in Germany, and Roux in Paris, experiments designed to make this discovery practically available for the prevention and treatment of diphtheria in the human being.

The first important results of these experiments were published in the early part of last year, and they showed a striking diminution in the mortality, in a series of cases of diphtheria subjected to the new treatment. The results obtained in these first cases have been more than confirmed by subsequent experiences in the treatment of this disease.—McClure's Magazine.

TO PRESERVE BUTTER.

DIFFERENT METHODS THAT HAVE BEEN ADOPTED.

A Process by Which Butter Can be Kept Absolutely Pure for a Month—A Cryosolein Solution is the Best Known Preservative.

No luxury of the table comes nearer to being an absolute necessity than butter. The reasons why it is so often poor, and the means for keeping it in good condition, are of general public interest. We translate the following article, which treats these points from the standpoint of recent science, from La Nature:

Butter, on exposure for some time to the open air, becomes rancid. Rancid butter is acid and has a disagreeable odor, due to the saponification of the glycerids and volatile acids. The rancidity of butter is due to several causes: 1st, the action of the oxygen of the air, in the presence of light, which saponifies the fat matter and sets free some of its elements, which are seized upon in their turn and transformed into divers oxidized products; 2nd, the action of microscopic organisms (microbes and cryptogams) . . . that saponify the butter just as the oxygen and light do. Under the influence of ferments, the butter can undergo lactic or butyric fermentation, especially when it contains much of the casein of the milk. Figs. 1 and 2 show the microbes and the microscopic vegetables that determine the different alterations of butter.

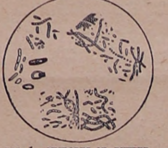


FIG. 1. MICROBES OF BUTTER.

Different methods have been proposed for the preservation of butter. The most in use consists in salting the butter with four to eight per cent., by weight, of white salt, dry and finely pulverized, and packing it in earthen or metal vessels so as to leave no empty space, covering it with a piece of linen on which a layer of salt is placed, and then sealing with a sheet of parchment.

In Scotland and in England, a mixture of two parts of salt, one of saltpetre, and one of sugar is used for salting. This mixture, which was advised by Anderson in 1705, is used in the proportion of six per cent. by weight. It gives a very sweet flavor.

Brion packs the butter in tin boxes with water slightly acidulated with tartaric acid and bicarbonate of soda. The box is then soldered. It is easy to see that in this method the preserving agent is carbonic acid, which is produced little by little and impregnates the butter uniformly. This method has suggested others founded on the same principle. One of the following mixtures is added to the butter: 1. Bicarbonate of ammonia and tartaric acid. 2. Bicarbonate of ammonia and acid phosphate of ammonia. 3. Bicarbonate of soda and phosphoric acid. 4. Bicarbonate of ammonia and phosphoric acid. 5. Bicarbonate of soda or of ammonia and acid lactate of lime or acid sulphate of potash.

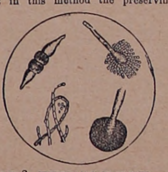

FIG. 2—CRYPTOGAMS OF BUTTER,

The preservation of butter may be made certain by using antiseptics such as salicylic acid, boric acid, boroglyceric acid, formic acid, formic aldehyde, or aseptol. Unfortunately all these drugs communicate to the butter a peculiar taste that betrays their presence. Other methods seek to prevent the action of the air and micro-organisms by the use of a vacuum, of carbonic acid under pressure, of wrapping in an impermeable antiseptic tissue, or of electric wrapping (the galvanoplastic deposit of a metal on the surface of the rolls of butter). One of the best methods consists in keeping the butter at a temperature near two degrees below zero (about 28° Fahr.) in an atmosphere of carbonic acid if possible. Such are the methods now at the service of the butter industry to assure the preservation of its products.

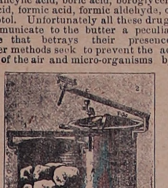

Fig. 3.—Cylinder Containing Lumps of Butter; No. 1, Section; No. 2, Outside View.

We have studied this problem for nearly five years. After many investigations we believe that we had found the wished-for solution in the use of carbonic acid under pressure, for which we took out a patent in 1890. Unfortunately, the working was not practicable; the cans were too heavy, the manipulations too complicated, and the material too bulky. Besides—one must confess one's failures—the butter assumed in the carbonic gas an acid taste hard to remove by washing. We had abandoned these researches, over which so much time had been spent, without reaching any valuable result, when we took them up again at the beginning of the year 1894 after our success in the preservation of milk by compressed oxygen.

Oxygen will not preserve butter; but we have experimented with all inoffensive antiseptics that have no taste and odor and that can be removed from the butter after the preserving action has once been exerted. We have obtained excellent results with the substance called in commerce "crysolein." According to information regarding this product collected for our "Dictionary of Industrial Chemistry," it is a mixture of ethers (camphoric and citric). Crysolein is a colorless liquid slightly soluble in water.

The butter is churned with a one half per cent. solution of crysolein, in the churn shown in Fig. 4, No. 3; the lumps taken from this apparatus are placed in a large cylinder a, closed by a cover b (Fig. 3, No. 2). When this cylinder is full the cover is put on and kept in place with the lever c, which is lowered; hermetical sealing is assured by an asbestos joint, pressed by the edges of the cover and the screw d. This done, crysolein solution is poured in by the tube e, after opening the air-vent f. When the vessel is full, e and f are closed, and the vessel is placed in a cool spot, such as a cellar. Butter so treated can be kept a month without change. Before delivery to customers, the butter is taken from the vessel, churned with fresh water, and molded into pats. For sending it to a distance, cans like those seen at Fig. 4, No. 3, are used.

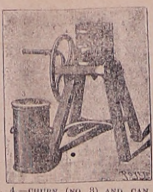

FIG. 4.—CHURN (NO. 3) AND CAN FOR SENDING TO A DISTANCE (NO. 4).

Butter may be kept in summer in the same way. It is easy then to buy it at the season when it is cheap and to preserve it in the cylinders till it is dear.

Salt for Stock.

We are surprised, when passing through the country, to find so few farmers who use rock salt for their stock. Whenever we find a man who uses it he always speaks of it in the highest terms. The writer can say from experience that there is no other way of salting stock nearly so satisfactory in every way as by the use of the rock.

It is a settled fact that stock salted once a week take too much when given to them, which has the effects of wasting much nutrition in the animal which the system requires, and before the next salting day comes round ill-effects are caused in the system by the lack of salt. This being the case, the farmer who depends upon weekly salting, be he even so regular, cannot fail to lose milk from his cows and flesh from his steers and other fattening stock. Some resort to the plan of putting a little salt into the food every day or two. Now, this is all chance work, and cannot give the best results, as the animal itself is the only proper judge of how much to take, and will never take too much or too little when given free access to it. Now, when stables have been fitted up with salt boxes in the stalls, the supply can be kept constantly before them by using either barrel or rock salt—the former having to be supplied every few days, while a four or five pound lump will last for weeks. Another advantage in using rock salt is that it can be thrown into an ordinary manger and not interfere with the food. The animals can lick at it as desired, and no evil results or waste in food or salt can follow. Then, again, for field salting in the summer, a lump can be thrown on the ground, exposed to sun and rain, without loss or other objection, while when barrel salt is used the box will be half the time empty, and irregular salting results.

For the Venus of Milo.

The administrative authorities of the National Museum of France were greatly flurried a few days ago by the receipt of a letter addressed in English to "the statue of Venus de Milo in the Galleries of the Louvre." The gallant and fervid imaginations of the administrative authorities at once concluded that the missive contained some wild profession of admiration for the fair statue, sent by some eccentric poet or madman. Curiosity was aroused to a high pitch, but as the authorities had no precedent to guide them, and as no such situation had been foreseen by the code of rules of the museum, the letter at first remained unopened. At length, however, the curator of the Louvre decided that it was his paternal duty to open the letter, the more so because Venus of Milo has no arms and consequently cannot open her own correspondence.

The letter was opened, and the curator was surprised, and perhaps disappointed, to find instead of a billet doux a number of coupons cut from the bill-heads of an English commercial house in question stated on the coupons that for twenty-five of them any person who asked would receive a photograph of the Venus of Milo, and that sixty of them would obtain for the sender a richly-framed photograph of the same statue. A little girl, misunderstanding the indications given, had addressed her letter to the statue itself, and, what is worse, had only put one penny stamp on the envelope. The Louvre authorities are gratified to find that Venus of Milo has not been carrying on a clandestine correspondence, as was at first feared.—New York Herald.

Cheap Lodgings for a Prince.

Accidentally a bill of an inn at Passeier, Tyrol, was discovered among the papers of a recently deceased member of the official household of Emperor William I. which gives an idea of the cost of living at that time. In 1851 William, then Prince of Prussia, with a suite of six companions stopped at the inn. The lodging for the company amounted to 12 kreuzer—5 cents! The breakfast coffee was more expensive, however, 6 kreuzer for each cup, i.e., two and one half cents. A dish of milk was 1 cent: 3 eggs for 1 cent. The dinner at the inn consisting of soup, meat, roast, fruit, preserves and wine, cost 27 kreuzer each, or less than 11 cents apiece. The total expense of lodging, breakfast and dinner for the party amounted to two florins and twenty-five kreuzer, or about ninety cents!

Diagnosis by Telephone.

The beneficent uses of the telephone are not as yet fully understood. The other night young Smythe awoke about 3 a.m. with an excruciating pain in his stomach. The more he squirmed the worse he grew. Finally the terrible thought flashed upon him that he had been poisoned. In a moment he dashed out of bed, down stairs to the telephone, and demanded to be switched on to his physician's number without delay.

"For Heaven's sake, Doctor, come at once! I'm poisoned!"

The M.D., who had also crawled out of bed to answer the summons, growled back, "What makes you think so?"

"Frightful pain—awful cramps—inside's on fire—hurry up, or I'm a dead man!"

"Humph! Does—er—does your stomach make any noise?"

"Yes; kind of growls—must be arsenic, or something."

"Growls, eh? Just put the 'phone against the pit of your stomach. Ah! I thought so—you've been to the French hospital fete this evening, haven't you?"

"Yes, sir."

"Exactly. You're suffering from a general fermentation of lemonade, crab salad, fruit cake, pickled oysters, and Roman punch. You're all right. Just take a little peppermint and ginger, then go to bed, and grin it through."—San Francisco Examiner.

Robespierre's Autograph.

At a sale of autographs at the Rue Drouot the one that fetched the highest price—100 francs—was written evidently by a secretary, and signed "Robespierre." It is dated August 26, 179[illegible], and addressed to Bouchotte, a commissioner to the army on the Rhine.

ECONOMY IN KEEPING SWINE.

How the Labor in the Care of a Large Herd May be Reduced to a Minimum.

The plan below shows how the labor in the care of a large herd of swine may be reduced to a minimum. This piggery is 20x30 ft. and divided into four distinct sets of compartments. Fig. 1 is an inside view with a portion of the roof removed to show the interior of the passage which extends lengthwise through the center. This passage or hall, as will be seen by Fig. 2, is 4 ft. wide and 30 ft. long, closed at each end by a gate. Spouts opening into it communicate with the feed troughs and a gate opens into it from each pen. Beneath the roof are lofts for the storage of grain and other feed, to which access is had by doors hinged on the lower side. In the covered portion of the hall way are also convenient hooks for hanging small tools. The roof extends over a section of 14 ft. in which are the sleeping and nesting quarters, each 7x8 ft. The sides are covered horizontal boards. Between the lower with one and the plank floor is left a space an inch wide for drainage, which is caught in a trough extending along each side, directly under the edge of the flooring. Under the lower end of each trough is an old hogshead sunk in the ground for the storage of the liquid manure. A gate opens from one of the open pens into a yard. Such a structure is particularly well adapted for breeding sows and their young.

THE COMING SEED-TIME.

Some Practical Hints on a Variety of Themes.

The horse blanket in the stable is as valuable as when in use while the horse is at service. It is not the wetting of the horse that causes it to take cold, but the drying, or evaporation of the moisture, which takes away the animal heat rapidly, and especially if a current of air flows through the stable. Rub the horse well and then keep the blanket on him until he is thoroughly dry, when it may then be removed if desirable.

When the trees bloom and the fruit is first formed, the grower can easily form an opinion in regard to picking off a portion, should the tree show indications of being well laden. It is better to pick off the fruit not desired when it is very small, so as to tax the vitality of the tree as little as possible. It will enable the tree to grow larger and beter fruit by thinning out should there be appearance of heavy bearing, and thus avoid propping the limbs later on.

Spraying should begin as early as the season permits, and it should be done as often as the opportunity presents for so doing.

To destroy bugs in seed peas put the peas in water, and the bugs and injured peas will rise to the surface. Skim them off and destroy them. Pour off the water and spread the peas to dry. Peas that have been attacked by weevil should not be used for seed not only because such seed may not germinate, but also because more weevil will be produced to attack the crop.

Give more air in the hotbed. Plants that have made rapid growth may be transplanted to cold frames, to allow them more room and mave them hardy and stocky. Water hot-bed plants carefully, so as not to allow too much.

Half a century ago a peach orchard was permanent on the farm, and was expected to last for many years. At the present day there is a liability of the trees dying off at any time, some orchards not remaining over three years. Whether the climate is unfavorable or the budded varieties will not endure the same treatment as those that come from the seed is a question to be considered, but it is only from the budded varieties that the best peaches are obtained.

Nearly all who seek pure breeds of poultry inquire, "Which breed produces the best layers?" The fact is there is not the difference of a dozen eggs in a year between the best and the least, but there is a great difference in the hardiness of breeds. The best layers are not the hardiest.

When planting peas and using the dwarf varieties for an early supply, the later crop may be planted at the same time, but of standard varieites. The latter may require sticks or supports, but they produce more pickings. The dwarf kinds seldom give more than one or two pickings, hence they may be planted at intervals to provide a supply until the tall varieties come into bearing.

Requisite Beauty.

Grenaille, a French author, has written a large and very scientific book on female beauty, and endows his idea of female loveliness with the following attributes: "Youth, medium stature, chestnut-brown hair, symmetry of limb, a delicate skin, revealing the blue veins, rosy complexion, a smooth, serene brow, uniformly arched temples, narrow eyebrows which do not meet, eloquent dark-brown eyes, a winsome smile, cherry-lips, a small mouth, small milk-white teeth, a sweet breath, a soft agreeable voice, a chin which does not protrude and is graced by a dimple, small rosy ears, a slender throat of ivory whiteness, small, soft, white hands, nicely tapering fingers, graceful gestures, an even dignified walk, shining finger nails smooth and well curved, an even, pleasant temperament, good taste in dress, superficial education, small, pretty feet and attentive demeanor towards others." "Come young man," says The New York Commercial Advertiser, "think over your list of acquaintances and double which one of the girls comes nearest to this description."

Joining Metal and Pottery.

By a process recently discovered a metal handle can be readily put on a porcelain or earthenware pot. The method is as follows:—The glaze on the pottery ought not to be applied at the part where a metallic joint is wanted or has to be ground off. The unglazed surface is rubbed in with graphite and can be plated by the ordinary electro-galvanic process. This metallic covering can be permanently joined to other metallic parts, handles, tubes, etc., by soldering, and such a joint will wear very well. Metal handles of ornamental design can be firmly attached to crockery and even to fine porcelain.

A FRIEND OF THE LITTLE ONES.

Robert B. English, Son of John English, Proprietor of the Lakefield Cooperage, a Victim of Nervousness and Fits.

A MOST AGGRAVATED CASE THAT DOCTORS COULD NOT CURE

When Hope Was Abandoned South American Nervine Effected a Complete Cure—His Parents Are Never Done Speaking of This Great Remedy.

ROBERT B. ENGLISH, LAKEFIELD, ONT.

The anxiety that comes to parents, because of the sickness of their children is one of the most severe trials of life. Here is the case of Robert B. English, son of John English, proprietor of the well known cooperage factory, at Lakefield, Ont. Five years ago this youth suffered from a severe attack of La Grippe, leaving him a perfect wreck. A result of this extreme weakness was an attack of nervous troubles, developing into some of their most trying and unpleasant ways. The youth was taken with severe twitchings, and following these would come fits that would rack the system two and three times every week. His parents did everything that a loving father and mother could possibly do. The highest medical skill was enlisted, but in the end the doctors explained to the parents that the boy's recovery was impossible. Medicine to no end had been poured into the boy's system and no relief came. Certain local circumstances influenced the parents to make a trial of South American Nervine. This medicine had only been taken a short time when the fits disappeared and the nervous twitchings gradually lessened. Encouraged by these results, the medicine was continued until six bottles were taken. Then no more was required for, as the father said, the boy was completely cured and stands to-day an object lesson of what Nervine can do in cases of extreme Nervous troubles. It is not surprising that these parents could never cease speaking in glowing terms of this great remedy. It is a great remedy, because it is based on a scientific principle that makes a cure effective in all cases. The nerve centers are located at the base of the brain and in the vicinity of the spinal cord. The secret of Nervine is that it commences its work at these points. No time is lost giving a little temporary ease. But the life-giving center refreshened, built up and strengthened to the utmost, and the whole system is invigorated. The common sense character of this method is plain to every one—lettered or unlettered, simple or wise. It is for this reason that it is to be said of Nervine, not that it cures some cases, but that it never fails in any case.

N.B. TRADE MARK THE VARNISHED BOARD ON WHICH THE GOODS ARE WRAPPED.

Priestley's BLACK DRESS FABRICS

"Are they not exquisite in their soft richness?" is the constant remark of ladies touching Priestley's famous black dress goods. And that is the truth, but it is not the whole description, for they have a character for refinement, for wearing and draping quality, which no other dress goods can lay claim to. The Priestley's appear to have gathered up all their excellences, and concentrated them in "Eudora," the latest black dress fabric they have given to the world. In every respect equal to the famous Henriettas, it surpasses them in extra width, and weight, and in dust-repelling quality. It is wrapped on "The Varnished Board" and Priestley's name is stamped on every five yards. 30
